First, it empowers the Judge of the Court to order a ship to be duly appraised and sold "whenever it appears desirable, either from the nature of the property captured, the probable length of the proceedings, or any other sufficient cause," that the ship, goods, &c., should "be sold" (sec. 24.) On the other hand, it also empowered the Judge to direct the ship or goods to be delivered up to the claimant, "upon his giving good and sufficient security to pay the captor the appraised value thereof, in case the same should be adjudged lawful prize (sec. 25.)

Secondly, the Statute, apart from these clauses, directly empowered the Admiralty (or First Prize) Court to sell after condemnation (sec. 26).

The power of selling the ship after condemnation in the Admiralty (or First Prize) Court, was very frequently exercised here, at the instance of the captor, both during the last war and during former wars. (See Report of Registrar of Admiralty, to the "Franciska," 10 Moore's Privy Council Reports, p. 75, &c.)

I am not aware whether the United States have passed (probably they have) a similar Prize Act, at the breaking out of the war in which they are now engaged. At all events, the exercise of such an abstract power of sale cannot be denied by Her Majesty's Government to the proper authorities of the United States.

Mr. Stuart should obtain a copy of the American Prize Act or Proclamation, and observe whether it contains clauses similar to those referred to in the British Act, and which Act, for the convenience of Mr. Stuart, should, I think, be forwarded to him.

---

* Mr. Stuart, No. 324, October 31; No. 309, October 23; No. 297, October 17, 1862; to Mr. Stuart, No. 180, November 5, 1862.

1862

To a certain extent Mr. Stuart must be guided by the terms of the American instrument; but he may be properly instructed to press that the claimant ought to be preferred as a purchaser if it be found necessary to sell the ship pendente lite, and that the necessity contemplated as justifying the sale at this stage of the case is, clearly and unquestionably, not the necessity of the belligerent State to supply her naval marine, but a necessity arising from the condition of the ship itself, namely, that it is becoming lessened in value or worsened in condition by remaining in the custody of the Marshal of the Court.

Upon this principle is founded a well-known practice of Admiralty Courts, both in their civil and prize jurisdiction, to order a sale of "perishable" commodities, a practice referred to as having been abused (though the fact is not clear) in these papers.

But as to the sale after condemnation in the Admiralty (or First Prize) Court, Mr. Stuart should be instructed to require that a sale, if then ordered by the Court, should be conducted at a public auction, after due notice and advertisements, at which sale, of course, all persons, including the claimant, would be at liberty to attend, and to bid for and purchase the ship.

This a matter of plain justice to the claimant or owner of the captured vessel, and is in accordance equally, I believe, with the American and British practice during former wars.

It is hardly necessary to state that the proceeds of the sale must be paid into Court, to abide the issue of the decision of the Court of Appeal.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 277.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 18.)

BRAZIL.

Proceedings of Treasury at Bahia against two British commercial firms.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 17, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bahia (No. 17), inclosing a correspondence which has passed between himself, the President of the Province, and Her Majesty's Legation at Rio de Janeiro, on the subject of the proceedings of the authorities of the Treasury at Bahia against two British commercial firms in that city, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the merits of the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That the answer of Mr. Christie, if any was sent, to Her Majesty's Consul at Bahia, does not appear in these papers.

That upon the papers before me, I am humbly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government should instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Rio de Janeiro to support Her Majesty's Consul at Bahia in remonstrating on these proceedings of the Brazilian Government.

The distinction is clear and important between a privilege of priority of payment claimed by the State in fiscal matters, such as imposts and dues, and a priority claimed in ordinary commercial transactions, where the State has gone into the market and acted as a merchant.

This point in the abstract should be strongly pressed upon the Brazilian Government, as well as the severe practical hardship and injustice which certainly appears to have been the consequence of the exercise of this alleged privilege, both to the English firms and to their creditors.

It would appear to be more than doubtful whether the municipal Brazilian law, as it at present stands, warrants any such pretension: if it does not, the injury inflicted has been wholly indefensible; but if it does, the existence of a law not only so unjust in itself but so unjust to foreign merchants, so contrary to general commercial usage, appears to me to furnish matter for well-founded complaint and remonstrance.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 278.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 18.)

UNITED STATES.

Recruiting in England for United States' army.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 18, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit the accompanying letter from Mr. Edwards, dated the 17th November instant, stating that recruiting is being carried on in this country for the United States' army, and to request that I would take this letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon at my earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there can be no doubt that if any of Her Majesty's subjects enlist in the military service of either of the American belligerents, or if any person procure any of Her Majesty's subjects to enlist in that service, they are guilty of a misdemeanour, and punishable by fine or imprisonment (59 Geo. III, cap. 69, sec. 2), and on evidence being given substantiating the averments contained in the letter of Mr. Edwards, the young man, formerly of the 20th Middlesex Volunteers, and the person who paid him the bounty-money, would be so punishable.

I would, however, humbly submit to your Lordship that the individual instance is per se of little moment comparatively with its relative importance as evincing that a practice has begun in this country calculated seriously to increase the difficulties already incident to the observance of neutrality by Her Majesty's Government.

It cannot be reasonably doubted that this enlistment of Her Majesty's subjects has been set on foot with the sanction of the Government of the United States, and it would seem to me proper that an immediate communication upon the subject should be made by Her Majesty's Government to the Representative of the United States in this country.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 279.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 21.)

UNITED STATES.

Liability of foreigners to conscription in Confederate States since the passing of the new Conscript Act.

My Lord, Temple, November 19, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 307, October 22, 1862), respecting the treatment to which British subjects have been exposed, in the Confederate States, since the passing of the new Conscript Act, and to request that we would take into our consideration the letter of the Confederate Secretary of War to Mr. Acting Consul Magee of the 16th of August (Inclosure 5), and report to your Lordship our opinion upon the doctrine therein maintained that foreigners domiciled in the Confederate States, but who are not naturalized, are liable to the conscription.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to our former opinion that foreigners permanently residing, but not naturalized, in a State, are entitled to the option of leaving that State in the event of new laws being passed in it which affect their status and alter the obligations which they contracted at the time when they became domiciled in it.

We think that it is competent to the Government of the Confederate States to include British subjects permanently resident in those States in the conscription, if they refuse the option duly tendered to them of leaving the country within a reasonable time and with reasonable opportunities of compliance, but not otherwise.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1862

No. 280.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 21.)

SPAIN.

Complaint of Messrs. Janvrin, Grassie, and De Lisle of proceedings of authorities at Ponce towards the "Voyager." Case of the "A and A."

Doctors' Commons, November 21, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 15th September last* relative to the proceedings of the Spanish authorities at Ponce in the case of the wrecked British vessel "A and A," and their subsequent interference with the barque "Voyager," which had been chartered to convey the cargo of the "A and A" to England, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Janvrin, Grassie, and De Lisle, complaining, on behalf of the owners of the "Voyager," of the proceedings of the Spanish authorities at Ponce towards that vessel, and requesting the assistance of Her Majesty's Government towards obtaining compensation for her alleged unjust and arbitrary detention.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the accompanying letter into consideration, together with the despatches from Mr. Consul Cowper on this subject (Nos. 18 and 19), and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether the case, as stated by Messrs. Janvin and Co., would justify the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the owners.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That it is not clear to me on these papers that the underwriters in the case of the "Voyager" will have to pay 700*l.* penalty, and 4*l.* a-day demurrage.

There appears, apart from the interference of the Spanish authority, to have been a dispute between the master of the "A and A," and the owner of the cargo saved from that vessel; and that the latter did not desire this cargo to be transferred to the "Voyager," and set in motion the authorities at Ponce.

I am of opinion that the question as to whether the master of the "A and A," or the owner of the saved cargo, had a right to make this covenant with the "Voyager," is not a matter which calls for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, but is a question of mixed fact and law to be decided, if necessary, by proper legal authority between the parties.

But referring to my former Report, I venture to repeat my humble advice that this system of judicial interference on the part of the authorities at Ponce with British vessels, should be made, on the grounds mentioned in that Report, the subject of remonstrance with the Spanish Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 281.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 24.)

UNITED STATES.

Claim of owners of American ship "Daring," for detention of a shipment of saltpetre at Calcutta.

Temple, November 22, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd October ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 1st and 29th of August,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further letter from Mr. Adams, the United States' Minister at this Court, representing that the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to grant compensation to the owners of the "Daring," on account of the detention of that vessel, when laden with saltpetre at Calcutta, was at variance with the previous practice of the British Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter from Mr. Adams stating that the views expressed by him were approved by the Government of the United States; and to request that we would be good enough again to take this case into our consideration, with reference to the correspondence inclosed therewith, which passed on this subject in 1855 and 1856, and inform your Lordship whether we saw any reason to modify the opinion conveyed in our former Reports.

---

* Page 224.

† Pages 192 and 210.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, aud have the honour to report—

That the advice which the Law Officers had the honour to tender to Her Majesty's Government in their Reports of the 1st and 29th August last will not be found, upon examination, to be in conflict with the advice contained in the Reports of their predecessors in office, upon which the note of the Earl of Clarendon to Mr. Dallas of the 15th of May, 1856, was founded. That advice and reports, at the period of the breaking out of the Russian war, related to the prohibition of the export of munitions of war from Great Britain, under the provisions of the Customs Act; that is, Sections 149 and 150 of 16 & 17 Vict., cap. 107, which are as follows:—

Section 149. "The time at which any goods shall be shipped on board any export ship shall be deemed to be the time of exportation of such goods, and the time of the last clearance of any ship shall be deemed to be the time of departure of such ship."

Section 150. "The following goods may, by Proclamation or Order in Council, be prohibited either to be exported or carried coastwise:—Arms, ammunition and gunpowder, military and naval stores, and any articles which Her Majesty shall judge capable of being converted into or made useful in increasing the quantity of military or naval stores, provisions or any sort of victual which may be used as food by man, and if any goods so prohibited shall be exported from the United Kingdom or carried coastwise or by water-borne to be so exported or carried, they shall be forfeited."

The Custom-house authorities thought themselves warranted in applying the prohibition to cases of American vessels, on board which the goods in question had been actually shipped, before the issue of the prohibitory Proclamation. The Law Officers, having regard to the express words of the Statute, enacting that the time of shipment should be deemed to be the time of exportation, were of opinion that the Proclamation could not, with respect to such goods, have a retrospective operation, and that the American owners, being within the protection of the Statute, were therefore entitled to compensation.

In India the prerogative of the Crown is not controlled or restricted as to this matter by the terms of any Statute; and it appears to us that, if that prerogative be bonâ fide exercised for the safety of the realm on a particular emergency, by forbidding the export of any particular merchandize, in a manner affecting equally native subjects and foreign merchants, the latter, who share, of necessity, to a certain extent, the fortunes of the State in which their commercial dealings are carried on, have no ground, upon principles of strict international right or justice, to require compensation for such an unavoidable diminution of their commercial profits. It is another and a different question whether a State wishing to act with liberality towards the merchants of a friendly State upon motives of policy or generosity, may think it fit to exempt them from sharing in the temporary disadvantages which the necessities of the State have compelled it to inflict upon merchants who are its own subjects.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 282.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 24.)

UNITED STATES.

Case of the British steamer "Blanche."

Temple, November 23, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 13th and 14th instant,* respecting the case of the "Blanche," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with other papers, three despatches and their inclosures, which have been received from the Acting British Consul-General in Cuba, reporting all the particulars connected with the destruction of

---

* Pages 278 and 280.

1862

that vessel;* and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose the previous despatches from Mr. Stuart,† for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That the act of the United States' Commander Hunter appears to combine almost every circumstance of deliberate outrage upon the liberty and property of Her Majesty's subjects, and of insult to Her Majesty's flag, that can well be imagined.

We are of opinion that the demand of Her Majesty's Government for redress ought in no respect to fall short of that which (by the extract from the despatch of the Spanish Ambassador) appears to have been put forth with much firmness and dignity by the Spanish Government; and in one respect at least, namely, in demanding full and ample reparation on behalf of Mr. Clement, it ought to go beyond it.

The immediate trial of Commander Hunter before a competent tribunal, the fullest pecuniary satisfaction to the captain, crew, and owners of the "Blanche," ample indemnification to Mr. Clement, a fitting apology to Her Majesty, are reparations for this gross, insolent outrage, which justice to Her Majesty's subjects, the observance of the rights of nations, and the dignity of Her Majesty's Crown, appear to us imperatively to demand, and which we think Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed, in combination with the Spanish Ambassador, to press forward with all practicable speed.

The transaction itself furnishes ample reasons for insisting on this full measure of reparation; and if any further reason were required, we think it would be found in the impression appearing, by Consul Crawford's letters, to prevail in the British and Spanish West Indies, of the existence of a system of wilful and deliberate contempt of the rights of Great Britain and of the restraints of international law, on the part of the Commanders of the United States' cruizers; for which impression it must be confessed only too much cause has been given by circumstances which have occurred.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 283.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 25.)

UNITED STATES.

Forcible occupation by General Butler at New Orleans of a house belonging to Messrs. A. and T. Byrne.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 24, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence with Messrs. Andrew and Thomas Byrne,‡ respecting a house belonging to the latter which has been forcibly occupied by General Butler at New Orleans; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That such a forcible seizure and occupation of the dwelling-house of an unoffending neutral can only be justified by the extreme exigencies of the belligerent, incident to his military position in a recently conquered capital of the enemy.

But that if this necessity exist,—and otherwise the conduct of Major-General Butler would be wholly unwarrantable,—it is the duty of the belligerent

---

* Señor Genzales, November 14; Mr. Crawford, Nos. 38, 39, and 40; Mr. Stuart, No. 332, November 4, 1862.

† Mr. Stuart, Nos. 304 and 312.

‡ Mr. A. Byrne, October 30; to Mr. A. Byrne, November 5; Mr. T. Byrne, November 14, 1862.

to make adequate compensation for the loss and injury sustained by the neutral proprietor, and to reinstate him as speedily as possible in his dwelling-house.

I humbly advise that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed to claim proper compensation for Mr. Thomas Byrne.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 284.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 26.)

UNITED STATES.

Licenses granted exclusively to American merchants to trade with the port of Norfolk, that port being still under blockade as regards foreign vessels.

My Lord, Temple, November 25, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 266), stating the grounds on which he has considered it advisable to defer acting on instructions which were drawn up in conformity with the opinion expressed in our Report of the 11th August last,* with regard to the manner in which trade was being carried on at the port of Norfolk by means of licenses granted to American merchants to their exclusive advantage, and to request that we would take the further information now furnished by Mr. Stuart on this subject into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to any steps which Her Majesty's Government can take in the matter.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous correspondence,† and the United States' Treasury Regulations respecting internal and coastwise intercourse, alluded to by Mr. Stuart, for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That as Norfolk is no longer a blockaded port, the opinion contained in the Report of the Law Officers (August 11, 1862), is, of course, not applicable to that port in its present condition.

It appears to us that the only step which in the actual state of things Her Majesty's Government can take, is to direct Her Majesty's Representative at Washington to endeavour to obtain, by amicable negotiation with the United States' Government, such a modification of the Regulations now acted upon with respect to the trade with Norfolk, and any other Southern ports in the actual possession of the United States' Government, which may not have been yet declared open to foreign trade, as may extend to neutrals the relief which they might naturally have expected to receive from the raising of the blockade at those places.

As we understand the facts, all foreigners are at present equally excluded from the trade with Norfolk, and with all other places similarly situated.

If so, it is not possible to contend that such a general exclusion from particular ports and places involves any breach of the Treaty obligations of the United States towards Great Britain; and as those ports and places are in the de facto possession of the United States' Government, no question of international law arises in this state of circumstances.

Under Article I of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1815, British subjects are only entitled to frequent for the purposes of trade "all such places, ports, and rivers" in the United States' territories "to which other foreigners are permitted to come."

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 196.

† Mr. Stuart, No. 48, July 7; Law Officers, August 11; to Mr. Stuart, No. 79, August 19; Mr. Stuart, No. 224, September 14, 1862.

1862

No. 285.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 26.)

New Granada.

Losses sustained by Messrs. Longton and Longrigg on account of seizure of their property by revolutionary authorities at Rio Hacha.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 25, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 13th instant* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter, dated the 19th November instant, from Messrs. Longton and Longrigg, containing explanations on the points alluded to in my Report; and to state that, before your Lordship calls on Her Majesty's Consul at Carthagena for the Report suggested by me, your Lordship would be glad to learn whether the facts now stated by Messrs. Longton and Longrigg are such as to modify the opinion I have already taken in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it now appears that the price of the "divi divi" was paid by Messrs. Longton and Longrigg after they were aware of its confiscation for the time being at New Granada.

They were advised that the property in this article had become theirs before the confiscation, and that they were obliged to pay for it here, and on this ground they claim the intervention of Her Majesty's Government

I must again remark that no receipt is sent, but I think it may be assumed that the money has been actually paid.

On this state of facts, combined with those which appeared on the former papers, a question of law and of fact, of some nicety, arises, which I humbly advise Her Majesty's Government to deal with as follows:—

To instruct Her Majesty's Consul at Carthagena to inquire whether the 200 tons of "divi divi" purchased by Messrs. Danies for Messrs. Longton and Longrigg were set apart and separate in the warehouse of that gentleman, or whether they were part of an undistinguished and unsevered mass of "divi divi" at the time of confiscation.

In the letter of Mr. Danies, which appears in the original Memorial of Messrs. Longton and Longrigg, this fact is not clear.

The importance of it is great, for if the English law governs, as both parties assume (and as I therefore assume), this contract; if the 200 tons of "divi divi" were not so actually, at the time of the confiscation, set apart and severed, but formed there a portion of the common stock to be severed hereafter,—then the property in them had not passed to Messrs. Longton and Longrigg, but remained in Mr. Danies; and Messrs. Longton and Longrigg have paid foolishly, and in their own wrong, and can have no claim upon the aid of Her Majesty's Government.

If, on the other hand, these 200 tons were, at the time of confiscation, so set apart, then the property of British subjects has been unjustly seized and appropriated by the Government of New Granada; and Her Majesty's Consul might properly be directed to support the claim of Messrs. Longton and Longrigg.

I advise, therefore, Her Majesty's Government to reply to Messrs. Longton and Longrigg that their course is to memorialize the existing Government of New Granada for compensation for the loss which, by its wrongful act, they have sustained; and to apprize them that Her Majesty's Consul will be instructed, if an examination of the case warrants him in so doing, to support the Memorial of these gentlemen.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 286.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 27.)

Peru.

Projects of law involving diplomatic privileges.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 27, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Lima (No. 81), relative to two projects of law which have been prepared by the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, involving questions of diplomatic privilege; and to request I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship any observations I may have to make thereupon.

Mr. Layard also added that your Lordship would be glad to have my opinion on this matter at my earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That it would seem to me expedient that Her Majesty's Government should instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Lima to make a formal communication to the Peruvian Government to the following tenor and effect:—

That the attention of Her Majesty's Government has been called to certain printed and published proposals by the Peruvian Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, for the passing of laws respecting the subjects of foreign Powers; that Her Majesty's Government, while desiring scrupulously to abstain from any interference whatever with the enactment of any municipal laws which that Government may deem expedient for the well-being of its subjects and the good order of the realm, and while avoiding the expression of any unsolicited opinion upon the proposed creation of tribunals having for their object to assist that Government in doing justice to foreigners who have been injured either by the public acts of the Peruvian Executive or the private acts of individual Peruvian subjects, nevertheless I think it proper to apprize, in the most formal manner, the Peruvian Government that Her Majesty's Government do not consent to, and will not hold themselves bound by, any municipal or civil laws passed in derogation of the rights now incident by the principles of general international law and the recognized usages of civilized States to the subjects of Her Majesty, or to those under her protection, in common with the subjects of other foreign States; and that if it should be found that any of the provisions of the proposed enactments conflict, as it would appear that some of them do, with these rights, that the said enactments cannot be regarded by Her Majesty's Government as in any way fettering the action or affecting the conduct which, in the event of any injury being done to any of Her Majesty's subjects, either by the public authorities or the private citizens of the Peruvian State, Her Majesty's Government may find it necessary hereafter, as heretofore, to adopt towards the Peruvian State.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 287.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 27.)

United States.

Claim of Mr. Cramer on account of detention of bales of sarsaparilla at New York.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 27, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a letter, dated the 28th August ultimo, from the Colonial Office, together with its inclosure, on the subject of a claim of indemnity put forward by Mr. Cramer, a merchant of Belize, against the Government of the United States, on account of the detention at New York of certain bales of sarsaparilla shipped for that port.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose an instruction to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 104), directing him to bring this claim before the United States' Government, and a despatch from Mr. Stuart (No. 290), inclosing a copy of note from Mr. Seward, declining to entertain Mr. Cramer's claim, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, together with the previous correspondence referred to in the Colonial Office letter, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the propriety of making a further representation to the United States' Government on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That I am of opinion that it would be proper that Her Majesty's Government should make a further representation to the United States' Government on this matter.

---

* Page 280.

1862

It is not denied that Mr. Cramer suffered considerable loss by the unauthorized and illegal act of Mr. Raymond, to which effect was given by the Custom-house of New York.

Mr. Stuart's answer does not touch the obvious and real point of the case. It is not the act of the Custom-house alone which is complained of, but that Mr. Raymond, well knowing at the time that he was not recognized and would not be recognized by Her Majesty, proceeded to give the order to the Custom-house which, according to Mr. Seward's own statement, he knew was unwarrantable, except in a contingency which he was aware would not happen.

I must humbly add that it seems to me not the less proper that Her Majesty's Government should press the claim, per se just, of Mr. Cramer, that the injury done to him appears to be part of a general conduct, connected with the mission of Mr. Raymond, disrespectful and affronting to Her Majesty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 288.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 28.)

UNITED STATES.

Restrictions on trade between New York and British West Indies.

Temple, November 27, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter, stating that with reference to our Report of the 5th of September last,* in which we expressed our approval of the note which it was proposed to instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Washington to present to the United States' Government, respecting the restrictions imposed by that Government on trade between New York and the British West Indies, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 278, October 8, 1862), inclosing the reply which had been returned by the United States' Government, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the previous correspondence on this subject was likewise inclosed for reference, if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report,—

That Mr. Seward in this letter meets the representations made in Mr. Stuart's note of the 25th September last by observing, first, that the particular principles or maxims of international law, and the particular Treaty obligations, assumed to be infringed by the proceedings complained of, were not pointed out by Mr. Stuart. He then, after referring at length to the terms of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1815, and of the Act of Congress of the 20th May, 1862, states, that "it is not apparent to him that Mr. Stuart's arguments invalidate this Act of Congress. By the law of nations," he adds, "every State is sovereign over its own citizens and strangers residing within its limits, its own productions and fabrics, and its own ports and waters, and its highways, and, generally, within all its proper territories. It has a right to maintain that sovereignty against sedition and insurrection by civil preventives and penalties, and by armed force, and it has a right to interdict and prohibit within its own borders exportation of its productions and fabrics, and the supplying of traitors in arms against itself with materials and munitions, and any other form of aid and comfort. It has a right within its own jurisdiction to employ all the means necessary to make these prohibitions effective. It does not appear to the Undersigned that the United States have surrendered this right by the Convention between themselves and Great Britain which has been recited." He then observes that under the Ist Article of the Treaty of 1815, the right of British subjects to reside and carry on trade in ports and places of the United States is not absolute, but is limited to those ports, &c., "into which other foreigners are permitted to enter, and in which they are permitted to reside and trade;" and that while so residing and trading, they are expressly declared to be subject to the laws and statutes of the United States; and, also, that under the IIIrd Article of the same Treaty, the United States do not engage that there shall be no prohibition of exports from the United States in British ships or by British subjects, but only that there shall be no such "prohibition, which shall not extend equally to all other nations." He then proceeds to explain his view of the nature and effect of the Act of Congress, which, he says, "does not confine its prohibitions or its requirements to British vessels trading between New York and the Bahamas, but applies them to all vessels of all nations, including the United States, wherever trading, whether with the Bahamas, or any other part of the world. The prohibitions and requirements are not uncertain as to the authority which prescribes them, or the form of the prescription; but they are declared and promulgated in solemn enactment by the Congress of the United States. The conditions on which the prohibitions and requirements are suspended are not left to caprices, suspicions, or beliefs, but they are dependent on satisfactory evidence of ascertainable facts. They involve no question of neutral rights, because no neutral has or can have a right, more than any citizen of the United States, to do an act within their exclusive jurisdiction which is forbidden by the statutes and laws of the country. The Act has nothing to do with the blockade of the insurrectionary ports; because it confines its prohibitions and requirements to transactions occurring, and to persons residing or being within the ports actually possessed by the United States, and under their unquestioned protection and control."

Mr. Seward thus professes to examine the mode in which the Act of Congress, which he thus vindicates, has been put into execution. He refers to the orders of the Treasury of the United States dated the 14th April and the 18th May, 1862, by which the exportation of certain articles from the United States, within specified geographical limits, was prohibited; and to the general instructions issued to the Collectors of Customs under dates the 22nd and 23rd May, 1862; saying that these orders and instructions appear to him to be within the authority given by the Act of Congress, and to be in themselves unobjectionable, inasmuch as "they do not expressly nor by any implication discriminate against Great Britain, her colonies or dependencies, and in favour of any other nation, or even in favour of the United States. The instructions," he continues, "leave nothing to the caprice of the Collector as a subordinate officer; but they are explicit commercial Regulations, prescribed by the highest authority. The conditions on which prohibitions are to attach are to be ascertained upon satisfactory evidence; and for the Collector's exercise of power in applying them he is responsible to the Head of the Department to which he belongs. The Regulations have no connection whatever with the blockade; but they affect only persons, vessels, merchandize, ports, waters, and highways exclusively within the United States, and within the territories which are within the absolute and unquestioned possession of the United States, and subject, in fact as well as in law, to their authority.

In conclusion, he states, that the President, "desirous to remove all possible grounds for misconstruction," has directed the two prohibitory Orders of the 14th April and the 18th May to be rescinded; "so that the case will stand altogether upon the Act of Congress, and the General Instructions of the Treasury:" and, while expressing his belief that the special proceedings of the Collector of the Customs have been unexceptionable, he describes the information furnished to him on that subject as vague and uncertain, and undertakes that any particular case which may be presented for that purpose shall be examined on its merits.

The general result of Mr. Seward's argument appears to be, that he defends the proceedings against which Her Majesty's Government have felt it their duty to remonstrate, on three grounds:—

1st. That these proceedings were authorized by an Act of Congress, and by Orders of the Executive Government of the United States, taking effect as law within their own territory, and by which, according to the express terms of the Treaty of 1815, the commercial intercourse of Great Britain with the United States was liable to be controlled and regulated.

2nd. That those proceedings and the Act and Orders on which they were founded (although prompted by the exigencies of the present civil war) are wholly unconnected with the blockade, and depend for their justification, not upon the assertion or exercise of any belligerent right, but upon the territorial sovereignty of the United States over persons, places, and things within their own proper jurisdiction.

And, lastly, that the Act and Orders, on which he relies as authorizing these proceedings, have not been directed in any special or exceptional manner against Great Britain, or against any of her colonies, but have been made equally and indifferently applicable to the ships and subjects of all other nations.

---

* Page 215.

1862

It seems, therefore, to be admitted that the interruptions, lately opposed to the trade between Great Britain and the Bahamas by the Custom-house authorities at New York cannot be justified consistently with the international engagements of the United States contained in the Ist and IIIrd Articles of the Treaty of 1815, unless they were (1) authorized by "the laws and statutes" of the United States in the sense in which these terms are used in the Ist Article of the Treaty; and (2) imposed as a common liability and burden upon the trade of Great Britain, and of all other foreign nations.

Both these conditions on which the attempted justification depends appear to us to fail, when the question is examined in the light of facts, and when certain false assumptions which seem to be involved in Mr. Seward's letter are corrected. But, first, it is desirable to clear the ground by adverting to some questions of principle.

1. Whether the Act of Congress of the 30th May, 1862, and the Treasury Orders mentioned by Mr. Seward, are or are not sufficient to justify the proceedings of the Custom-house authorities of New York, as between themselves and their own Government, is a question into which we do not conceive it to be at all necessary for Her Majesty's Government to enter. For, if those proceedings have been inconsistent with the engagements of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, it is no answer to the British Government to say that they were sanctioned by Congress, or by the Executive Government of the United States.

If, indeed, Mr. Seward ought to be understood as contending that no act whatever done within the territory of the United States, and authorized by Congress, can be inconsistent with the engagements contained in the Treaty, that is a proposition from which we must record our unequivocal dissent. The engagement for liberty of commerce, contained in the first Article of the Treaty, is a positive engagement on the part of the United States; and the words of reservation at the end, "but subject always to the laws and statutes of the two countries respectively," do not mean that the principal engagement itself may be nullified, or may be rendered illusory, either wholly or in part, at the option of either of the Contracting Parties, by domestic legislation directed to that end; but merely, that obedience is to be rendered by foreign traders, while in each country, to all the laws and statutes enacted by either nation for the ordinary and legitimate purposes of internal government and administration; and that each Government reserves to itself the right of making such laws, upon commercial as well as upon other subjects. It is worthy of remark that the words "subject, &c.," are not, in this clause, qualified even to the extent that the incidence of such laws upon the subjects of the Contracting Parties, and upon all other foreigners, must be equal and impartial; and it will hardly, we suppose, be argued, that an Act of Congress, expressly prohibiting or placing under arbitrary restraints, all trade between the United States and Great Britain, or all trade between the United States and any particular British possession, would be consistent with the Treaty. If a reference to maxims of international law is desired, it is a well-known maxim that Treaties are to be interpreted in good faith, and in such a manner that they may have their effect, and not be rendered vain or illusory.

2. This principle being established, we conceive it necessarily to follow that the liberty of commerce granted to Great Britain by the United States under this Treaty cannot, without breach of faith, be subsequently limited by the enactment in Congress of conditions having reference, not to anything to be done within the domestic and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, nor even to anything to be done within the scope of these belligerent rights which are conceded to that Power, while at war, by the law of nations; but to acts which it is supposed may be done by the subjects of an independent State, entitled to the benefit of the Treaty within the territories of their own Sovereign, or in some other part of the world where the legislation of the United States has no force or operation. If, for example, an Act of Congress were passed, prohibiting any trade with the Bahamas unless Her Majesty would engage to prohibit and prevent all trade between the Bahamas and the Confederate States, this would not be a "law or statute" of the United States, to which the commercial rights of Great Britain, under the Treaty, were made subject according to the true construction and meaning by the terms of the Treaty; it would be simply a refusal, on the part of Congress, to perform the engagements of the Treaty, unless Her Majesty would consent to act under the dictation of the United States, concerning matters falling entirely within the scope of her own independent sovereignty, and as to which no obligation of compliance was imposed upon her, either by Treaty or by the Law of Nations. It is superfluous to add, that what cannot be done in good faith, directly, is not more consistent with good faith when it is attempted indirectly. If it would be a violation of the Treaty for Congress to pass such an Act as has been supposed, it is not less so for the Government of the United States to use the machinery of an Act, passed in vague and general terms by Congress, for practically the same purpose; which in truth is the very thing which has been done.

3. This brings us to another material point. By the "laws and statutes" to which the trade under the Treaty is to be subject, definite laws and definite statutes, which foreigners can understand and observe as practical rules for their government while within the United States' territory, must be intended; not laws, so called, which do nothing but authorize subordinate officers of the Government to give or withhold, at their discretion, those rights which the United States have engaged by the Treaty to secure to British subjects. The Orders of the 14th April and the 18th May, which prohibited the export of certain specified articles within certain defined geographical limits (and which it is now proposed to rescind), were such laws as it was within the undoubted competency of the Government of the United States to make, consistently with the Treaty, and they have been freely admitted by Her Majesty's Government to be so, throughout the correspondence on this subject. Again, the Treasury Instructions of the 22nd May, and the first part of those of the 23rd May, prohibiting certain articles, ancipitis usus, as contraband during the present war, were laws of the same character, against which no exception has ever been taken by Her Majesty's Government; and the provisions of the Instructions of the 23rd May as to clearances and bonds, so far as they authorized security to be required for the bonâ fide delivery of goods exported from the United States at the destination for which they were cleared or permitted, have never been objected to. But to require security to be given by a British shipper at New York (whether trading there merely in transitu, as in the case of the Cunard line of steamers or otherwise), extending to any ulterior uses which might be made of goods so exported after delivery at their port of final destination within British territory, and when they might have passed finally and for ever out of the control of the shipper, is to impose an arbitrary and impossible condition, and is, therefore, a prohibition scarcely in disguise. If a general law clogging the trade between Great Britain and the United States with such a condition, would be a breach of the Treaty (and we entertain no doubt that it would), the Treaty is not less broken by the exercise, under whatever authority, of an arbitrary power to clog with such a condition, at the discretion of particular officers, the clearances of particular British subjects, neither convicted, nor indeed accused of the violation, actual or intended, of any law of the United States while within its territory, and subject to its jurisdiction.

4. To Mr. Seward's extraordinary statements that, under the Act of Congress and the Instructions of the 23rd May, "the conditions and requirements on which the prohibitions are suspended, are not left to caprices, suspicions, or beliefs, but are dependent on satisfactory evidence of ascertainable facts;" and, again, that "the Instructions leave nothing to the caprice of the Collector, as a subordinate officer, but are explicit commercial regulations, prescribed by the highest authority;" and that "the conditions on which prohibitions are to attach are to be ascertained upon satisfactory evidence,"—it seems sufficient simply to oppose the very words of the documents themselves. The second section of the Act of Congress gives the power which is said by Mr. Seward to authorize the requisition of such bonds as have been required, to the Collector of Customs, without any rule whatever for its exercise beyond what is expressed in the words, "if he shall deem it necessary under the circumstances of the case." The Instructions are to refuse clearances to all vessels, when "it is believed by you on satisfactory grounds, that there is imminent danger that the goods will fall into the possession of or under the control of the insurgents;" and "in all cases where, in your judgment, there is ground for apprehension that any goods, &c., will be used in any way for the aid of the insurgents, you will require substantial security, &c." Comment upon the discrepancy between the words conferring this most absolute and arbitrary discretion, and Mr. Seward's representation of their effect. seems to be superfluous.

1862

5. The arguments, therefore, that the Act of Congress is a law of the United States which makes the acts complained of compatible with the Treaty, and that they are justified because the British commerce affected by them is intercepted, not upon the high seas, but in places within the territorial dominions of the United States (the second of which depends wholly upon the first), fall to the ground. And it must be recollected that this branch of the case is entirely independent of the question whether, in this respect, the trade of other foreign countries has been dealt with in the same way with our own. For the engagements of Article I of the Treaty are positive between Great Britain and the United States, without any reference being made therein to other foreigners, except for the mere purpose of determining to what ports and places British subjects and ships may come. It is only under Article III that a "prohibition" can be justified as against Great Britain, by showing that it "equally extends to all other nations." And we think it clear that the present case is not one of the "prohibition of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, &c.," within the meaning of the 3rd clause of the Treaty, which plainly refers to general prohibitions of the exportation of specified articles (such, e. g., as the Prohibitory Orders of the 14th April, 18th May, and 22nd May), and not to the prohibition of the exportation of particular articles not generally prohibited, by particular shippers, on particular occasions, unless certain exceptional conditions not required by the law in other cases are complied with.

6. Mr. Seward, however, insists that the Act of Congress "does not confine its prohibitions or its requirements to British vessels trading between New York and the Bahamas, but applies them to all vessels of all nations, including the United States, wherever trading, whether with the Bahamas or any other part of the world:" and that the Treasury Instructions "do not expressly, nor by any implication, discriminate between Great Britain, her Colonies or Dependencies, and in favour of any other nation, or even in favour of the United States." We apprehend that if a law is made containing no prohibition at all in itself, but giving to certain Executive officers an authority to prohibit all or any shipments at their discretion, the question whether any foreign nation is aggrieved by it, or not, must depend, not upon the abstract and per se inoperative terms of the power, but upon the practical use which is made of it by the Executive Government. If the action of the Government, upon such a law, is confined to a particular trade of a particular nation, it is just the same thing to that nation as if the law itself had been expressly and exclusively directed against that branch of its trade. With respect, indeed, to the Act of Congress of the 30th May last, it may very well be that it has been used for purposes which were not at all in contemplation when it was passed, for (as we pointed out in our Report of the 2nd August last) it would have been a sound and reasonable construction of the 2nd section of that Act to understand it as merely authorizing the Collector to take security for the delivery of shipments at the destination for which they were cleared, and against any use thereof, preceding such delivery, for the purpose of affording aid or comfort to any person or parties in insurrection against the authority of the United States. If so limited, the power would be unobjectionable. The Treasury Instructions, also, of the 23rd May, bear upon the face of them that they were measures arising out of, and connected with, the raising of the blockade of the ports of Beaufort, Port Royal, and New Orleans, and the reopening, under certain regulations, of the trade with those ports. It was impossible to infer from the mere perusal either of the Act of Congress or of the Instructions, that they were intended, or would be made use of, for the purpose of placing under virtual prohibition any part of the export trade (in articles neither contraband nor prohibited by any Law, Order, or Proclamation) from New York, and from England viâ New York, to the Bahamas, or, indeed, any part of the export trade from the Northern States to any foreign country whatever. But when, under colour of these Legislative and Executive Acts, such an interference with British trade has actually taken place, and especially when nothing of the same kind has been done with respect to any part of the trade of any other foreign country, the violation of Treaty, so far as regards the British Government, is precisely the same as if the General Orders of the United States' Government had been openly and avowedly directed against that particular branch of British trade which has been so interfered with, and that alone.

7. What, then, are the facts as to this part of the case? Here, again, we have nothing to do but to oppose to Mr. Seward's present argument that nothing more is in question than certain "explicit commercial regulations," and that no peculiar or exceptional interference has taken place with the trade between Great Britain and the Bahamas, the very words of his own letter to Mr. Stuart dated the 18th of August last. "The exclusive order," he there says, "is applied to the Island of Nassau only; because there is no complaint of abuse of neutrality laws elsewhere; and not at all invidiously, or because it is a British possession. The restriction is a measure adopted for the public safety, endangered by insurrection, and not at all as in any sense a measure of trade; and I think it justifiable on the same grounds with the inhibition of certain exports referred to by the British Government. So soon as the abuses which have rendered the order necessary shall have ceased, it will be at once rescinded. In the letter, also, of Collector Barney, dated the 9th August (a copy of which was inclosed in Mr. Seward's letter of the 18th), that officer, while affecting to have made no discrimination in any case "in favour of American vessels or American citizens, or those of any other nationality," distinctly admits that the trade between New York and Nassau (which alone had been obstructed) was "carried on almost exclusively in British vessels belonging to Nassau." The manner in which and the principles upon which Mr. Collector Barney acted towards that trade, sufficiently appear from other passages of his letters, of which copies have also been communicated to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Seward or Mr. Adams, and of which the United States' Government have expressed their approval. In his letter of the 12th June, 1862, Mr. Barney declares his prohibitions to have been issued, "in the exercise of the discretion devolved upon him as an officer of the Government of a sovereign people," whenever "he had reason to suspect that any goods were intended by individual enterprise, or the special contracts of British subjects, to directly contribute to the welfare of the enemies of the United States." In his letter to Mr. Chase of the 16th July, he says, "The trade carried on between this port and Nassau in articles to be shipped thence directly to places and persons in the Confederate States, is of a magnitude only equalled by the barefaced notoriety of the transactions:" and (referring to a letter from the United States' Consul at Nassau, in which the names of certain firms there, said to be engaged in the trade with the Confederate States, were mentioned), he adds, "the evils detailed therein, it would seem, can only be remedied by the non-intercourse which the exaction of the objectionable bonds will, in most instances, produce." In the letter 9th August, already referred to, he says, "Her Majesty's Government labours under a serious misapprehension when stating that the authorities of the New York Custom-house have attempted to interfere with the ordinary and legitimate trade of the Bahamas. It is only in cases of extraordinary shipments, or when we have had good and sufficient reasons (founded on the statements of merchants here engaged in the trade) for the belief that they were intended for interdicted ports in the Southern States, that we have intervened for the protection of the interests of our Government by prohibition," &c.

8. The case, thus originally made by the United States' Government, was, we humbly conceive, conclusively answered, upon the admitted principles of international law, by our previous Reports, particularly that of the 12th September last. How that case is to be reconciled with Mr. Seward's present arguments and statements, it is not for us to explain. He now says that the "Regulations" in question "have no connection whatever with the blockade." The existence, however, of the blockade is the only ground on which, in any place or under any circumstances, the Government of the United States could claim a right to complain of the importation of commodities, not contraband of war, from the Bahamas into the Confederate States; and it is evident that this was the justification relied upon by Collector Barney for his endeavours to intercept at New York innocent commodities not prohibited by any general law or order of the United States' Government, which (he was led to believe) would, if introduced into the Bahamas, afterwards find their way to "interdicted ports in the Southern States." Mr. Seward now appears to admit, that what has been done cannot be justified by any reference to belligerent rights of the United States; yet it is apparent, from his own former declaration, already quoted, that he originally sought to justify the whole course of proceeding, "not in any sense as a measure of trade," but as a measure of defence against an alleged "abuse of neutrality laws" by merchants resident in a particular British Colony.

1862

9. Our conclusion upon the whole matter is, that there has been a serious violation of the Ist Article of the Treaty of 1815 (which, it is admitted, is now to be read as extending to the British West Indies), which it has been attempted to disguise under pretence of the right of domestic legislation; that the case is not really one of domestic legislation at all, but is one in which the forms of domestic legislation have been made subservient to an endeavour to control a particular branch of neutral trade, as carried on, not within the territory of the United States, but in the proper territory of the neutral Power; that it is, in fact, as to such British goods as have been stopped in transitu from Great Britain to the Bahamas, an embargo, for causes not justified by international law; and, as to innocent and lawful exports from the United States, a denial of the commercial intercourse guaranteed by Treaty, except on terms to which no independent foreign nation could submit, without compromising the rights of neutrality and her own sovereignty within her own dominions.

10. In the concluding paragraph of his letter, Mr. Seward seems to draw a distinction between the actual proceedings of which Her Majesty's Government have complained, and the abstract terms of the Act of Congress, and Orders of the United States' Treasury, with which Her Majesty's Government have no concern, except so far as they may be made the pretext for any violation of the Treaty rights of this country, confining himself to the defence of the latter, and professing to be, as to the former, as yet but imperfectly informed. We do not conceive that any real doubt or obscurity can rest upon the facts, especially after the broad and general avowals contained in Mr. Barney's letters. The distinction, however, now drawn by Mr. Seward may possibly justify the hope that, although the proceedings of the New York Custom-house towards the Bahama trade have not been hitherto disavowed or condemned by the United States' Government, the remonstrances of Her Majesty's Government may, nevertheless, have the practical effect of preventing the continuance or repetition of similar proceedings in any future case in which British trade may be concerned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 289.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

UNITED STATES.

Case of the British steamer "Blanche."

My Lord, Temple, November 28, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th November instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 13th and 23rd instant,* respecting the case of the "Blanche," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, inclosing an extract from the "New York Herald," purporting to contain an account given by Captain Hunter of his pursuit of that vessel, and of her destruction on the coast of Cuba; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the compulsion exercised on Mr. Clements to make the false deposition in question is not the least discreditable part of this outrage.

It does not occur to us that these further papers render necessary any addition to the Report which we have already had the honour to make in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Pages 278 and 285.

No. 290.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

UNITED STATES.

Destruction by the "Alabama" of British property on board the American vessels "Lafayette" and "Lauraetta."

My Lord, Temple, November 28, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at New York,* reporting the destruction by the "Alabama" of the American vessels "Lafayette" and "Lauraetta" with British property on board, and to request that we would take these cases into our consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That we think the principles of international law which we had the honour to lay before Her Majesty's Government in our former Report on the "Alabama" govern these cases; and that the British owners whose property has been seized on board the "Lafayette" and "Lauraetta" are entitled to ample restitution, to be obtained, in the circumstances, either by the direct interposition of Her Majesty's Government demanding redress from the Confederate States' Government, or by proceedings in the Prize Court of the Confederate States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 291.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

UNITED STATES.

Drafts of instructions respecting destruction by the "Alabama" of British property on board Federal merchant-vessels.

My Lord, Temple, November 28, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the drafts of the answers which your Lordship proposed to return to the letters from British merchants respecting the destruction by the "Alabama" of British property on board Federal merchant-vessels, which formed the subject of our Report of the 12th instant.†

Mr. Hammond also stated that we would observe that the proposed answers to Messrs. Clark and Mr. Denny were in accordance with the suggestions in our Report, and added that the draft of answer to Messrs. Brown, Shipley and Co., the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, and others, contained the decision of the Cabinet on this question.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that your Lordship thought it right, however, to submit these drafts for our consideration, and you would be glad to be informed, at our earliest convenience, whether we concur in them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these drafts into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the draft letters proposed to be sent, namely, those to Mr. Denny, Messrs. J. and J. Clark, and Messrs. Brown, Shipley, and Co, and Rathbone and Co., are proper to be sent.

---

* No. 125, November 4; No. 128, November 7.

† Page 278.

1862

But we think that in the last letter, viz., to Messrs. Brown, Shipley, and Co., the words "Prize Court" should be substituted for "Court of Justice."

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 292.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

ITALY.

Marriage by British Consul at Naples of a Protestant lady and a Belgian Roman Catholic.

Temple, November 28, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Naples (No. 61, November 15, 1862), requesting instructions as to whether he would be legally borne out in celebrating a marriage between an English Protestant lady and a Belgian subject, who is also a Roman Catholic; and to request that we would take Mr. Bonham's despatch into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Bonham on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this despatch into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that if the gentleman produces the certificate mentioned in Mr. Consul-General Bonham's despatch to Earl Russell of 15th November, 1862, and the lady be of full age, the Consul ought not to refuse to celebrate the marriage between the parties; but that he has acted properly in warning them of its invalidity according to the lex loci.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 293.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 1.)

UNITED STATES.

As to exemption of vessels of Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Steam-ship Company from destruction by the "Alabama," they being engaged in conveying mails between Great Britain and United States.

Temple, November 29, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th instant,* on the representation of Mr. Inman of Liverpool respecting the apprehension entertained by the Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Steam-ship Company of the destruction of their vessels by the Confederate steamer of war "Alabama," he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would inform your Lordship whether the circumstance of the Company being under an engagement with the Government or Postmaster-General of the United States to convey the mails of the United States between this country and America would make any difference in the view which we took of the case in our above-mentioned Report.

Mr. Hammond was pleased also to inclose a copy of the answer which, in consequence of our Report, was returned to Mr. Inman, dated the 13th November instant, and the draft of a despatch which has been addressed to Mr. Stuart (No. 188, November 15, 1862) and to Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Richmond.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and beg to report—

That our observations in the above-mentioned Report would apply to the case of a British ship belonging to a British company resident in Great Britain, and conveying, under engagements with the Government of the United States, the ordinary mails from Great Britain to the Federal States.

In addition to the considerations applicable generally to neutral vessels, this peculiar class of vessels is entitled to more than ordinary favour and protection, upon the principles explained in the despatch of your Lordship to Mr. Seward, of January 23, 1862; but, subject to this qualification, this class of vessels cannot be considered to be exempt from the legitimate exercise of belligerent rights.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 294.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 1.)

UNITED STATES.

As to right of Commander of the "Alabama" to remove articles contraband of war from a British steamer, and appropriate them to the use of his own ship, or destroy them, leaving the steamer to pass on.

Temple, November 29, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th instant* respecting the threat said to have been made by the Commander of the Confederate steamer "Alabama" that he would destroy any vessel of the Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Steam-Packet Company which he might fall in with having on board contraband of war,—he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would report to your Lordship whether, according to international law, the Commander of the Confederate ship of war would be justified in removing the obnoxious articles from a British steamer so found with articles of contraband of war on board, and appropriating such articles to the use of his own ship, or destroying them, leaving the British steamer herself to pass on without further molestation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and beg to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that it is the general duty of the belligerent to bring into the Prize Court for adjudication all questions of contraband, and not to take the law into his own hands by forcibly removing articles, alleged to be of this character, from the neutral ship which conveys them; and we think it is the right and the interest of neutral States to object to and resist any systematic deviation from this rule.

If particular cases should arise in which articles unequivocally contraband should be thus forcibly removed, it would always be open to the neutral Government to consider such cases upon their own particular merits, and (if it were thought fit) to leave the owner of the alleged contraband goods to seek his remedy in the Prize Court of the belligerent.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 295.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 3.)

UNITED STATES.

Proceedings of American Admiral Wilkes at Bermuda. Question of British territorial jurisdiction from the mainland.

Temple, December 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th November, stating that in our Report of the 31st October* on the subject of Admiral Wilkes' proceedings at Bermuda, we state with reference to the question propounded by Vice-Admiral Sir Alexander Milne in the following words:—"To what extent from the mainland of Bermuda does Her Majesty's territorial jurisdiction extend? Is this limit three marine miles from the northern reefs, which in themselves are eight miles and a half from the shore of the island? But were it not for a letter from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, dated the 12th of July, 1849, respecting the Cays of Cuba, I should have no doubt as to the question; I certainly considered these reefs as part of Bermuda;"—"that we were of opinion that the authority (the dominium eminens) of Her Majesty does extend to three marine miles from the northern

---

* Page 276.

* Page 276.

† Page 263.

1862

reefs. We think that these reefs must be considered as belonging to the territorial jurisdiction incident to the possession of Bermuda, so far at least as that, between them and the island, Her Majesty has a right to prevent the exercise of hostilities, and that if we are right in considering them as part of Bermuda, it would follow that Her Majesty's jurisdiction must extend for three marine miles from that point."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the papers relating to the question which arose in regard to the cays of Cuba were not sent to us with his letter of the 29th of October; but the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty being desirous that our attention should be called to them with reference to the present case, your Lordship directed him to forward to us the accompanying volumes, in which, at the places marked, we should find the correspondence in question, which originated, as we should perceive, in the interference of the Spanish authorities with British fishing vessels.

Mr. Hammond likewise inclosed a list of the papers to which our attention is called, and was to request that we would consider the point raised by Vice-Admiral Milne, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon at our early convenience.

We are also honoured with a further letter from Mr. Hammond (of the 17th November) with reference to this matter, transmitting to us, by your Lordship's direction, a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 15th November instant, inclosing a despatch from the Governor of Bermuda, and a report of the Attorney-General of the Colony on the same subject, and requesting that we would take the same into consideration simultaneously with the papers before us.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th November, transmitting to us by your Lordship's direction a volume containing further papers* relative to the view taken by Her Majesty's Government of the claims of Spain in respect of the cays adjacent to the Island of Cuba.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers and questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are still of opinion that the territorial jurisdiction of Bermuda must be estimated at the distance of a marine league from the North Rock, or the outer ledge of the coral reef; or at all events from the rock, and the outer edge of that part of the coral reef, which is not covered by the sea at low water.

It appears that the Islands of Bermuda consist of a collection or group of about 365 ledges of coral formation, emerging above the water.

The whole group lies upon a coral bank, of which the "ledger flats" are a continuation.

The North Rock, which is fourteen feet above water, forms part of these flats, and lies at the mouth of what is marked on the Ordnance map as the Western Channel,—though only upon one occasion, as we are informed by Captain Barnett (who has been employed by Government to survey the island), was it ever passed through by men-of-war.

This rock would admit of a fort being constructed upon it, and it might be necessary in a future war to place one there for the protection of the island.

The "ledger flats" generally, though sometimes covered at high water, are, in fact, as it were, a natural hedge or girdle of defence to the Bermudas, of which they are, as has been said, a continuation.

Great Britain appears to have always attached great importance to the maintenance of a complete jurisdiction over the whole reef, as well as that part of it designated as the Bermudas.

Surveys of the whole group were made in 1793 and 1797.

The original is kept in the Admiralty, and one copy was sent to Bermuda. Both have been always kept secret, and no copies of them allowed to be made.

These Bermuda reefs bear a close analogy, not only to the Bahamas, but, so far as the application of the law affects them, to the Florida reefs, and to the uninhabited islands distant five or six miles from the mouth of the Mississippi.

The former the Americans have, we believe, always claimed as a continuation of the mainland. As to the latter, we have the advantage of an express decision of Lord Stowell, the principles and even the language of which appear very applicable to the case of the North Rock and "ledger flats" of Bermuda:—

"The capture was made," Lord Stowell says, "it seems, at the mouth of the Mississippi, and (as it is contended in the claim) within the boundaries of the

---

* Queen's Advocate, November 11, 1859; Memorandum, November 24, 1859.

United States. We all know the rule of law on this subject is, 'terræ dominium finitur ubi finitur armorum vis;' and since the introduction of fire-arms, that distance has usually been recognized to be about three miles from the shore. But it so happens in this case that a question arises as to what is to be deemed the shore, since there are a number of little mud islands, composed of earth and trees, drifted down by the river, which form a kind of portico to the mainland. It is contended that these are not to be considered as any part of the territory of America, that they are a sort of 'no-man's' land, not of consistency enough to support the purposes of life, uninhabited, and resorted to only for shooting and taking bird's nests. It is argued that the line of territory is to be taken only from the Balize, which is a port raised on the mainland by the former Spanish possessors. I am of a different opinion. I think that the protection of territory is to be reckoned from these islands, and that they are the natural appendages of the coast on which they border, and from which indeed they are formed. . . . . Consider what the consequence would be if lands of this description were not considered as appendant to the mainland, and as comprised within the bounds of territory. If they do not belong to the United States of America, any other Power might occupy them: they might be embanked and fortified. What a thorn would this be in the side of America. It is physically possible at least that they might be so occupied by European nations, and then the command of the river would be no longer in America, but in such settlements. The possibility of such a consequence is enough to expose the fallacy of any arguments that are addressed to show that these islands are not to be considered as part of the territory of America. Whether they are composed of earth or solid rock will not vary the right of dominion, for the right of dominion does not depend upon the texture of the soil. I am of opinion that the right of territory is to be reckoned from those islands. That being established, it is not denied that the actual capture took place within the distance of three miles from the islands, and at the very threshold of the river."—('The Anna,' 5 Robinson, 385 b. and c.)

It remains to notice the papers which we have had the honour to receive relative to the conduct of Great Britain upon the analogous case of Cuba and the Bahamas. The question in this matter arose upon a dispute, not as to the exercise of neutral or belligerent rights, but as to the extent of operation to be allowed to a municipal law of Cuba upon the subject of turtle fishing in the waters of Cuba and of the adjacent cays.

Upon reference to the two opinions given by Sir John Dodson, when Queen's Advocate, upon the subject of "the cays" adjoining to Cuba, it does not appear that in either of them he expressed an opinion founded upon the assumption of the fact that these cays, though uninhabited, unquestionably belonged to Spain. The case seems to have been originally presented to him as if these "cays" were a series of uninhabited rocks, scattered over the sea which intervenes between the British and Spanish possessions, in the Bahamas and Cuba respectively; not proved to be in the exclusive possession, de jure, of either Power, and being de facto frequented by the fishermen of both. Both Sir John Dodson's Reports seem to turn upon the uncertainty attaching to the dominion over these rocks, and do not necessarily touch the question whether, if the sovereignty of Spain over these islands were established, such sovereignty would not have carried with it the maritime rights in controversy.

Though in Lord Palmerston's letter (8th September, 1848) which preceded Sir John Dodson's last Report (30th December, 1848), the opinion of Lord Palmerston certainly propounded the novel principle "that the uninhabited cays of the coast of Cuba cannot be considered invested with territorial jurisdiction beyond low water mark;" and certainly the last Report of Sir John Dodson seems to have been understood by the Foreign Office as sanctioning the opinion so expressed in the letter of Lord Palmerston; and instructions appear to have been issued (24th July, 1849, vol. 760) to Consul Crawford, founded upon the principle advanced in Lord Palmerston's letter to the Colonial Office (20th September, 1849, vol. 763).

But on the 30th of July, 1850 (vol. 771), Lord Eddisbury directed Mr. Kennedy (the Acting Consul-General at Havana) "to state to the Captain-General of Cuba, that Her Majesty's Government do not dispute the right of sovereignty of the Crown of Spain over the cays in question, but Her Majesty's Government do not admit that the right of sovereignty over barren and uninhabited rocks and islets can carry with it territorial jurisdiction over the surrounding seas." And Mr. Otway was afterwards instructed on the 30th June, 1852, to admit that, "if persons not being Spanish subjects should occupy, under the pretence of fishing, any of the cays or islets, they would be liable to be ejected by the Spanish authorities."

1862

It appears clear, however, that the Report of the late Queen's Advocate, Sir John Harding (11th November, 1859), does not sanction the principle that these cays, if Spanish, did not carry with them the usual territorial jurisdiction over adjacent waters; he rather returns to the original position of Sir John Dodson, as to the uncertainty of the Spanish title to the cays themselves. Indeed, he expressly says, "If the Spanish title should be clearly established in one or more particular cases, then I consider that the three-mile limit applies to such cases, just as it would to the coast of Cuba."

This is the doctrine embodied in our recent and present Report upon the Bermudas, and which we believe to be both sound in principle and supported by the very strong precedent of the "Anna," which we have cited; and which we must remark, in conclusion, does not appear to have been present to the mind of Sir John Dodson when he made his second Report upon the letter of Lord Palmerston of the 8th September, 1848.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 296.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 3.)

TURKEY.

Draft Order in Council repealing Order in Council of August 1860 for the regulation of British Consular jurisdiction in Turkey.
Questions of trial by jury in civil suits, and returned convicts.

Temple, December 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th November ultimo, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 7th May last,* on the applications made from Constantinople and Smyrna for the establishment of jury trials in regard to civil cases brought before the Consular Courts at those places, he was directed to state to us that, having regard to the Report made by Sir E. Hornby as to the satisfactory working of the jury system when resorted to in criminal cases, and to a further application which has been received from the British residents at Smyrna, your Lordship is prepared to defer to the representations of the parties most immediately interested in the matter, and, with our concurrence, to adopt as far as practicable a system of trial by jury in civil cases brought before the Consular Courts in the Levant. That your Lordship has accordingly authorized Sir E. Hornby, who has lately been in this country on leave of absence, to frame for our consideration such clauses as, if sanctioned by the Queen in Council, might carry out the new system; and Sir E. Hornby having, with your Lordship's permission, placed himself in communication with Mr. F. S. Reilly, who took a leading part in framing the Order in Council of August 1860, and the Rules for giving effect to it, has now submitted to your Lordship the draft of an Order in Council which he was to inclose for our consideration.

That it has been thought advisable, with a view to prevent confusion hereafter, instead of making a separate Order in Council to meet the special object in view, to repeal the Order of 1860 altogether, and to incorporate its provisions in a new Order, together with such other provisions as are required for carrying out the jury system; and that advantage has been taken of the opportunity to make some slight amendments in the working and arrangement of the Order of 1860; and also to provide that returning from deportation without license duly obtained should be treated as a substantive offence, punishable by imprisonment and re-deportation; that the previous practice of refusing British protection to returned convicts being found to work a disproportionate amount of punishment by exposing them to the severities of confinement as castaways in a Turkish prison.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the passages in the present draft which are new are noted in the margin, for our greater convenience, and that we should find prefixed to the rules which it has been found necessary to annex, a statement of the points in which alterations have been made in those now in force. That it is provided in the draft that the Order should take effect from the 1st of January next. As, however, Her Majesty may not hold a Council so as to admit of the Order being passed and promulgated in Constantinople before that day, it may be necessary to fix a later day—either the 1st of February or the 1st of March—for the Order coming into operation; and in that case, as your Lordship is of opinion that no delay should take place in bringing into operation the jury system, it will be advisable to provide for a corresponding alteration in the application of the provisions, as set forth in section 17, for the formation of the Jury List for the year 1863.

---

* Page 114.

He was also pleased to add that Mr. Reilly, of No. 22, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn, is fully conversant with the whole subject, and that he will be ready to attend us if we should desire to have personal communication with him; and that your Lordship would be glad if we would give our early attention to the subject of this reference, so that the draft Order may be ready to be submitted for Her Majesty's sanction at the first Council that may be held, and that in order to facilitate the consideration of it a copy of this letter was sent separately to each of the Law Officers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the entire repeal of the Order in Council of 1860 was expedient, and that we approve of the new provisions and amendments incorporated in the draft Order submitted to us, and of the provision that unduly returning from deportation should be treated as a new and substantive offence, punishable by imprisonment and re-deportation; and that on the whole we approve of the draft Order, and advise Her Majesty's Government to carry it into execution.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 297.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 4.)

TURKEY.

Consular jurisdiction over Ionians in Ottoman dominions.

Temple, December 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th ultimo, stating that the question respecting the exercise of jurisdiction over Ionian citizens in the Ottoman dominions has been long under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government; and it formed the subject of Reports from the Law Officers, dated October 31, 1860, and February 25, 1861.*

That much correspondence on this subject has passed between the Foreign and Colonial Offices, which has resulted in the letter from the Colonial Office of September, to which he was to call our especial notice, although for our more complete information he inclosed all the papers on the subject.

That your Lordship thought it desirable to obtain the opinion of Sir Edmund Hornby on the matter in the stage to which it is brought by the letter from the Colonial Office of September; and Mr. Hammond inclosed a Memorandum drawn up by him and Mr. Reilly, dated the 3rd November ultimo, on the suggestions contained in it.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into our early consideration, and acquaint your Lordship with our opinion on the course proposed in the Colonial Office letter of September, and in some degree modified by Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Reilly.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we approve of the draft "Atto di Governo," as modified by the suggestions of Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Reilly, and to which we have affixed our initials.

We think that the better course to pursue, as between the Porte, the

---

* For the latter Report, see Reports for 1861, page 33.

British Government, and the Ionian Senate, will be to issue an Order in Council immediately after the passing of the "Atto di Governo;" such Order giving effect, in terms, to the various provisions of the "Atto di Governo," without, however, any express reference to it, as having passed or been enacted. In this way all possible authority will be secured in support of the various arrangements proposed, which we assume will not infringe any exclusive sovereign rights of the Porte which have not been given up by Treaty, &c.

The most important question is to determine the authority in whose hands the pardoning convicted criminals shall be placed. It appears to us that the reasoning of Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Reilly is sound; and that, having regard to the relations of Her Majesty to the Sublime Porte, this power should be ultimately vested in Her Majesty, to be exercised by her Representative the Lord High Commissioner, so as to control the decision of the Senate, both as to the question of an entire free pardon and of the substitution of a sentence of less severity; and that the blank in the proposed "Atto di Governo" should be filled up accordingly.

In the copy of the proposed Act of Government laid before us, there seems to be a defective enumeration (apparently intended to have been complete) of articles. Mr. Reilly's attention, we would suggest, should be called to this.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 298.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

MEXICO.

Publication in "Gazette" of Admiral Jurien's letter to Captain Tatham notifying that the port of Tampico would be open to all neutral vessels.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 5, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st December instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 10th October last,* respecting the insufficiency of the blockade of the Mexican port of Tampico by the French naval forces, he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures which had been received from Earl Cowley (No. 1,270), in answer to an instruction in which his Excellency was directed to ascertain whether a letter addressed by Vice-Admiral Jurien to Captain Tatham, notifying that the port of Tampico would forthwith be open to all neutral vessels, and of which a copy had been forwarded to the Foreign Office by Her Majesty's Consul at Vera Cruz (No. 16, September 9, 1862), was in conformity with orders from the French Government; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the propriety of publishing Vice-Admiral Jurien's letter in the "Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it would be proper to publish duly the letter of Admiral Jurien in the "Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 299.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 8.)

TURKEY.

Fraud committed by Mr. T. Walsh while conducting the house of business at Aleppo of Messrs. Cababé, naturalized British subjects.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 6, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 27th November ultimo from Mr. F. Reed, inclosing a memorial from Messrs. Peter and Paul Cababé, naturalized British subjects, stating the circumstances under which they have been defrauded by their clerk, Mr. Thomas Walsh, while conducting their house of business at Aleppo, and requesting that certain specific instructions may be sent to Her Majesty's Consul at that place in connection with that matter; and to request that I would report to your Lordship what steps it will be right and proper for Her Majesty's Government to take therein.

---

* Page 244.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the materials before me I cannot safely advise Her Majesty's Government how to proceed. At present there is nothing but the ex parte statement of the Messrs. Cababé to form an opinion upon. It must be remembered that Mr. Walsh is also a British subject, and that it would not be just to take the strong measures against him requested by Messrs. Cababé, without giving him an opportunity of making his own statement. I think Her Majesty's Government should at least require Her Majesty's Consul at Aleppo to make a report upon the whole subject to them before any proceedings are taken in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 300.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 9.)

BRAZIL.

Proceedings of Treasury at Bahia against two British commercial firms.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 8, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to that part of my Report of the 17th ultimo* on the proceedings of the authorities of Bahia against two British commercial firms in that city, in which I state that Mr. Christie's answer to Mr. Consul Morgan was not included with the papers sent to me, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro (No. 95, October 21, 1862), and a further despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bahia (No. 21, November 10, 1862), containing the answer in question, and a rejoinder from Mr. Morgan; and to request that I would report to your Lordship whether those additional papers induce me to alter or to modify my opinion as already given upon this subject.

Mr. Layard was pleased to inclose, for convenience of reference, Mr. Morgan's former despatch (No. 17, September 29).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is much to be lamented that the despatches of the Consul at Bahia and those of Her Majesty's Representative at Rio Janeiro upon one and the same subject, should have been sent home separately, and at different periods, as advice must, in such circumstances, necessarily be given upon an imperfect or fragmentary statement of facts.

The complaint of Mr. Christie upon this head appears to me well founded.

In the present instance, however, the subsequent statement of the case by Mr. Christie does not incline me to vary substantially the advice which I had the honour to offer upon the previous report of Mr. Consul Morgan alone.

The true question is, whether the Executive Government of the Brazils, being a party concerned in a purely commercial matter, unconnected with any fiscal considerations, has or has not arbitrarily interfered, upon the plea of privilege, to prevent a British subject from obtaining that justice which the proper tribunals —those which had due cognizance of the cause—had meted out to him.

That the Brazilian Government is not warranted in so doing, even by their municipal law, is a proposition common to the legal adviser of Mr. Christie, and to Mr. Morgan.

But that it has done so at Bahia, in the particular case of these merchants, is a fact established by the last despatch of Mr. Morgan,—an act of oppression the more unjustifiable because, as Mr. Christie shows, the illegality of it had been already formally pronounced by the Superior Tribunal at Pernambuco,—identical, I presume, with what Mr. Consul Morgan calls the High Court of the Relação.

---

* Page 282.

1862

It is suggested by Dr. Azendo, the Brazilian legal adviser of Mr. Christie, that these British subjects may appeal to a like Court in the province of Bahia, and that this Court will, perhaps, or probably, deliver a sentence in accordance with the Court at Pernambuco.

But I am of opinion that a foreign merchant ought not to be compelled to suffer the grievous delay and expense of a Brazilian Appeal Court, by reason of an act of the Government already judicially declared to be a variance with the law of the State, and which certainly conflicts with international comity and the received usages of civilized nations.

I think that Her Majesty's Representative may properly be instructed to interfere and protest against such proceedings, and to claim as a matter of plain right and justice that the judgment of the proper Municipal Court (the Court of Commerce) upon the subject be not prevented from taking effect, as it has been in these cases, by the arbitrary prohibition of the Government, whatever technical form or legal dress that prohibition may assume, or through whatever tribunal it may seek to carry it into effect.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 301.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 9.)

UNITED STATES.

Demand of Government of United States for redress for national and private injuries sustained by the acts of violence committed by the Confederate steamer "Alabama."

Temple, December 8, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th November ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a note which your Lordship had received from the United States' Minister at this Court, dated November 22, 1862, detailing certain acts of violence committed by the Confederate steamer "Alabama," and asking of Her Majesty's Government redress for the national and private injuries thereby sustained by the Government and citizens of the United States, as well as a more effective prevention of any repetition of such lawless and injurious proceedings in Her Majesty's ports hereafter as those complained of.

With this note Mr. Hammond transmitted to us a collection of papers, many of which had already been before us, respecting the "Alabama," while in the course of equipment, and during her stay in British waters; and also a volume containing, at the passages marked, the correspondence which passed between Mr. Hammond, then Her Majesty's Minister in the United States, and the American Government, to which Mr. Adams refers.

Mr. Hammond likewise inclosed a Mememorandum and other papers respecting the equipment in the ports of the United States, during the late war between this country and Russia, of vessels of war for the service of the Russian Government.

And he was to request that we would take these matters into our early consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion how far the requests of the Government of the United States for redress for past injuries done by the "Alabama," and for a more effective prevention of like injurious proceedings for the future, can be and ought to be complied with.

In case we should be of opinion that the latter request ought to be complied with, your Lordship desired to learn whether a new Act of Parliament would be required to enable Her Majesty's Government to do so, and in what manner such an Act might be framed.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th November and 3rd instant, inclosing to us further papers relative to this subject, including an extract from the President of the United States' Message to Congress in 1855, respecting the supply of arms to belligerents; and also a "Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States," with passages marked, which bore more or less on the question under consideration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these matters into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the first part of the demands made by the United States' Minister upon Her Majesty's Government, namely, compensation from Great Britain for damages inflicted by the Confederate steamer "Alabama" upon the United States' shipping, we are clearly of opinion that it is wholly unwarranted by the principles or precedents of international law.

If Great Britain had demanded compensation from the United States for the injuries continually inflicted upon the property of British subjects by the same vessel, on the ground that the United States claimed authority and jurisdiction over the Confederate States, who commissioned the steamer, the demand would not have been more unreasonable. Nor if the Confederate States were to demand compensation for the mischief accruing to them from the notoriously large export of arms and munitions of war from this country to New York.

In both cases the answer would be much the same.

To the complaint of the Confederate States Great Britain may reply, that with reference to the export of arms and munitions of war by subjects of Great Britain, from British ports, the ordinary municipal law of this country does not empower Her Majesty's Government to prohibit or interfere with such export; and that the permission of the export is not contrary to the Law of Nations, and affords no just ground of complaint to a belligerent. The authorities for this latter position are numerous and unconflicting; but it may suffice to refer to passages on the subject in the works of two American writers of high and admitted authority. The passages are as follows:—

1. "It is not the practice of nations to undertake to prohibit their own subjects, by previous laws, from trafficking in articles contraband of war. Such trade is carried on at the risk of those engaged in it, under the liabilities and penalties prescribed by the Law of Nations or particular Treaties. ("Wheaton's International Law," 6th edit., 1855, page 571: by Laurence.)

2. "It is a general understanding that the Powers at war may seize and confiscate all contraband goods without any complaint on the part of the neutral merchant, and without any imputation of a breach of neutrality in the neutral Sovereign himself. It was contended on the part of the French nation in 1796, that neutral Governments were bound to restrain their subjects from selling or exporting articles contraband of war to the belligerent Powers. But it was successfully shown, on the part of the United States, that neutrals may lawfully sell, at home, to a belligerent purchaser, or carry themselves to the belligerent Powers contraband articles, subject to the right of seizure in transitu. This right has since been explicitly declared by the judicial authorities of this country (United States . The right of the neutral to transport, and of the hostile Power to seize, are conflicting rights, and neither party can charge the other with a criminal act."—(Kent's "Commentaries," vol. i, p. 145. 8th Ed. 1854.)

In accordance with these principles the President's Message of 31st December, 1855, contains the following passage:—"In pursuance of this policy the laws of the United States do not forbid their citizens to sell to either of the belligerent Powers articles contraband of war, or take munitions of war or soldiers on board their private ships for transportation, and although in so doing the individual citizen exposes his property or person to some of the hazards of war, his acts do not involve any breach of national neutrality, nor of themselves implicate the Government."

To the complaint of the United States respecting the sailing of vessels from British ports for the use of the belligerent Confederates, Great Britain may well answer that the "Alabama," as Mr. Adams knows and admits, sailed not only without the direct authority or indirect permission of Her Majesty's Government, but in opposition to the municipal law and in spite of earnest endeavours made to enforce it.

These are circumstances not calculated to excite much surprise in the United States' Government, for two reasons; first, because their principal municipal law (passed almost at the same time as our own, and we believe after a full understanding between the two States) is in fact almost identical with that of Great Britain upon this subject; secondly, because its notorious evasion during the late war between Great Britain and her allies against Russia was the subject of frequent remonstrances on the part of Her Majesty's Representative at Washington to that Government.

Great Britain was then, as on other occasions, assured that every effort which the law would allow had been made to prevent such practices; that the United States' Government could only proceed upon legal evidence (the law as to which is almost, if not entirely, the same as in Great Britain); and upon such evidence no conviction could be procured.

1862

In the case of the "Alabama," it is not denied that strict orders were given for her detention as soon as it appeared to the Legal Advisers of Her Majesty's Government that the evidence might be sufficient to warrant them in advising such a course, and that the "Alabama" contrived to evade the execution of these orders.

With respect to the precedent cited by Mr. Adams from the demands of Great Britain upon the United States, soon after the breaking out of the French Revolutionary war, and the admission of the justice of these demands by the United States' Government, and the formal recognition of them in the VIIth Article of the Treaty of the 19th November, 1794, we have the honour to observe that an examination of the actual occurrences and of the history of that remarkable period presents a state of facts materially different from those relating to the "Alabama," and therefore requiring and having received the application of principles of law which, in that state of facts, sanctioned the demands for compensation made by the British Government.

The Revolutionary Government of France at that time openly avowed its determination to disregard all the principles of international law which had hitherto subsisted between civilized States, and proceeded to put into force its determination, among other ways, by claiming to equip, as a matter of right, and by actually equipping, privateers in the neutral ports of the United States, by sending them forth from those ports to prey upon British commerce, by bringing back prizes into the neutral ports, and then going through some forms, which they called adjudicating upon them.

This was the avowed system upon which belligerent France claimed to act, and by the temporary superiority of her naval force did, for a brief period, act in the neutral ports and waters of the United States, notwithstanding the remonstrances of the United States' Government.

These facts of open and deliberate equipment of privateers by the French, and of the capture by them of British vessels in the waters of the United States, and of their bringing them, when captured, into the ports of the United States, formed collectively the basis of the demands made by the British Plenipotentiaries.

Great Britain did not then complain of an accidental evasion of the municipal law by a particular ship, but of the systematic disregard of international law upon all the most important points of neutral obligation.

This is apparent from the whole correspondence of our Ministry with the Government of the United States at that time; and, indeed, from the replies alone which Mr. Jefferson sent to Mr. Hammond.*

With respect to the second question put to us, namely, whether some improvement may not be made in our existing law, whereby the hands of Her Majesty's Government may be strengthened.

This object, if necessary, could only be effected in one of two ways:—

(1.) By an entirely new statute.

(2.) By an amendment of the present Foreign Enlistment Act.

We are of opinion that it would not be expedient to adopt the former remedy.

But we incline to the opinion that some words might be added to the sections of the present Foreign Enlistment Act, which would have the effect of giving greater power to the Executive to prevent the construction of ships in our ports destined for the use of belligerents.

We think, however, that Her Majesty's Government, if they think fit to propose to Parliament such an alteration, should previously confer with the Government of the United States, and ascertain whether that Government is ready to make similar alterations in its own Foreign Enlistment Act; and that the amendments, like the original statutes, should proceed pari passu, as it were, in both countries.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See (X.) Letter from President Jefferson to Mr. Hammond, Philadelphia, August 7, 1793; (D.) From same to same, September 9, 1793; (E.) From Mr. Hammond to the President, Philadelphia, September 12, 1793; (G.) From the President to Mr. Hammond, Philadelphia, September 5, 1793; which speaks of excluding "French privateers" from all "further asylum in our ports."

No. 302.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 11.)

CHINA.

Proposed measures for preventing Chinese insurgents from obtaining arms and military stores from Hong Kong and Singapore.

My Lord, Temple, December 9, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a letter from Sir Hercules Robinson commenting upon the measures proposed to be taken at Hong Kong for preventing the Chinese insurgents from obtaining arms and military stores from that port; and to request that we would take this letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this letter into consideration, and beg to report—

That we are, of course, unable to decide whether the opinion of Mr. Bruce or of Sir H. Robinson be well founded as to the supply of arms to the Taepings from Hong Kong.

But assuming the fact to be that arms are so supplied, we think that the Governor of Hong Kong should exert his authority for the suppression of the traffic by the issue of a prohibitory Ordinance, and by endeavouring to enforce it; and we should hope that those endeavours, aided by the Order to be issued by Mr. Bruce, might abate the evil complained of. At all events such a course would evince to the Chinese Government the sincerity of our desire to deter British subjects from affording aid to the rebels.

We see no reason why a similar course should not be adopted at Singapore.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 303.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 11.)

MEXICO.

Notification of port of Tampico being forthwith open to neutral vessels.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 10, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th December instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 5th December instant,* in which I was of opinion that it would be proper to publish in the Gazette the letter of Vice-Admiral Jurien to Captain Tatham notifying that the port of Tampico would forthwith be open to all neutral vessels, he was directed to return to me the papers which accompanied Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant,† and to request that I would prepare the requisite notice for the Gazette containing Vice-Admiral Jurien's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have prepared a draft notification of the relaxation of the blockade at the port of Tampico, which I herewith annex to this Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 303.

Draft Notification.

Foreign Office, December , 1862.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Consul at Vera Cruz information that the Admiral in command of the naval forces of His Majesty the Emperor of the French duly notified on the 8th September last to Captain Tatham, of Her Majesty's ship "Phaeton," that the port of Tampico would forthwith be open to all neutral vessels, provided they had no contraband of war on board, or passengers endeavouring to land for hostile purpose.

---

* Page 304.

† Earl Cowley, No. 1,270; Consul Gifford, No. 16.

The aforesaid letter of Admiral Jurien is as follows:—

(Copy in French and English.)

No. 304.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 12.)

PERU.

Disposal of the property of the late S. W. Ellis.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 10, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 7th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires in Peru (No. 85), calling attention to some questions which have arisen regarding the disposal of the property of the late S. W. Ellis, a British subject; and to request that I would communicate to your Lordship any observations which I may have to make on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears, by the concluding part of Mr. Consul Barton's despatch, that the person appointed by him to examine the deceased's papers has been permitted to do so; and as the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs appears, at the request of Mr. Consul Barton, to have sent proper directions to the Judge, it does not seem to me that there is at present any necessity for the interference of Her Majesty's Government. Mr. Consul Barton appears to have acted very properly in the matter.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 305.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received December 13.)

DENMARK.

Draft of Treaty for the marriage of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales with Her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra.

My Lord, Temple, December 12, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of a Treaty between Her Majesty and the King of Denmark, for the marriage of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales with Her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra, eldest daughter of His Royal Highness the Prince Christian of Denmark, and to request that we would take the same into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship, with the least possible delay, whether we saw any objection thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have taken the said Draft Treaty into our consideration, and are of opinion that it is properly framed, and that there is no objection thereto.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 306.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 15.)

NEW GRANADA.

Right of New Granada to take refugees from on board British mail-steamer "Avon."

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 13, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter which your Lordship received from the Admiralty, inclosing copy of a despatch from the Admiral commanding on the American and West Indian station, relative to the state of affairs in New Granada.

That it appears from one of the inclosures in the Admiral's despatch, that certain political refugees, one of them the ex-President of the Republic of New Granada, embarked at Carthagena on board the British mail-steamer "Avon," as passengers for St. Thomas; that on the arrival of the steamer at Colon, intelligence reached the Governor of Panamá that those persons were on board; that, in consequence, the Governor came across the Isthmus with a party of soldiers in order to take the persons in question out of the mail-steamer, but that his object was defeated by those persons having been previously transferred from the steamer to Her Majesty's ship "Orlando," there to remain until the "Avon" continued her voyage to St. Thomas.

That the captain of Her Majesty's ship "Orlando" expresses an opinion that if the Governor of Panama had gone on board the mail-steamer with an armed force to take out the refugees, it would have been a breach of Article III of the Postal Convention with New Granada of the 24th May, 1847 (Hertslet, vol. viii, page 767), which stipulates that the British mail-steamers "shall be considered and treated as ships of war, and shall be entitled to the same honours and privileges as ships of war."

That upon this subject two questions arise:—

1st. Whether the Convention is or is not in force?

That the Convention was to last five years from the exchange of the ratifications; either party being at liberty to give at the end of the first four years, a year's notice for its termination; if no notice were given, it would continue for a second period of five years, and so on.

That Her Majesty's Government being desirous to obtain the abolition or reduction of the heavy transit rate payable to New Granada under Article XX of the Convention, for mere leave to send the British mails across the Isthmus of Panamá, gave notice in 1856 for the termination of the Convention at the end of the second period of five years, i. e., on the 17th December, 1857.

That finding, however, that the New Granadian Government, were willing to enter into negotiations for a new Convention, Her Majesty's Government consented to continue the Convention of 1847 temporarily, until the new one should be concluded; and that the New Granadian Minister in London was accordingly empowered by his Government to negotiate with the British Post Office, and on the 24th December, 1849, he signed a new Convention with the Postmaster-General.

That the New Granadian Government, however, refused to ratify that Convention, and Her Majesty's Government, after having exhausted every effort to induce them to do so, and believing that they should never obtain a satisfactory arrangement so long as they continued to pay the transit rate, under Article XX of the Convention of 1847, informed the Granadian Government that after the 31st December, 1861, no further payments on that account would be made, unless they ratified the Convention of 1859, or unless payment of the transit rate was enforced upon the mails of the United States, for which the Government of the United States had for many years refused to pay anything beyond the charge made by the Railway Company for their transport. That the temporary continuance of the Convention of 1847 was not, however, in other respects expressly terminated, because the Convention relates to other matters besides the transit rate, which it was not desirable to leave unprotected by a Conventional arrangement.

That in this state the question still remains.

2ndly. That whether, assuming that the Convention remains in force, the stipulation of the IIIrd Article which has been quoted will bear the construction put upon it by the captain of the "Orlando," the whole scope of the Convention being the Post Office service between the British dominions and New Granada?

That your Lordship requested I would take these questions into my consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that, upon general principles applicable to the construction and obligation of Treaties, this Postal Convention between Great Britain and New Granada cannot be considered as in force since the 31st December, 1861.

1862

The term originally fixed for the duration of the Treaty expired in 1857. It has been since continued by the consent of both parties to it; but Great Britain having given formal notice that after the 31st December, 1861, she would no longer fulfil the engagements contained in a very important Article of the Treaty, and New Granada having given no consent to this material alteration, it would, unless there be other qualifying circumstances, cease, from the above-mentioned date, to be binding upon New Granada.

It may be, however, that New Granada may have done some act or acts, or made some admissions or declarations, whereby she has bound herself still to observe, until some further arrangement take place, the other engagements of the original Treaty, although the XXth Article be abandoned by Great Britain.

It would require a careful consideration of what may have been actually written, said, or done by New Granada since the 31st December, 1861, to pronounce an opinion upon this point. In the papers now before me I have not sufficient evidence that she has consented to keep alive the Treaty and to give up Article XX.

Upon the second point, namely, whether the words in the IIIrd Article, "they shall be considered and treated as ships of war, and shall be entitled to the same honours and privileges as ships of war," did or did not confer upon these postal steamers the right of immunity from visit and search in the ports of New Granada enjoyed by Her Majesty's ships of war, I am of opinion that they did confer this privilege, and that the Captain of the "Orlando" has put a right construction on this language.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 307.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 18.)

TURKEY.

Fair draft of new Order in Council for the regulation of British Consular jurisdiction in dominions of Ottoman Porte.

Doctors' Commons, December 17, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers, dated the 3rd instant,* respecting the draft of an amended Order in Council on the subject of jurisdiction in the Levant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a fair copy of that draft,† as approved by the Law Officers, and to call my attention to certain alterations which have since been made in it, and which I should find at pages 2, 3, 6, and 19, Sections 1, 4, 17, and 62.

That the alteration in Section 1 consists in making the date at which the Order shall come into effect the 1st of March instead of the 1st of January, it not being likely that Her Majesty will hold a Council so as to admit of the Order coming into operation on the 1st of January as originally intended.

That the alteration in Section 4 consists in the reproduction in the clauses 2 and 3 of the provisions respecting jurisdiction over Ionians contained in Clause 61 of the Order of August 27, 1860, and in the exemption, in Clause 1, of Ionians from trial by jury in civil cases (except in so far as other foreigners are to be subject to it), and from the obligation to serve on juries in civil cases.

That it is thought necessary to retain these clauses during the settlement of the Atto di Governo which I had lately had before me, and the Report on which has been communicated to the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department.

That the alterations in Sections 17 and 62 are merely adaptations of dates to the altered period at which this Order is to come into effect.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these alterations into consideration, either with or without communication with the Attorney and Solicitor-General, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether there is any objection to their being inserted in the Order.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

---

* Page 303.

† For Order in Council of January 9, 1863, as laid before Parliament, see "Order in Council and Correspondence respecting the Administration of Justice in the Ottoman Empire," presented to both Houses, March 16, 1863.

That taking into consideration the reasons alleged for the retention of the clauses in question, I do not think there is any objection to their insertion in the Order in Council.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 308.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 19.)

TUNIS.

Convention with Government of Tunis to enable British subjects to hold real property in Tunis.

Temple, December 18, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th November ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis,* respecting an arrangement proposed to be entered into between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Tunis, for the purpose of enabling British subjects to hold real property in that Regency; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the terms of this proposed arrangement.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and beg to report—

That we are of opinion that, with the alterations proposed by us, and appended to certain articles of the instrument, this Convention is proper to be carried into effect.

We desire, however, to draw especial attention to the effect of one of our suggested alterations, namely, that which relates to the succession to immoveable (or real) property in the case of intestacy. The effect will be to place that succession under the same law and conditions as the succession to moveable (or personal) property. We have inferred from the VIIth and VIIIth Articles that this is in accordance with the intention of those who framed the Convention.

But it is most desirable that it should be ascertained that we have rightly interpreted the wishes, in this particular matter, of the British merchants, or others, who are interested in the execution of this Convention with the Tunisian Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 309.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 20.)

UNITED STATES.

Proposed Convention of claims between Great Britain and United States.

Temple, December 18, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th November ultimo, stating that in the year 1853 a Convention was concluded between Her Majesty and the United States of America, providing for the settlement of all claims of either party upon the other, arising out of any transaction of a date prior to the exchange of the ratifications of the Convention, by means of a Mixed Commission.

That that Convention worked well in practice, and effected a final settlement of a large number of claims, some of which had for many years been the subject of discussion between the British and United States' Governments.

That since the breaking out of the civil war, Her Majesty's Government have found it necessary to prefer claims upon the Government of the United States on account of injuries sustained by British subjects. Some of those claims the American Government have refused to admit, and there appears little or no hope of their ever being settled, unless by a process similar to that adopted in

---

* Mr. Wood, Nos. 28 and 33; to Mr. Wood, No. 7.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS
1862

1853, for the extinction of the claims then outstanding between the two Governments.

That your Lordship therefore proposed to the Government of the United States to conclude a Convention similar to that of 1853, applicable to all claims arising out of any transaction subsequent to the exchange of the ratifications of the Convention of 1853, and prior to the exchange of the ratifications of the Convention thus proposed. Your Lordship suggested, however, that the Arbitrator should be named by the two Governments, instead of by the Commissioners as in 1853, the latter course having then been found inconvenient.

That the Government of the United States have assented to your Lordship's proposal generally, but have expressed a desire that the Commission should sit at Washington instead of London, and suggest an addition to the IIIrd Article, whereby all claims which may be pending in a Court of Justice of either party, during the time stipulated for the duration of the Commission, should be excepted from the consideration of the Commissioners.

But if this addition be agreed to, it seems to your Lordship that it would, on the other hand, become necessary to add a provision to Article V, in order to prevent claims which would be excepted from the cognizance of the Commission, under the clause proposed to be added by the United States' Government, from being irrevocably barred under the general terms of Article V.

That it seems to your Lordship, also, that it would be prudent to except from the consideration of the Commission any claims arising out of a case such as that of the "Blanche," which was recently destroyed by an American cruizer on the coast of Cuba, in which a third Power complains of violation of territory, and has already made such complaint to the Government of either Contracting Party.

Your Lordship has, moreover, doubts as to the prudence, under present circumstances, of extinguishing absolutely, as was done in 1853, all claims whatever arising out of any transaction prior to the exchange of the ratifications, and is disposed to press for the insertion of words reserving from being finally barred any claims which the two Governments may by common consent think to be proper to be decided by the Commission.

That the inclosed printed copy of the Convention of 1853 contains in black ink the alterations made by your Lordship before proposing it to the United States' Government, in order to adapt it to the present time; and in red ink the alterations desired by that Government. The further alterations which seem to your Lordship to be expedient are contained in the manuscript attached to the printed copy.

That your Lordship directed Mr. Hammond to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion upon the whole subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That we are of opinion that it would be expedient that, at the proper time, Her Majesty's Government should enter into such a Convention as is now submitted to our consideration, with the United States of America. That we presume that Her Majesty's Government are satisfied, upon good grounds, that at the present moment the proposal made by your Lordship to Mr. Adams, and the acceptance, in substance, of that proposal by him, should be carried into effect.

It appears to us that for this object the Convention, with the proposed additions, and with an alteration which we have suggested in the proposed addition to the Vth Article, is well adapted.

It would of course, for obvious reasons, be desirable that the Commission should sit at London, and not at Washington; but we do not think that such a condition should be considered as indispensable, or be allowed to prevent the execution of the Convention.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 310.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 20.)

CHINA.

Draft Order in Council to enable British subjects to enter the military and naval service of China.

My Lord, Temple, December 18, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to call our attention to Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 30th August, sanctioning the entrance of British subjects into the naval and military service of the Emperor of China; and with reference to that Order he was to state that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that it is an object of great European interest that the Taepings should be put down, and the Chinese Government be strengthened; but that this result can hardly be obtained by any other means than by drilling, organizing, and rendering efficient a sufficient number of Chinese troops; that it appears to Her Majesty's Government that, with this view it would be desirable to place at the disposal of the Chinese Government a number of British officers, who should have command, according to their respective ranks, over such troops; their pay and all other expenses connected with their employment being exclusively provided for by the Chinese Government.

That the point, therefore, on which your Lordship would desire to have our opinion, and that at our earliest convenience, is, whether the Order in Council to which he (Mr. Hammond) called our attention, is sufficient to admit of British military officers entering into and being employed in the service of the Chinese Government, or whether a further Order of Her Majesty in Council would be required to give effect to the course which in this respect Her Majesty's Government are prepared forthwith to adopt.

If we should be of opinion that a further Order is required, he (Mr. Hammond) was to request that we would cause a draft thereof to be prepared, to be submitted for Her Majesty's sanction at the first Council that may be held by Her Majesty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter and the points submitted to us into consideration, and beg to report—

That we have prepared the Draft Order in Council, which is annexed to this Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 310.

Draft Order in Council.

AT the Court at Windsor, the 30th day of August, 1862;

Present:

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS by an Act passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to prevent the Enlisting or Engagement of His Majesty's Subjects to serve in Foreign Service, and the fitting out or equipping in His Majesty's Dominions Vessels for Warlike Purposes, without His Majesty's Licence," it was enacted and declared that if any natural-born subject of His Majesty, His heirs or successors, without the leave or license of His Majesty, His heirs and successors, for that purpose first had and obtained, under the Sign-Manual of His Majesty, His heirs or successors, or signified by Order in Council, or by Proclamation of His Majesty, His heirs or successors, should take or accept, or should agree to take or accept, any Military Commission, or should otherwise enter into the military service as a commissioned or non-commissioned officer, or should enlist or enter himself to enlist, or should agree to enlist or to enter himself to serve as a soldier, or to be employed, or should serve in any warlike or military operation, in the service of or for or under or in aid of any foreign Prince, State, Potentate, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, or of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise the powers of government in or over any foreign Country, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, either as an officer or soldier, or in any other military capacity; or if any natural-born subject of His Majesty should, without such leave or license as aforesaid, accept, or agree to take or accept, any Commission, Warrant, or Appointment as an officer, or should enlist or enter himself, or should agree to enlist or enter himself, to serve as a sailor or marine, or to be employed or engaged, or should serve in and on board any ship or vessel of war, or in and on board any ship or vessel used or fitted out, or equipped or intended to be used, for any warlike purpose, in the service of or for or under or in aid of any foreign Power, Prince, State, Potentate, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, or of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise the powers of government in or over any foreign Country, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People; or if any natural-born subject of His Majesty should, without such leave and license as aforesaid, engage, contract, or agree to go, or should go to any foreign State, Country, Colony, Province, or part of any Province, or to any place beyond the seas, with an intent or in order to enlist or enter himself to serve, or with intent to serve in any warlike or military operation whatever, whether by land or by sea, in the service of, or for, or under, or in aid of any foreign Prince, State, Potentate, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, or in the service of, or for, or under, or in aid of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise the powers of government in or over any foreign Country, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, either as an officer or a soldier, or in any other military capacity, or as an officer, or sailor, or marine, in any such ship or vessel as aforesaid, although no enlisting money, or pay, or reward, should have been or should be, in any or either of the cases aforesaid, actually paid to or received by him, or by any person to or for his use or benefit; or if any person whatever, within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in any part of His Majesty's dominions elsewhere, or in any Country, Colony, Settlement, Island, or place belonging to or subject to His Majesty, should hire, retain, engage, or procure, or should attempt or endeavour to hire, retain, engage, or procure, any person or persons whatever to enlist, or to enter or engage to enlist, or to serve or to be employed in any such service or employment as aforesaid, as an officer, soldier, sailor, or marine, either in land or sea service, for or under or in aid of any foreign Prince, State, Potentate, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, or for or under or in aid of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise any powers of government as aforesaid, or to go, or to agree to go, or embark from any part of His Majesty's dominions, for the purpose, or with intent to be so enlisted, entered, engaged, or employed as aforesaid, whether any enlisting money, pay, or reward should have been, or should be actually given or received, or not;—in any or either of such cases every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and upon being convicted thereof, upon any information or indictment, should be punishable by fine and imprisonment, as in the said Act is mentioned:

1862

And that if any person within any part of the United Kingdom, or in any part of His Majesty's dominions beyond the seas, should, without the leave and license of His Majesty for that purpose first had and obtained as aforesaid, equip, furnish, fit out, or arm, or attempt or endeavour to equip, furnish, fit out, or arm, or procure to be equipped, furnished, fitted out, or armed, or should knowingly aid, assist, or be concerned in the equipping, furnishing, fitting out, or arming of any ship or vessel, with intent or in order that such ship or vessel should be employed in the service of any foreign Prince, State, or Potentate, or of any foreign Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, or of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise any powers of government in or over any foreign State, Colony, Province, or part of any Province or People, as a transport or store-ship, or with intent to cruize or commit hostilities against any Prince, State, or Potentate, or against the subjects or citizens of any Prince, State, or Potentate, or against the persons exercising or assuming to exercise the powers of government in any Colony, Province, or part of any Province or Country, or against the inhabitants of any foreign Colony, Province, or part of any Province or Country, with whom His Majesty should not then be at war; or should, within the United Kingdom, or any of His Majesty's dominions, or in any Settlement, Colony, Territory, Island, or place belonging or subject to His Majesty, issue or deliver any Commission for any ship or vessel, to the intent that such ship or vessel should be employed as aforesaid, every such person so offending should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and should, upon conviction thereof, upon any information or indictment, be punished by fine and imprisonment, or either of them, at the discretion of the Court in which such offender should be convicted; and every such ship or vessel, with the tackle, apparel, and furniture, together with all the materials, arms, ammunition, and stores which may belong to or be on board of any such ship or vessel, should be forfeited; and it should be lawful for any officer of His Majesty's Customs or Excise, or any officer of His Majesty's navy, who is by law empowered to make seizures for any forfeiture incurred under any of the laws of Customs or Excise, or the laws of trade and navigation, to seize such ships and vessels aforesaid, and in such places and in such manner in which the officers of His Majesty's Customs or Excise and the officers of His Majesty's navy are respectively to make seizures under the laws of Customs or Excise, or under the laws of trade and navigation; and that every such ship and vessel, with the tackle, apparel, and furniture, together with all the materials, arms, ammunition, and stores, which may belong to or be on board of such ship or vessel, may be prosecuted and condemned in the like manner and in such Courts as ships or vessels may be prosecuted and condemned for any breach of the laws made for the protection of the revenues of Customs and Excise, or of the laws of trade and navigation:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, being desirous of enabling Her subjects to engage in and enter the naval and military service of the Emperor of China, is pleased to Order, and it is hereby Ordered, that from and after the first day of September next, it shall be lawful for Horatio Nelson Lay, one of Her Majesty's subjects, and Sherard Osborn, a Captain in Her Majesty's Navy, to enter into the military and naval service of the said Emperor, and to accept any Commission, Warrant, or other appointment under the said Emperor, and to accept any money, pay, or reward for their services, and to fit out, equip, purchase, and acquire ships or vessels of war for the use of the said Emperor, and to engage and enlist British subjects to enter the military and naval service of the said Emperor.

And it is hereby further Ordered, that it shall be lawful for every British subject to enlist and enter himself by engaging and enlisting himself with the said Horatio Nelson Lay and Sherard Osborn, and no other person or persons whatsoever, in the military and naval service of the said Emperor, and to serve the said Emperor in any military, warlike, or other operations, either by land or by sea, and for that purpose to go to any place or places beyond the seas, and to accept any Commission, Warrant, or other appointment from or under the said Emperor, and to accept any money, pay, or reward for his service: Provided always, that the license and permission hereby given shall be in force only for the term of two years from the said first day of September next, unless, by Order in Council made in manner aforesaid, such period should be further extended.

(Signed) ARTHUR HELPS.

No. 311.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 31.)

UNITED STATES.

Condemnation of the "Lilla," by the Prize Court at Boston. Request of Mr. G. R. Bushby for support of British Government in his appeal to the Supreme Court.

Doctors' Commons, December 20, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th December instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 2nd of August last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith, together with the previous papers, a further letter, dated the 11th December instant, from Mr. G. R. Bushby, reporting the condemnation by the Prize Court at Boston of his vessel, the "Lilla," and stating the grounds on which he trusts that Her Majesty's Government will support an appeal to the Supreme Court which he has caused to be entered against this decision, and will demand the restitution of his ship.

---

* Page 195.

1862

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to send me a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 455), inclosing a copy of Judge Sprague's decision in the case, and he was to request that I would take Mr. Bushby's application into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken Mr. Bushby's application into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere in this case upon the ground that the vessel was captured within British waters.

The master in his protest originally placed the capture beyond three miles from the shore off Abaco, and the Prize Court would be warranted in considering this evidence as conclusive upon the point.

It was quite within the legitimate province of the jurisdiction of the Prize Court to inquire into the facts of the bonâ fide transfer of the "Lilla" from a belligerent to a neutral during the war.

The absence of proof that Mr. Bushby was an actual purchaser for value, and the fact that the old captain was on board, and exercising a sort of command, occasionally at least, were circumstances calculated to excite just suspicion.

It is proper to state, however, that I see with grave alarm the refusal of the Judge of the Federal Court to recognize the authority of the Confederate Prize Court in its relations to neutral States. The mischief and the injustice of such a course is manifest. Such a decision may go a long way to justify those proceedings of the "Alabama" of which the Federal States have so bitterly complained.

It is very possible that the Court of Appeal will admit the further proofs refused by Judge Sprague, and will reverse the sentence, as it has very recently reversed one elaborate decision of the inferior Court.

If the Court of Appeal should, however, sustain this sentence, it may deserve consideration whether Her Majesty's Government should or should not tender a remonstrance upon the whole case to the United States' Government.

In the meanwhile directions should be given to watch the proceedings in the Appeal Court, and to facilitate in every way, short of direct interference, the prosecution of the appeal.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 312.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 24.)

TURKEY.

Consular protection claimed by Mr. Sophocles Theologo, a naturalized British subject, for his agent, Mr. Xenophon Theologo, at Galatz.

Doctors' Commons, December 22, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office, Mr. Sophocles Theologo, a naturalized British subject, and Her Majesty's Consul at Galatz,* relative to Consular protection claimed by his agent at Galatz, Mr. Xenophon Theologo, but refused by Mr. Ward.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of the Circular Instructions to Her Majesty's Consuls of January 8, 1851, referred to by Mr. Consul Ward as bearing him out in refusing, without further instructions, to afford Consular protection to Mr. Sophocles Theologo's agent, together with drafts of answers which your Lordship proposes to return to Mr. Ward and Mr. Sophocles Theologo upon this subject.

And with reference to the Report of the late Queen's Advocate of the 18th August, 1852, Mr. Hammond was to request that I would, at my earliest convenience, report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether the proposed drafts of answers are right and proper.

---

* Mr. Theologo, October 29, 1861; to Mr. Theologo, November 11, 1861; to Consul Ward, No. 7, November 14, 1861; Consul Ward, No. 3, January 14, 1862; Mr. Theologo, July 14 and November 24, 1862.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the proposed drafts of answers are right and proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 313.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 24.)

RUSSIA.

Request of Mr. L. Galèa of Odessa to know what steps he should take to legitimatize a natural child.

Doctors' Commons, December 23, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Odessa (No. 39), inclosing a letter from Mr. Laurent Galèa, a British subject, requesting to be informed what steps he can take towards legitimatizing a natural child; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to what answer should be returned to Mr. Galèa's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken Mr. Galèa's application into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am unable to point out any process through the agency of which the child of Mr. Laurent Galèa can be legitimatized in England. Possibly there may be less difficulty in procuring his legitimatization in Russia, where Mr. Galèa appears to be domiciled. The doctrines of the civil and canon law which are admitted into the laws of some countries, as to adoption and legitimacy, are unknown to the law of England; and indeed I do not know the law of any European country by which the issue of an unmarried woman could be rendered the legitimate child of parents, one of whom was a woman, not the mother of, but married to the father of the child.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 314.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 24.)

UNITED STATES.

Capture of the "Ann Sophia" for alleged intention of running blockade of Wilmington.

Doctors' Commons, December 23, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship' commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 30th of October* upon the case of the "Ann Sophia," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 464, November 28), inclosing a copy of the letter in which Mr. Seward had acknowledged the receipt of the representation addressed to him in this case; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Mr. Seward's observations with regard to the acknowledgment made by the captain of the "Ann Sophia" should be accepted as sufficient.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken Mr. Seward's letter, together with the other papers, into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Seward generally upon this case is satisfactory, and that his observations with regard to the acknowledgment made by the captain of the "Ann Sophia" should be accepted as sufficient.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 262.

1862

No. 315.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

UNITED STATES.

Act of the Legislature of Virginia regulating the issue of licenses to trade in that State.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 26, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, therewith, two despatches from Lord Lyons, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (Nos. 272 and 470), respecting an Act passed by the Legislature of Virginia regulating the issue of licenses to trade within that State, and he was to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it was competent to the Legislature of Virginia to pass the Act in question, though I think it might be open to some expostulation on the part of Her Majesty's Government as to the severity of its effect upon neutral subjects.

It seems, however, to be a measure of supposed self-defence in time of war, and that an interval, however short, is allowed to elapse before it comes into practical effect; I am of opinion, therefore, that it founds no just cause of complaint as a direct violation of international law.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 316.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

TURKEY.

Claim advanced by the Porte to right of search in the Strait of Prevesa and in the Gulf of Arta, and to confiscate munitions of war found on board foreign vessels.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 26, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 91 of the 25th November, and No. 105 of the 3rd of December), inclosing copies of his correspondence with Aali Pasha, the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, on the subject of a claim advanced by the Porte to exercise the right of search in the Strait of Prevesa and in the Gulf of Arta, and to confiscate munitions of war found on board vessels in those waters.

That the Treaty between Greece and Turkey of July $\frac{9}{21}$, 1832, which is referred to by Mr. Erskine, will be found in State Papers, vol. xxii, page 934; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report my opinion as to the right of the Porte to exercise such jurisdiction in regard to British vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the language of the Treaty, namely,—"Thus the shore of the Gulf of Arta to the north and west of the point where the boundary line meets its waters, will be retained by the Ottoman Empire; and the shore of the gulf to the south and west of the line is assigned to the State of Greece, with the exception of the Fort of Punta," I am clearly of opinion that the first proposition of the Porte to visit all vessels entering the Straits of Prevesa and the Gulf of Arta was illegal. The amended proposition, as it appears in the letter of the Turkish Minister, namely, that this visit will be only exercised upon vessels "destinés pour les seules côtes de la Turquie sur le Détroit de Priveza et le Golfe d'Arta," is also not free from grave objection, though Mr. Erskine's rendering of these words—"only to vessels touching some part of the coast belonging to Turkey"—would contain a proposition against which no reasonable exception could in the circumstances be taken by Her Majesty's Government. But it should be clearly stated and understood that the Porte does not profess to exercise any jurisdiction of the sort, except as to vessels actually anchoring in, and not merely passing over, Turkish waters.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 317.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

SPAIN.

Claim of Spanish Consul-General at Odessa to compensation for the destruction, during the Crimean war, of his property near Kertch.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 26, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that with reference to the Reports of my predecessor, dated January 24, March 26, October 28, and November 2, 1857, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note from the Spanish Minister at this Court, dated the 1st December instant, again calling attention to the claim of the Spanish Consul-General at Odessa to be compensated for the destruction, during the Crimean war, of property belonging to him near Kertch; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take Señor Gonzales' note into consideration, together with the previous correspondence, as marked in the accompanying volumes, and that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Señor Gonzales.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken Señor Gonzales' note, together with the previous correspondence, into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise that an answer be returned to Señor Gonzales by Her Majesty's Government to the following tenour and effect:—

That the claim of the Spanish Government on behalf of the Spanish owner is put forth as a claim founded upon international right and justice.

That such a claim, whether considered (1) as an abstract question of law, or (2) as clothed with the particular circumstances of the case, appears to Her Majesty's Government equally inadmissible.

1. With respect to the abstract question of law:—

The principle of international jurisprudence which considers the immoveable property of a neutral, situate in the country of the belligerent, as being subject to the same exigencies of war as the immoveable property of the belligerent himself, is a principle well founded upon the practice and usage of States, upon the reason of the thing, and is supported by the opinions of accredited writers.

So far as the abstract question of law is concerned, Her Majesty's Government must now, as hitherto, take their stand upon this principle, and refuse to be driven from it by speculative refinements as to what ought to be, rather than what is, the international law upon the subject.

It is clear that endless difficulties might arise from the contrary doctrine.

The neutral may have mortgaged his property, wholly or in part, to the belligerent, or he may have only that fiduciary relation to it which in the English system of law is represented by a trustee who has the legal or nominal, while the person for whom he is trustee has the equitable or beneficial, title to the property.

It would be imposible that the belligerent should, flagrante bello, inquire into the character of the title to the property which is in the territory of the enemy. The neutral by choosing to reside and purchase land in that territory identifies himself with it, and with its fortunes. Moreover, the belligerent can have no security that the property of the neutral, with or without his consent, may not be used by the Ruler of the territory (who has over it what jurists call dominium eminens), as it actually was in this very instance, "as a strategic measure" (to borrow the expression of the Russian Commander) against him. And if the British Commander, having reasons to believe that the enemy would use the farm and its provisions for their benefit, and therefore to his detriment, had done what he did not do, namely, ordered its destruction, he would have acted according to the necessary and recognized rules of war, and subjected his Government to no claim for restitution or indemnity.

Upon the same principle, if the Spanish Consul had possessed a mercantile establishment at Sebastopol, and it had been destroyed by the bombardment of British cannon, he would not have been entitled to reparation. Upon the same principle, Her Majesty's Government refused to a British subject, Mr. Platt, compensation for the destruction of his valuable machinery at Kertch, though he had endeavoured to place himself under the protection of Her Majesty's forces.

The analogies of recognized and undisputed Maritime Prize Law support the same doctrine. If the Spanish Consul's merino sheep, and the straw which was to feed them, had been taken on board a Russian ship in the Straits of Yenikale, they would unquestionably have been condemned as enemy's property. Why? Because the neutral, although a Consul, had incorporated himself with the trade of the belligerent, and his property was pro hâc vice to be treated as that of the belligerent.

1862

But the reason applies with much greater force upon every principle, both of policy and jurisprudence, to landed property of the neutral, which is physically as well as politically inseparable from the country of the belligerent.

2. If Her Majesty's Government consider this case, not in the abstract, but clothed with all its circumstances, they are equally indisposed to accede to the demand of the Spanish Government.

Upon this point it would be almost sufficient to refer to the former despatches of Her Majesty's Government.

It must be repeated that it appears from General Mitchel's report to Her Majesty's Government, that while the farm had been partly destroyed "as a strategic measure" directed by Russia against Great Britain and her allies, and by a conflagration so extensive that it is doubtful whether any considerable farm-building remained upon it, and while it had been also plundered by the Turks, the British Commander, on the other hand, so far from ordering or sanctioning any destruction or rapine, had purchased and paid for the forage on the farm, 642*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* by a contract of December 10, 1855, and had, as it is admitted, given strict orders to his troops to abstain from injuring the property.

The evidence which Her Majesty's Government have received, both upon the general injury done to the farm, and as to the special injury alleged to have been done to what remained of it after the Declaration of Peace, differs materially from that adduced by Señor Gonzales.

This discrepancy, and the insuperable difficulty of ascertaining the exact truth, and circumstances necessarily incident to such a peculiar claim, serve to illustrate the good sense of the rule of law which refuses to entertain it.

Lastly. The fact that the Government of Turkey has been pleased (perhaps upon grounds of facts not applicable to or admitted by Her Majesty's Government) to send a sum of money to Señor Boquer y Rivas, does not induce Her Majesty's Government to sanction the introduction of a new principle, fraught with grave consequences, into the international relations of States. Still less is Her Majesty's Government induced to do so by the example of Russia in this particular instance.

The conduct of Russia in this matter is, however, by no means unimportant in its legal bearing upon the question. It demonstrates that the question truly stated is one which appertains to the public law of Russia, and not to the law of nations. It may well be that the former law indemnifies those subjects, native or temporary, whose property has on account of the general interests of the State suffered either from the exigencies of the State itself, or at the hands of the enemy; but upon this very account the enemy cannot be called upon to repair the damage on the ground that the property was neutral.

For these, among other reasons, Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that they ought to adhere to the opinion expressed in their former despatches upon this subject, of March 31, 1857, and of November 11 in the same year, and regret that they are unable to accede to the claim preferred on behalf of the Spanish Consul by the Spanish Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 318.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

SPAIN.

Claim of Collector of Customs at Barcelona to take charge of the sale of the wreck of a British vessel.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 27, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 394), reporting that the Collector of Customs at Barcelona has claimed the right to take charge of the sale of the wreck of a British vessel to the exclusion of Her Majesty's Consul, who has hitherto had the direction of such sales.

That Her Majesty's Government were informed last year, in a despatch which Mr. Hammond also transmitted to me, that it was the intention of the Spanish authority to adopt such a course; but Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires having obtained an opinion from the Legal Adviser of his Legation adverse to the pretensions of the Spanish authority, brought the matter to the notice of the Spanish Government, and promised to report the view they took upon it.

That Report has not been received, and the matter has dropped until this occurrence arose.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in insisting on the right of Her Majesty's Consul to take charge of such wrecks.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that the opinion of Señor Diaz y Auguelles is well founded in fact and law; and that Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid should be instructed to urge that both by Treaty and by long prescriptive usage the customary and proper jurisdiction of the British Consul over wrecks of British vessels ought not to be interfered with by the officers of the Spanish Customs.

It may be expedient to discover on what grounds the French Embassy remonstrated against a similar invasion of the privileges of their Consul: but it does not seem to me desirable that any reference to their proceedings should be made by Her Majesty's Representative in his remonstrance to the Court of Madrid.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 319.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

PERSIA.

Right of British Consul-General at Bagdad to protect children of Ali Agha, who was born in India, but of Persian descent.

Doctors' Commons, December 27, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran (No. 184, October 26), requesting instructions with regard to the right of the British Consul-General at Bagdad to afford protection to the children of a person named Ali Agha, who was born in India, but was of Persian descent, the Persian Government having asserted that the children ought to be placed under the protection of the Persian Consul at Bagdad. He was also pleased to inclose the instructions with respect to the granting of British protection to Persian subjects, and persons of Persian origin, referred to by Mr. Alison (No. 82, September 14, 1850, and No. 64, August 23, 1860); and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the decision which Her Majesty's Government should come to in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the British Consul-General at Bagdad is authorized upon the principles of law, and warranted by the usage applicable to the subject, to take under his protection the sons of Ali Agha, while they continue resident at Bagdad.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1862

No. 320.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

UNITED STATES.

Claim of Messrs. Martin and Son for destruction by United States' cruizers of their vessel the "York," driven ashore on coast of North Carolina.

Temple, December 27, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 28th July last,* relative to the destruction by United States' cruizers of the British ship "York," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington,‡ inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward stating the grounds upon which the United States' Government justify the proceedings adopted in the case of that vessel; and a letter from Messrs. Martin and Sons,§ the owners of the "York," inclosing documents tending to prove the nature of her cargo, and the reasons for her being stranded in the neighbourhood of a blockaded port.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That a consideration of the further papers submitted to us in this case leaves no doubt upon our minds that in our former Report we took a correct view of this case.

On the one hand, the statement of the United States' Commander, Prentiss, that the "York" was discharging her cargo (which is not even alleged to have been contraband) under the protection of the Confederate troops, is a conjecture, in itself unsupported by proof, and quite at variance with evidence subsequently produced.

On the other hand, there is not only the very credible and sober testimony of the master and others connected with the "York" in support of the original statement, in itself accordant with every appearance and probability, but there is also the evidence of the "York" having been boarded and visited on two occasions by United States' Captains, the latter occasion happening shortly before the vessel was driven on shore; both of whom satisfied themselves, after investigation, of the perfect lawfulness of her cargo and her destination.

We cannot help entertaining a strong hope that if the later papers now before us are laid before the United States' Government, they will at once recognize the justice of the claim for compensation to the "York."

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 321.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

UNITED STATES.

Claim of owners of the "Will o' the Wisp," captured at Matamoros, and released by sentence of Prize Court.

Doctors' Commons, December 27, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 15th of September‖ upon the case of the "Will o' the Wisp," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a correspondence on the subject which has since passed between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington.¶

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit me further papers respecting the case which have been received from the Colonial Office, and from Mr. Joseph Howe; and he was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Page 189.

† Messrs. Martin, July 10; Law Officers, July 28; to Mr. Stuart, No. 78; to Messrs. Martin, October 14.

‡ Mr. Stuart, No. 243.

§ Messrs. Martin, October 18, 1862.

‖ Page 221.

¶ To Mr. Stuart, No. 139, October 2; Mr. Stuart, No. 310, October 24, 1862.

 Colonial Office, December 13, 1862; Mr. Howe, December 16, 1862.

That with respect to the alleged place of capture, I have to remark (in addition to my observations on this point in my former Report), that of the two witnesses examined, one swears to the capture having taken place "off the mouth of the Rio Grande River, about two miles from the land on the Mexican side" (page 18); the other swears it took place "at the mouth of the Rio Grande" (page 22). There was no appearance under protest to the jurisdiction, nor does the point appear to have been distinctly or specifically raised by the defensive plea (page 25), nor to have been argued before nor adjudicated upon by the Judge (pages 26, 27). It is incorrectly stated, therefore, in the Memorial, that the "Will o' the Wisp" and cargo "were decreed to be given up as not being liable to seizure in a neutral port" (page 32).

The ground of the Decree—whether or no it ought to have gone upon the ground of the seizure having been made in neutral waters—actually did go upon the lawfulness of a trade in gunpowder between two neutral ports.

It is also stated in the Memorial (page 31)—"that the cause was heard in the absence of the agent of your memorialist, the supercargo of the vessel, who was obliged to remain at Matamoros, he being on shore when the vessel was seized, and by reason of her sudden departure from Matamoros he was unable to proceed in her to Key West, or to forward the papers which would have shown the character of the voyage, with the full particulars of which the master was but imperfectly acquainted; and no opportunity was afforded afterwards to proceed from Matamoros to Key West."

But I do not find any complaint on the part of those who conducted the case, that any application was made to the Court, and refused by it, for a delay in order to produce further proof; and I find that the British Vice-Consul, Mr. Welch, in his despatch of the 28th August to Lord Lyons (Inclosure No. 2 in No. 221), says:—"I am aware that complaints have been made by parties that the Prize cases are hurried through the Court to the detriment of the claimants, but to my certain knowledge the Court has never refused to grant abundant time for communication with absent owners."

I must think, therefore, that the Court is no way responsible for the absence of this proof.

I have the honour to repeat my opinion, that the justice of the case required that both costs and damages should have been awarded to the owners of the "Will o' the Wisp,"—the former certainly, the latter according to all reasonable probability.

But it must be remembered that the British Vice-Consul, Blacker, speaks (June 9, 1862, inclosed in No. 25, Mr. Jonson's despatch) of the equivocating and prevaricating manner in which the Captain gave his evidence, and that the case at first appears to have made an unfavourable impression upon Mr. Stuart.

It does not appear that Mr. Seward has, as yet, made any reply to the demand of Her Majesty's Government. It might be desirable, if there still be an opportunity for so doing, that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed to say that evidence, obtained quite lately, tends to show that the capture was made in neutral waters, because the United States' Government may and ought to take this into consideration, though the matter was not, in the particular exigencies of the case, pressed upon the Court.

It is true that the United States' Government may reply that an appeal is open to the owners of the "Will o' the Wisp," but it may be strongly urged that they ought not, all the circumstances considered, to be made to incur further expense.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 322.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 30.)

TURKEY.

Claim of Ismael Bey, a Circassian, to British protection as a naturalized British subject.

Doctors' Commons, December 30, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (Nos. 89 and 107), stating the circumstances under which a person named Ismael Bey has applied for British protection, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the manner in which this claim should be dealt with by Her Majesty's Government.

1862

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Ismael Bey is entitled upon this evidence, until it is credibly contradicted, to be considered by Her Majesty's Government as a native Circassian; and, if this be so, it is clear that he has a claim to British protection upon the very narrowest construction (the correctness of which I do not mean to affirm) of the Act of Naturalization, for even by that construction he would be entitled to protection so long as the passport was in force, and he was seized by the Turkish authorities before its expiration.

I am of opinion, however, that if Ismael Bey be satisfactorily proved to be a Turkish native subject, Her Majesty's Government ought not to protect him under the Act of Naturalization against his native Sovereign. It is a very different question (one not properly arising in this case) whether he has not a right to be protected against every other foreign authority.

I think that if Her Majesty's Government decide upon affording the protection claimed, it might be expedient, regard being had to all the circumstances of the case, that Ismael Bey should be required to submit (as he appears to be willing to do, see Inclosure No. 7 in despatch No. 89) to an investigation of the charge preferred by the Porte before the Supreme Consular Court, and to abide by the decision of that Court. This is, however, a matter which I think might be left to the discretion of Her Majesty's Representative at Constantinople.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1863

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. June 1865.

Turkey
2

CONFIDENTIAL.

1376

REPORTS

FROM

THE LAW OFFICERS

OF

THE CROWN.

1863.

1863

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

A.

AFRICA. Agreement between King Pepple and Messrs. Foster and Co., 10.
  Consecration of the Rev. W. G. Tozer and Rev. E. Twelles, 21, 35.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION. Mr. Quigley, 12.
  Intestate British property, 46, 70.
  Law declaring all persons born in the Confederation Argentine citizens, 284.

AUSTRIA. Refusal of Registrar at Dublin to register a deed sworn to before Secretary of Embassy at Vienna. 273.

B.

BRAZIL. Henry Gibson, 4.
  Consul Vereker, 27, 46, 155.
  "Canrobert," 27, 155.
  "Prince of Wales," 53, 151.
  "Forte," 78, 82, 92, 151.
  Rostron and Co., 140.
  Mr. Bieber, 140.
  "Castor," 192.
  Use of ports by belligerents, 192.
  Mr. Vionnée, 167.

C.

CHILE. Clark or Clarkson, 26, 322.
  Administration of British property, 26.
  Mr. T. Harwood, 267.
  Marriages by Acting Consul at Coquimbo. Illegality, 292.
  Administration to property of an escaped convict, a British subject, 26, 322.

CHINA. Extradition for political offences, 55.
  "Pearl," 78.
  Messrs. Hanbury and Co., 93.
  Agreement for entry of British subjects into Imperial navy, 94.
  Hong Kong. Export of military stores, 158, 195, 297.
  "Pearl," 168.
  Trial of British subjects in service of, 171.
  Hong Kong. Supreme Court. Mandamus, 170, 218.
  Supplies to belligerents, 219.
  Punishment of persons returning after deportation, 222.

COSTA RICA. Marriages of British subjects, 194.
  Nationality of children born of British subjects, 194.

D.

DENMARK. Property of Mrs. Strattin, 75, 181.
  Nationality of Mr. Rainals, 180, 205.

E.

ECUADOR. Mrs. Abitbol, 110, 285.

F.

FRANCE. "Olivier," 16.
  Mr. Clark, 36.
  Island of Mauritius. Claim to Postal accommodation, 149.
  Destruction of French property at Epé, 158.
  Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 185.
  Right of Indian labourers in Réunion to proceed to Mauritius, 191.
  Glover v. Persigny, 337.
  P. G. Fisse, 229.
  T. Lavergne, 269.
  Consular Marriages. Necessity of one month's residence, 269.
  "Léopard," 296.
  Rev. P. H. Maxwell, 298.
  Refusal of Consul at Havre to administer an oath, 298.
  "Foxhound," 322.
  Tonnage dues on vessels from the Ionian Islands, 322.

G.

GREAT BRITAIN. Foreign Enlistment Act, 23, 222.
  Limits of Bahama Islands, 141.
  Mr. Phené, 176.
  Dr. Shute, 176.
  Treaties. Alterations, 187.
  Naturalized subjects. Protection, 176.
  Production of papers in Court of Law. Mr. Udny, 263.
  Subpœna. Secretary of State, 303.

H.

HANS TOWNS. Exemption of children of naturalized British subjects from military service, 259.
  C. J. Bosdet, 259.

HONDURAS. Mr. F. Upton, 114.
  Withdrawal of Acting Consul Kirkpatrick's exequatur, 305.

I.

ITALY. Mr. C. Wilkinson, 4.
  Search of houses of British subjects at Girgenti, 12.

ITALY. "Ranger," 66.
G. Mariotti, 73.
Mr. Townley, 138.
Production of papers. Case of Mr. Udny, 263.
Grant of marriage warrant to British Vice-Consul at Florence, 282.
C. Monticelli, 320.

J.

JAPAN. Prize Court at Hong Kong, 2, 8.
Blockade Notification, 8.
Punishment of persons returning after deportation, 222.
Regulation respecting vagrants, 313.
Jardine and Co., 286.

M.

MEXICO. French blockade of Tampico, 79.
French blockade of ports of, 243.
French sequestration of enemy's property, 243.
French blockade. Notification in "Gazette," 280.
"Blue Jacket," 333.
"Caroline Goodyear," 267.

N.

NETHERLANDS. Mr. Uhlenbeck, 203.
D. F. Duff, 260.

NEW GRANADA. Payment of indemnity in notes, 7.
Messrs. Colesworth and Powell, 230.
Murder of Mr. J. Hunter by Thos. Morris, 288.

O.

OLDENBURG. Captain Sommer, 182.

P.

PERSIA. Mirza John Ibrahim, 79, 213.
Consular jurisdiction, 108, 189.

PERU. Mr. J. Smith, 10.
Manuel Oliva, 117.
Legal citations in England, 120.
Melville White, 203, 211, 226, 276.

PORTUGAL. Industrial tax, 154.

PRUSSIA. Weiss v. Loftus, 303.
Lease of Mission-house at Berlin, 303.

R.

RUSSIA. Mr. Bate, 13.
Russian bonds. Stamp duty, 27, 33.
R. Willis, 33.
"Ward Jackson," 81, 84.
Bonds. Stamp duty, 159.

S.

SAN DOMINGO. Blockade of ports by Spain, 302.

SIAM. G. Attard, 29.
Importation of spirits, 72.
Rules and regulations for government of British subjects, 87, 302.
"Canada," 132, 166.
Messrs. Clarkson, 132.
Punishment of persons returning after deportation, 222.

SPAIN. Messrs. West and Mould, 36, 71.
Claim of Spanish Consul-General at Odessa for damage to property at Kertch, 53.
Marriages in San Domingo, 110.
T. C. Stephens, 119.
Mr. Robinson, 172.
"Mio Zio," 172.
Joseph Wotterding, 206.
"Anne Catherine," 213.
Jurisdiction. Coast of Cuba, 173.
P. G. Fisse, 229.
"Criticado," 237.
Alexander Merriman, 287.

SWEDEN. "Ward Jackson," 138.

SWITZERLAND. Messrs. Fournier, 116.

T.

TUNIS. British subjects. Moveable property, 244.

TURKEY. Messrs. Schunck and Co., 11.
Mr. Calvert, 20.
Mr. Falanga, 28.
Mrs. Shee, 30, 166.
Messrs. Cababé and T. Walsh, 52.
Importation of arms, 66.
Indian subjects. Jurisdiction, 104, 329.
Major Stuart, 160.
Mr. Manetta, 160.
A. Picifico, 165.
Messrs. Crowder, 166.
Orders in Council. Fees, 200.
A. Hippodimatipoulo, 232.
Employés of Ottoman Bank. Juries, 240.
Tiano v. Bello and Piso, 337.
Mr. Falkeisen, 264.
Brussa. Claim against British Consul, 264, 300.
"Chesapeake," 266.
Consul at Manchester. Assessed taxes, 275.
Levant Orders in Council of 9th January, 1863. Modification. Registration, 291, 296.
M. Ninet, 319.

U.

UNITED STATES.

(A.)

"Adela," 148, 200, 235.
"Adler," 134.
"Admiral P. Fordenskiold," 63.
"Alabama," 14, 24, 57, 63, 75, 129, 271, 283, 294, 308.
"Albert," 77, 324.
"Alexandra," 102, 203, 208, 335.
"Aries," 117, 202.
"Antona," 164, 207.
"Abigail," 210, 290, 315.
"Ann E. Grant," 210, 290, 315.
"Anglo-Saxon," 310.
"Aigburth," 331.
Atkin, R. 301.
"Atlantic," 268.

(B.)

"Blanche," 15, 25, 65, 161, 197, 254.
"Bermuda," 45, 114.
Blockade. Charleston. Raising, 51, 54, 67, 82, 92, 93, 135.
Galveston. Raising, 54, 59, 67, 135.
United States. Naval instructions, 73.
Wilmington, 93.
Runners, shot proof, 318.
Neutral vessels, warning, 163.
Sabine River, 76.
Confederate States. List of vessels which have escaped, 224.

UNITED STATES.

Belligerent ships. Pilots, 72.
Byrne, Mr., 83.
Bennett, T. W., 86.
Broderick, D. H., 98.
Bowden, R., 142, 209.
Booth, W. B., 147.
Burrows, G., 266.
Bermuda. Confederate naval depôts, 295.

(C.)

Crowe, Wylie, and Co., 134, 201.
Carroll, F., 136.
Craven, J. J., 174.
Charlesford, Mr., 268.
Crosse, J. N., 34, 174.
Carlin, J., 116, 196.
Coals, supply to belligerents, 122, 174.
Cotton. Neutral. Protection, 182.
"Carolina," 196.
"Consul," 204.
"Clyde," 205, 257.
"Canton," 278, 299.
"Carmita," 304.
"Cheshire," 333.
Confederate States. Purchase of iron-clad vessels, &c., by agents in England, 61, 89, 109, 123, 124.
Enlistment of British subjects, 130, 328.
Treatment of British subjects, 145, 189, 258.
Appointment of Consular Agents by Great Britain, 149, 189, 316.
Iron-clad vessels at Liverpool. Demand for detention, 212, 234, 250, 270, 274, 277, 332.
Consul Moore's exequatur. Withdrawal, 212.
Blockade of ports. List of vessels which have escaped from, 225.
Letter to Mr. Mason relative to equipment of vessels of war in England, for, 261.
Appointment of a British Agent, 316, 323, 325.
Vessels. British register, 121.
Ships building at Glasgow, 278.
Cape Town. United States' Consul and Vice-Consul. Dispute, 182.

(D.)

"Dolphin," 125, 134, 143, 165, 172, 221, 245.
Duncan, T. R., 262.
"Don José," 292.
"Delta," 333.
"Dennis Hill," 233.
Deserter. Seizure by Captain of the "Nile," 268.
Debts, State. Transmission of moneys to England for payment of, 34.

(E.)

"Ellen," 2.
"Echo," 67, 263.
"Emma Tuttle," 69.
"Emily St. Pierre," 74.
"Elias Reid," 85, 91, 179.
"Empress," 238, 333.
"Emma," 275.
"Etta," 309.
Evans, Mr., 310.
Elsworthy and Redgate. See "Peterhoff."
Enlistment of British subjects at Liverpool by United States, 327, 328.

(F.)

Foreigners. Limit of period for departure, 171.
Oath of neutrality, 217.
Fisher, W., 41, 144.
Franklin, J. W., alias Lewis, 135.

UNITED STATES.

Ford, Ch., 168.
"Florida," 247, 310.
"Fanny Crenshaw," 210, 290, 315.

(G.)

"Georgiana," 123.
"Granite City," 137, 161, 188.
Grindle, Mr., 164.
"Gibraltar" or "Sumter." See "Sumter."
"Georgia," 271.
Glasgow. Confederate ships building at, 278.
Green, J., 195.

(H.)

Hughes, J., 65.
"Hiawatha," 101, 157, 215, 333.
Hardcastle, Mr., 214.
"Harkaway," 91, 256.
Hodgson, K., 289.
Hamilton, D. J., 314.
Hayman, Mr. 318.
Henrick, W., 248.
Habeas Corpus Act, 107, 154, 207.

(I.)

"Isabella Thompson," 311.

(J.)

"Japan" or "Virginia," 139, 221.
"John Freeman," 224.
"Juno," 334.
Jones, Hyatt, and Wilding, 328.
"J. H. Foone," 331.

(K.)

"Kanawka," 196.
"Kearsarge," 326, 327, 334.

(L.)

"Labuan," 6, 58, 152, 283.
Laurent, A. P., 48, 140, 236.
Lingham, Mr., 49.
Letters of marque. Issue by United States, 86, 87.
Leach and Richards, 311.
Lightbourne, Rev. F., 321.
"Louisa Agnes," 331.
"Lord Clyde," 209.
Lee, J. A., 249.

(M.)

"Mersey," 17.
"Mont Blanc," 68.
"Magicienne," 95, 98, 149, 220.
Mails on board captured vessels, 132.
"Minnie," 191.
"Margaret and Jessie," 197, 227, 243, 300.
Mobile. Appointment of Acting British Consul, 229.
Murphy, W., 164.
McShea, N., 50.
Matchett, W. J., 312.
Mail packets. Detention, 42.
Mason, Mr., 29, 59, 261.
Mexico. Export of contraband of war to, 57, 80.
Military service. Liability of British subjects, 37, 39, 94, 112, 224, 231, 258, 264, 311, 315, 316.

(N.)

Naturalized British subjects. Protection of children, 226.
Nassau and Matamoros. Trade, 71, 118, 123, 140.
New York and Matamoros. Trade, 127.
Nicol, A., 149.
"Nile," 268.
Nassau. Confederate privateer fitting out, 168.
Nevins, A. A., 177.
New Brunswick Fishery Act, 223.

1863

UNITED STATES.

Nottingham. United States' Consul, 113.
New York and Bahamas. Trade bonds, 261.

(O.)

" Onachita," 5.
" Olivier," 16.
" Oreto," 122, 174.

(P.)

" Pearl," 62.
" Peterhoff," 98, 126, 127, 143, 155, 156, 183, 245, 249, 279, 289.
Potts, T., 101, 157.
" Peterhoff." Passengers, 128, 142, 186, 209, 289.
" Phantom," 170.
Power, Mr., 186.
Prideaux, Mr., 229.
" Prince Leopold," 331.

(R.)

" Rising Dawn," 62.
Rawson, Mr., 113.
Ranger, R., 153.
Riezenberger, Mr., 157.
" Rhode Island," 242, 328.
" Red Gauntlet," 247.
Richardson and Co., 247.
" Rappahannock," 323.

(S.)

" Sumter," 1, 6, 16, 64, 105, 119, 142, 143, 179, 185, 193.
    Murder on board, 131, 152, 192.
Sherwin, Captain, 2, 60, 129, 265.
Slave Trade Treaty, 4, 14.
    Mixed Courts, 62.
" Sunbeam," 23, 61, 84, 93.
Stirrup and Edwards, 47, 238, 252.
" Symmetry," 56.
" Springbok," 69, 80, 98, 137, 248, 330.
Shaver, Mr., 97, 195.

UNITED STATES.

" Sea Queen," 119, 123.
Satow and Co., 157.
" Southerner," 175, 178.
Sellers, Alfred, 201.
Scott, Mr., 224.
Sweeney, J., 262.
" Sea Bride," 283.
" Sir W. Peel," 309.
Smith, J., 321.
" Sarah Starr," 331.

(T.)

" Thistle," 7.
Tax on retail trade on board British vessels, 26.
" Telegraph," 41, 144.
Tovell, J., 184.
" Tampico," 188, 306.
" Tuscaloosa," 271.

(V.)

Vernon, J. M., 216.
" Victor," 240, 306, 319.
Vessels. Captured. Appropriation previous to condemnation, 218.
    Of war. Equipment in England, 261.
    Shot proof. Construction, 318.
    Iron-clad. Construction at Liverpool for Confederates, 212, 233, 250, 270, 274, 277, 332.
    Transfer of United States' vessels, 130, 196.
    British. Capture of United States' citizens on board, 19.

(W.)

Whitlock, Mr., 190.
" Wyoming," 219.
Walsh, A. C., 325.
" Will o' the Wisp," 49, 177.

V.

VENEZUELA. Mr. R. Syers, 28.

LIST OF REPORTS.

Arranged according to Dates.

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
1	Jan. 1, 1863	United States ..	Law Off.	Sale of Confederate privateer " Sumter" at Gibraltar. Legality of sale. Opinion as to right of capture by Federal cruizers .	1
2	1,	Japan	Qu. Ad.	Establishment of a Prize Court at Hong Kong during hostilities in Japan. Requests assistance of Advocate to Admiralty to prepare instruments for constitution	2
3	1,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Arrest of Captain Sherwin, a British subject, for high treason. Abstract right of United States' Government to try him for high treason. Steps to be taken by Her Majesty's Representative at Washington	2
4	1,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Destruction of the British schooner " Ellen" by the United States' cruizer " Mercedita." Case of collision. Compensation offered by United States' Government .	3
5	3,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Slave Trade Treaty with United States. Objection of United States' Secretary of the Navy to furnish American cruizers with warrants, &c. Approving instruction to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington	4
6	3,	Brazil	Qu. Ad.	Administration to property of a deceased British subject, Henry Gibson. Jurisdiction of Brazilian Court over testament of deceased	4
7	3,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Capture of British vessel " Onachita," for an alleged intention to violate the blockade of Southern ports of North America ..	5
8	5,	United States ..	Law Off.	Sale of Confederate privateer " Sumter," at Gibraltar. Not entitled to protection beyond the territorial waters of Gibraltar	6
9	5,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Refusal of authorities at New York to grant a clearance to the British steamer " Labuan," so as to prevent conveyance of intelligence of an expedition fitting out against Confederates	6
10	5,	New Granada ..	Qu. Ad.	Legality of payment in notes of an indemnity due by New Granadian Government to certain British subjects for seizure of silver	7
11	6,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Search of British steamer " Thistle," by United States' ship " Tuscarora," off the Island of Madeira. Search legal. Unneutral use of a port by lying in wait in it for vessels of a neutral State ..	7
12	6,	Japan	Qu. Ad.	Hostilities in Japan. Prize Court at Hong Kong. Notification of blockade ..	8
13	6,	Africa	Qu. Ad.	Agreement between Pepple, King of Bonny, and Messrs. Foster and Co., granting exclusive commercial privileges. Agreement contrary to Treaty with Great Britain, of November 21, 1848 ..	10

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
14	Jan. 6, 1863	Peru	Qu. Ad.	Loss suffered by Mr. J. Smith through proceedings of Peruvian authorities. Amount of compensation to be demanded	10
15	10,	Turkey and Egypt	Qu. Ad.	Application of Messrs. Sehunck and Co. for support of claim of Emil Pasha on Egyptian Government	11
16	10,	Italy	Qu. Ad.	Assault on Mr. C. Wilkinson by an Italian workman. Must obtain redress according to law of Italy	11
17	10,	Italy	Qu. Ad.	Search of houses of certain British subjects at Girgenti during state of siege. Proceeding not contrary to Treaty of 1845.	12
18	10,	Argentine Confederation	Qu. Ad.	Case of Martin Quigley, compelled to serve in an Argentine regiment, as a punishment for a criminal act. Proceeding contrary to Treaty stipulations	12
19	12,	Russia	Law Off.	Claim of Mr. Bate on Government of Russia, on account of astronomical instrument supplied to the Emperor Alexander in 1818	13
20	12,	United States	Law Off.	Approving Additional Articles to Slave Trade Treaty of April 7, 1862	14
21	12,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Alabama." Foreign Enlistment Act. Suggests greater powers being granted to the Government	14
22	12,	United States	Law Off.	Destruction of British steamer "Blanche," in Spanish waters, by United States' ship "Montgomery." Demand for compensation	15
23	12,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Sumter." Approving draft of answer to note of Mr. Adams	16
24	12,	France	Law Off.	Case of the French vessel "Olivier." Not competent for Her Majesty's Government to interfere in an action brought by a subject of Her Majesty against a French subject for damages	16
25	12,	United States	Law Off.	Alleged ill-treatment of crews of captured British vessels. Case of crew of the "Mersey." Conduct of Vice-Consul Edwards	17
26	12,	United States	Law Off.	As to right of bonâ fide United States' citizens, taken on board British vessels captured for a breach of blockade, to British protection. Opinion in the negative	19
27	12,	Turkey	Law Off.	Trial of Mr. Calvert, at Constantinople. Right of trial in a summary way	20
28	13,	Africa	Law Off.	Consecration of the Rev. W. G. Tozer, and the Rev. E. Twelles, as Bishops to the tribes around Lake Nyassa and the Orange River Free State. Not necessary to define limits in which they are to exercise episcopal functions, previous to issue of the Queen's licence; but licence is not to authorize the exercise of local jurisdiction	21
29	16,	United States	Law Off.	Seamen of captured vessel "Sunbeam." Their enlistment into Federal navy is inconsistent with the obligations of belligerents towards neutrals	23

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
30	Jan. 16, 1863	Great Britain	Law Off.	Foreign Enlistment Act. Approves suggestion that Home Office should have the power to order seizure of vessel infringing Act	23
31	16,	United States	Law Off.	Depredations committed by the "Alabama." Infringement of Foreign Enlistment Act by British subjects serving on board, in accordance, however, with principles maintained by Mr. Seward	24
32	17,	United States	Law Off.	Opinion on correspondence with Mr. Adams respecting the case of the "Alabama"	24
33	17,	United States	Law Off.	Destruction of the steamer "Blanche" by the United States' steamer "Montgomery," in Spanish waters. Flagrant infringement of neutral rights. Refusal of Mr. Seward to acknowledge sentences of Confederate Prize Courts	25
34	17,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Right of United States' Government to impose tax on Captains of vessels retailing goods from the decks of their vessels	26
35	21,	Chile	Qu. Ad.	Administration of the property of a British subject named Clark or Clarkson	26
36	22,	Russia	Att. & Sol. Gen.	Stamp duty on bonds of the Russian loan	27
37	23,	Brazil	Qu. Ad.	Embargo on property of Mr. Vereker, Her Majesty's Consul at Rio Grande do Sul, on account of certain moneys received by him in his official capacity, from the proceeds of the British vessel "Canrobert".	27
38	23,	Venezuela	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. Robert Syers for damage done to his property by agents of the Venezuelan Government. Liability of Venezuelan Government	28
39	23,	Turkey	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. Falanga on the Government of Turkey. Suggests appointment of a Commission at Constantinople	28
40	23,	United States	Law Off.	Opinion respecting correspondence with Mr. Mason, the Agent in England of the so-styled Confederate Government, relating to the blockade of the Southern ports by the cruizers of the United States Government	29
41	24,	Siam	Qu. Ad.	Administration to property of the late G. Attard, a Maltese, drowned in Siam, in June 1859	29
42	26,	Turkey and Egypt	Law Off.	Claim of Mrs. Shee on estate of Anesti Kovako	30
43	26,	Russia	Att. & Sol. Gen.	Stamp duty on bonds of the Russian loan	33
44	26,	Russia	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. Richard Willis, a British subject, on account of losses sustained by him in regard to some property which he possessed near Sebastopol, during the siege of that place. Entitled to same compensation as granted by law of Russia to native subjects	33
45	26,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. J. N. Crosse, a British subject, for destruction of his house and furniture at Fredericksburg, Virginia, during hostilities. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere	34

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
46	Jan. 27, 1863	United States ..	Law Off.	Transmission of moneys to England for payment of interest on State debts. Opinion as to such moneys being neutral property during transit. Case of Acting Consul Magee	34
47	29,	Africa	Law Off.	Opinion respecting licences for consecration of the Rev. W. G. Tozer, as Bishop of the tribes around Lake Nyassa, and the Rev. E. Twelles, as Bishop in the Orange River Free State	35
48	30,	France	Qu. Ad.	Application of Mr. Clark respecting the intestate property of a British subject, a bastard, which has lapsed to the French Crown. Unofficial support might be given to obtain restoration	36
49	31,	Spain	Law Off.	Claim of Mr. West on Spanish Government. Bankrupt estate of Mr. Mould. Support to be given	36
50	31,	United States ..	Att. & Sol. Gen.	Liability of British subjects who have exercised the franchise to be enrolled in the United States' militia	37
51	31,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Ditto	39
52	Feb. 2,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Illegal seizure of the British schooner "Telegraph," by the United States' cruizer "Wanderer." Ill-treatment of one of the crew, W. Fisher. To demand reasonable compensation	41
53	3,	United States ..	Law Off.	Threatened detention of British mail-packets by Federal cruizers. Liable to detention. Not expedient to sanction orders of Admiral Milne for recapture . ..	42
54	4,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Alleged intention of United States' Government to appropriate to their own use the British vessel "Bermuda," before proceedings of Admiralty Court have been brought to a close. Counsel for owners of vessel should resist	45
55	4,	Brazil	Qu. Ad.	Embargo laid on property of Mr. Vereker, Her Majesty's Consul at Rio Grande do Sul, on account of moneys received by him from the proceeds of the "Canrobert"	46
56	6,	Argentine Confederation	Qu. Ad.	Administration of intestate estates at Buenos Ayres. Should claim right of most favoured nation for British subjects ..	46
57	9,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of Stirrup and Edwards. Kidnapping and subsequent sale of two British subjects of colour, by the Captain of an American vessel at the Bahamas. Cannot demand extradition of criminal under Treaty with the United States of the 9th August, 1842	47
58	13,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of Mr. A. P. Laurent, the Master of the "Isabel." His having sworn that he was a United States' citizen does not authorize his detention as a rebel; but he might be indicted for perjury should he prove to be a British subject ..	48
59	16,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Illegal capture of the "Will o' the Wisp." Question of appeal	49
60	16,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Lingham at New Orleans, by order of General Butler	49

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
61	Feb. 16, 1863	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. Nelson Mc Shea. Right of British Government to demand compensation for the destruction of British property during war	50
62	18,	United States ..	Law Off.	As to termination of blockade of Galveston and Charleston, by Federal blockading squadron being driven off by a superior Confederate force. Quotes opinion of Lord Stowell in case of the "Hoffnung."	51
63	20,	Turkey	Qu. Ad.	Alleged fraud committed on Messrs. Cababé, by Mr. T. Walsh, their Agent at Aleppo. Not to interfere with course of law administered in Consular Court ..	52
64	20,	Spain	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Spanish Consul-General at Odessa, for compensation for damage done to his farm at Kertch by Turkish Contingent during war in Crimea. Cannot alter previous opinion expressed in Report of December 26, 1862 ..	53
65	21,	Brazil	Qu. Ad.	Case of the British vessel "Prince of Wales," wrecked on the coast of Brazil. Amount of compensation which should be demanded	53
66	23,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Raising of the blockade of the ports of Charleston and Galveston	54
67	24,	China	Law Off.	Opinion as to right of Chinese Government to demand the extradition of persons accused of political offences against that Government, under the stipulations of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, &c. . ..	55
68	24,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Right of owners of the British barque "Symmetry" to compensation, she having been run down by the United States' ship of war "Vanderbilt," who mistook her for the "Alabama"	56
69	24,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Correspondence between Mr. Seward and the Mexican Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, relative to the export of contraband of war from the United States for the use of the French army in Mexico. Bearing of principles established by the United States on the case of the "Alabama"	57
70	25,	United States ..	Law Off.	Illegal seizure of the British ship "Labuan." Lord Lyons to demand compensation ..	58
71	26,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Renewal of blockade of Galveston. The blockade having been de facto and de jure raised, vessels approaching Galveston should be warned upon the spot of its renewal	59
72	26,	United States .	Law Off.	Opinion respecting correspondence with Mr. Mason as to blockade of Southern ports being enured by the occasional escape of small vessels	59
73	Mar. 2,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Illegal imprisonment of Captain Sherwin, accused of high treason, but subsequently released. Her Majesty's Government should demand compensation ..	60
74	2,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Condemnation of the steamer "Sunbeam." Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	61

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
75	Mar. 2, 1863	United States	Law Off.	Attempt of Confederate Agents to raise money on the securities of their Government, and their entering into contracts for the purchase of munitions of war, and for the building of iron-clad vessels, is not sufficient to be made the groundwork of any criminal prosecution	61
76	2,	United States	Law Off.	Approving regulations for the guidance of the Mixed Courts of Justice established under the Slave Trade Treaty with United States of April 7, 1862	62
77	3,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Capture of the British steamer "Pearl" by United States' cruizer "Tioga," while on a voyage from St. Thomas to Nassau. Injustice of such class of seizures. Case of the "Rising Dawn"	62
78	3,	United States	Law Off.	Claims arising out of the destruction of United States' vessels by the Confederate steam-vessel "Alabama." Claim of Mutual Insurance Company, of New York. Her Majesty's Government should disclaim all responsibility for any acts of the "Alabama"	63
79	3,	United States	Law Off.	Compensation granted by United States' Government to the owners of the Norwegian barque "Admiral P. Fordenskiold," which, in 1861, was prevented by the blockading squadron from leaving the port of Charleston	63
80	3,	United States	Law Off.	Legality of sale of the Confederate privateer "Gibraltar" or "Sumter." Her Majesty's Proclamation not applicable to that vessel in the port of Liverpool	64
81	3,	United States	Law Off.	Further report on case of the "Blanche." Approving course adopted by Representatives of England and Spain at Washington	65
82	4,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Illegal imprisonment of John Hughes, a British subject, at New Orleans. Consider that compensation is due	65
83	4,	Italy	Qu. Ad.	Further report on case of "Ranger." Italian Government should grant compensation, it not being proved that the "Ranger" was engaged to aid Garibaldi	66
84	6,	Turkey	Qu. Ad.	Ordinance prohibiting the importation of arms, &c., into Turkey. To be inserted in "Gazette"	66
85	7,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Refusal to grant the British schooner "Echo" a clearance for Matamoros. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere officially	67
86	7,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Further report on questions arising out of the raising of the blockade of the ports of Charleston and Galveston. Necessity of a renewed notice to neutral ships	67
87	12,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Capture of British schooner "Mont Blanc," when at anchor on Sand Cay, Bahama Bank, within one mile of the shore, and in British territory. Representations to be made to United States' Government, and compensation demanded	68

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
88	Mar. 12, 1863	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Emma Tuttle." Capture by a United States' ship of war, and subsequent resumption of command by the Master. Authorities in a neutral port not called upon to assist in maintaining possession	69
89	13,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Springbok." Capture during a voyage from London to Nassau. The destination being bonâ fide neutral, the capture was illegal, and compensation should be demanded	69
90	13,	Argentine Confederation	Qu. Ad.	Administration of foreign intestate property in Buenos Ayres. Approving suggestions of Mr. Thornton	70
91	13,	Spain	Law Off.	Bankruptcy of Mr. Mould. Extent to which Her Majesty's Government can interfere in favour of British suitors, &c., before foreign tribunals	71
92	13,	United States	Law Off.	Stoppage of British vessels bound for Nassau, by Federal men of war. Application of Messrs. Tatham and Co. to be informed what goods they should refuse to ship	71
93	14,	Siam	Law Off.	Approving steps taken by Sir R. Schomburgk with respect to importation of spirits into Siam	72
94	14,	United States	Law Off.	Proclamation of Governor of the Bahamas prohibiting native pilots from serving on board belligerent vessels	72
95	14,	Italy	Law Off.	Claim of M. Giovanni Mariotti to British protection, on the ground that his father was born in Corsica at the time that island was a British possession	73
96	16,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Instructions issued by the Admiral in command of the United States' Eastern Gulf blockading squadron, to the officers under his orders. Instructions are in accordance with law of blockade administered in British Prize Courts	73
97	16,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Emily St. Pierre." Neutral authorities not called upon to assist a belligerent in maintaining possession of a prize. Case of the "Yonge Albert"	74
98	16,	United States	Law Off.	No illegal act committed by Mr. M. G. Klingender, in paying wages to crew of the Confederate privateer "Alabama," after their discharge	75
99	17,	Denmark	Qu. Ad.	Intestate property left by Mrs. Strattin, a British subject, deceased, at Copenhagen. Right of British Consul to take possession	75
100	17,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Detention of four British schooners in the Sabine River. Question as to effective blockade	76
101	17,	United States	Law Off.	Capture of British schooner "Albert" for alleged attempt to run the blockade of a Southern port. Her Majesty's Government should not interfere pending an appeal	77
102	17,	China	Law Off.	Case of the "Pearl." Penalty to be imposed on vessels breaking the Chinese Customs laws. Approving instructions to Mr. Sinclair	78

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
103	Mar. 18, 1863	Brazil	Qu. Pr.	Arbitration of King of the Belgians in case of officers of the "Forte." Transmitting case on behalf of Her Majesty's Government	78
104	19,	Persia	Law Off.	Robbery committed by Mirza John Ibrahim, an employé in the British Legation at Tehran. Cannot inflict any punishment but that of dismissal from his office	79
105	19,	Mexico	Qu. Ad.	French blockade of Tampico. Question as to its being effective	79
106	20,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Requests to be furnished with correspondence respecting exportation of articles contraband of war from the United States for use of French army in Mexico	80
107	21,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Springbok." Delay in proceedings of Prize Court might properly form a subject of remonstrance	80
108	22,	Russia	Law Off.	Proposed arrest of the "Ward Jackson" for supposed infringement of the Foreign Enlistment Act. Evidence insufficient.	81
109	23,	Brazil	Qu. Pr.	Arbitration of the King of the Belgians in case of the "Forte" has been submitted to Law Officers	82
110	23,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Blockade of port of Charleston. Its interruption denied by United States' Naval Officers	82
111	23,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Forcible occupation of house of Mr. Byrne, a British subject, at New Orleans by order of General Butler	83
112	23,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Sunbeam." Further report.	84
113	23,	Russia	Law Off.	Case of the "Ward Jackson." Detention for infringement of Foreign Enlistment Act. Evidence necessary to be produced as would be admissible in an English Court of Justice. To inform Russian Ambassador	84
114	24,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Capture of the Confederate schooner "Elias Reid" in British waters. Proceedings to be adopted by Lord Lyons	85
115	25,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. Thomas W. Bennett. Claim for loss of property in Louisiana. Case does not call for interference of Her Majesty's Government	86
116	26,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Intention of United States' President to issue letters of marque. Wishes for assistance of Law Officers, &c., to investigate precedents	86
117	27,	Siam	Law Off.	Opinion respecting proposed Rules and Regulations for government of British subjects in Siam	87
118	27,	United States	Law Off.	Issue of letters of marque by United States' Government. Draft of proposed instructions to Her Majesty's naval officers. Further consideration will be required on the subject of mail-packets	87

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
119	Mar. 30, 1863	United States	Law Off.	Complaint of United States' Minister at proceedings of Confederate Agents in England. Right of sale of munitions of war and armed vessels to belligerents. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere with commercial dealings between British subjects and the Confederate States, whether the subject of those dealings be money or contraband goods, or even ships adapted for warlike purposes	89
120	30,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Elias Reid." Capture in British waters. Further report	91
121	30,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Detention of British schooner "Harkaway" at Wilmington, North Carolina. Title conferred by purchase of a vessel after due condemnation by a Prize Court	91
122	30,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Absence of blockading squadron before Charleston. The blockade not legally interrupted	92
123	30,	Brazil	Qu. Pr.	Transmitting twelve printed copies of case for arbitration in the case of the "Forte"	92
124	31,	United States	Law Off.	The occasional evasions of the blockade of the ports of Charleston and Wilmington are not such as to warrant the conclusion that the blockade is not lawfully maintained	93
125	31,	United States	Law Off.	Further opinion on inducements held out to the seamen of the captured vessel "Sunbeam" to enter service of the United States	93
126	31,	China	Law Off.	The seizure and confiscation of goods of Messrs. Hanbury and Co. by Chinese Custom-house authorities, for evasion of duties, was right and proper	93
127	31,	China	Law Off.	Opinion of agreement entered into with officers and men embodied for service in the Imperial navy	94
128	31,	United States	Law Off.	Liability of British subjects to military service. Time should be allowed to British subjects who have simply declared their intention of becoming United States' citizens, but have not exercised the right of suffrage, &c.	94
129	31,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Illegal seizure of the brigantine "Magicienne" by the United States' cruizer "Onward." Disposal of mails. Compensation to be demanded	95
130	31,	United States	Law Off.	Illegal imprisonment of Mr. Shaver, a British subject. Is entitled to compensation	97
131	Apr. 1,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Request of Mr. D. H. Broderick that inquiries be made at Washington respecting a certain property in which he is interested. A private claim in which Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to interfere	98
132	1,	United States	Law Off.	Detention and capture by Federal cruizers of British ships bound from England to Vera Cruz and Matamoros. Illegality of such captures. Right of visitation by United States' cruizers. Cases of the "Peterhoff," "Springbok," "Magicienne," &c.	98

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
133	Apr. 2, 1863	Russia	Att. & Sol. Gen.	Stamp duty on certain bonds of Russian loan	100
134	2,	United States	Law Off.	Imprisonment of Mr. T. Potts, the captain and supercargo of the "Hiawatha," for fraudulent abstraction of part of cargo. Compensation should not be demanded by Her Majesty's Government	101
135	4,	United States	Law Off.	Fitting out of the "Alexandra" at Liverpool. Her Majesty's Government should direct the "Alexandra" to be seized under the Foreign Enlistment Act	102
136	5,	Turkey	Law Off.	Order in Council regulating the jurisdiction over Indian subjects in Ottoman dominions	104
137	6,	United States	Law Off.	Legality of sale of the "Gibraltar" or "Sumter." Further report	105
138	6,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Act of Congress relating to Habeas Corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases. Ambiguity of language of 2nd section of the Act with regard to foreigners	107
139	10,	Persia	Law Off.	Proposed establishment of British Consular jurisdiction in Persia, and a Vice-Admiralty Court at Bushire. Suggests Order in Council founded upon Japan Order of the 23rd January, 1860	108
140	10,	United States	Law Off.	Right of neutrals to furnish implements of war, ships, cannon, powder, &c., &c., to be used by belligerents, and to be sold as articles of commerce; but the neutral must not carry on war itself. Equipment of vessels from a British port is not carrying on war. The manning of a ship by British seamen does not constitute the ship a British ship of war	109
141	13,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Approving answer to note of Mr. J. Wetherell, relative to goods shipped by him for Matamoros on board the "Sea Queen"	110
142	13,	Spain	Qu. Ad.	Validity of marriages performed by civil contract in St. Domingo	110
143	13,	Ecuador	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mrs. Abithol, arising out of a debt due by original Republic of Columbia to M, Abensur. Liability of the three independent States which formerly formed that Republic	111
144	14,	United States	Law Off.	Liability of British subjects in Confederate States to perform military service	112
145	14,	United States	Law Off.	Complaint of Mr. S. Maples, a notary of Nottingham, at undue advantage given to Mr. Rawson over other notaries in that town by his appointment to be United States' Consular Agent. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	113
146	14,	Honduras	Qu. Ad.	No objection to Mr. F. Upton being supplied with copy of Report of Honduras Land Commission, as far as relates to his claim	114
147	14,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Bermuda." Character of new Prize Act of United States. Illegality of sale of a vessel previous to condemnation	114
148	Apr. 14, 1863	Switzerland	Qu. Ad.	Claims of brothers Fournier to exemption from military service in Switzerland. Children of a British subject who had become a Genevese citizen. The children did not forfeit their national character by the act of their father	116
149	15,	United States	Law Off.	Illegal imprisonment of James Carlin, a British subject, a passenger on board the British steamer "Memphis" when captured. Compensation due	116
150	15,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the British steamer "Aries," stated to have run the blockade of Charleston. Approving conduct of Her Majesty's Consul at Porto Rico in declining to interfere in manner suggested by United States' Consul	117
151	15,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Approving answers to letters from Messrs. Joyce and Co. and Messrs. Wade and Robson, respecting cargoes loading for Nassau and Matamoros	118
152	15,	Peru	Qu. Ad.	Trial of a Peruvian soldier named Manuel Oliva, one of the crew of the Peruvian frigate "Arica," for a crime committed whilst temporarily located on board Her Majesty's hulk "Venus." The crime having been committed in a British port and on board one of Her Majesty's ships the offender is amenable to British jurisdiction	118
153	16,	United States	Law Off.	Sale of the "Sumter" at Gibraltar. Approving answer to Mr. Adams' letter of the 14th March, with certain modifications	119
154	16,	Spain	Qu. Ad.	Sentence pronounced by the Supreme Court at Havana against Mr. T. C. Stephens, Head Captain of the Consolidated Mining Company at Cobre, on account of a fatal accident occurring at the mine. Sentence unjust, and representations should be made to Spanish Government	119
155	16,	Peru	Law Off.	Application of Peruvian Minister in London that effect might be given in this country to certain legal citations in connection with a law-suit pending at Lima	120
156	17,	United States	Law Off.	Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere with regard to vessels holding British registers, but occasionally sailing as Confederate vessels, and under different names from those inserted in the British register	121
157	18,	United States	Law Off.	Complaint of United States' Admiral Wilkes against the Governor of the Windward Islands, respecting coal supplied to the Confederate steamer "Oreto." Limits of supply of coal prescribed by Her Majesty's Regulation	122
158	21,	United States	Law Off.	Approving proposed answers to letters of Messrs. Bennett and Wake and Mr. Spence, relative to trade with Matamoros and protection of the British ship "Sea Queen" on her voyage to that port	122

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
159	Apr. 21, 1863	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Georgiana," a vessel stated to be fitting out at Nassau for the service of the Confederate Govervment. Right to build ships in a British port for sale to belligerents. Her Majesty's Government not responsible for subsequent equipment in a foreign port for purposes of war. Duty of belligerent to maintain effective blockade of an enemy's port	123
160	21,	United States	Law Off.	Reported attempts of Confederate Agents to establish a system of direct hostility within the limits of the United Kingdom against the Government of the United States. Proposed answer to representation of Mr. Adams. Mercantile character of transactions complained of.	124
161	22,	United States	Law Off.	Seizure of the "Dolphin" by the United States' steamer "Wachusetts." Apparent illegality of seizure. Grave offence committed by the Commander of the "Wachusetts" in using a neutral port as a place wherefrom to capture vessels of another neutral State. Injury inflicted on neutral rights by treatment of crew as prisoners of war	125
162	22,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Further report. Objections to practice of Mr. Adams in granting certificates as to lawfulness of cargoes contained on board Britsh vessels	126
163	22,	United States	Law Off.	Trade between New York and Matamoros. Clearances granted to merchant-vessels. No bearing upon case of the "Peterhoff"	127
164	23,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the passengers of the "Peterhoff." Their illegal detention and imprisonment. Compensation should be demanded. Messrs. Elsworth and Redgate	128
165	24,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Alabama." Opinion of evidence of J. C. R. Yonge. Conduct of Captains Bullock and Butcher in enlisting British subjects for service of Confederates	129
166	24,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of Captain Sherwin. Illegal imprisonment. Further report	129
167	24,	United States	Law Off.	Transfer of United States' vessels to British owners. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere. Their liability to capture by Confederate cruizers	130
168	24,	United States	Law Off.	Murder committed on board the Confederate steamer "Sumter" at Gibraltar. Question as to disposal of prisoner. Right of a neutral ship of war to enter a blockaded port	131
169	25,	Siam	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Canada." Messrs. Clarkson, &c., should institute a suit in High Court of Admiralty	132
170	25,	United States	Law Off.	Opinion respecting rules proposed by United States' Government for disposal of mail-bags found on board captured vessels	132
171	27,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Dolphin." Further Report. Case of the "Adler"	134

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
172	Apr. 27, 1863	United States	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Messrs. Crow, Wylie, and Co., to be allowed to place in safety certain timber at Pensacola, which was purchased by them previous to commencement of hostilities. Legality of claim. Support to be given by Lord Lyons	134
173	27,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Blockade of Galveston and Charleston. Proclamation issued by General Magruder, and by the Commander of the United States' steamer "Brooklyn"	135
174	27,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Imprisonment of Mr. J. W. Franklin alias Charles Lewis	135
175	27,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Imprisonment of Mr. F. Carroll for violent language against United States' Government. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to support claim for indemnity	136
176	27,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Springbok," captured on a voyage from England to Nassau	137
177	30,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Capture of "Granite City" by United States' ship of war "Tioga." Appropriation of the vessel by United States' Government previous to decision of Prize Court. Lord Lyons should remonstrate	137
178	30,	Italy	Qu. Ad.	Marriage of Mr. Townley, a British subject, with an Italian lady. The marriage according to lex loci should precede marriage under British Consular Act	138
179	30,	Sweden	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Ward Jackson." Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	138
180	30,	United States	Law Off.	Enlistment of British subjects for service on board the Confederate ship "Japan" or "Virginia." Acceptance of proposal in French waters contrary to second section of Foreign Enlistment Act. Act can only be enforced within British jurisdiction	139
181	30,	United States	Law Off.	Imprisonment of Captain Laurent. Evidence should be sent to the United States to prove that he is a British subject	140
182	30,	Brazil	Qu. Ad.	Seizure by Brazilian authorities at Pernambuco of property in connection with bankruptcy of Messrs. Rostron and Co. Protest of Mr. Bieber. Interference of Her Majesty's Government	140
183	May 1,	Great Britain	Law Off.	Limits of territorial jurisdiction of Great Britain over the Bahama Banks. Limit confined to three miles with certain exceptions	141
184	1,	United States	Law Off.	Claim of Mr. R. Bowden on United States' Government on account of his capture on board the "Peterhoff." As to amount of compensation to be claimed	142
185	4,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Sumter." Mr. Adams should be informed that Her Majesty's Government does not intend to deviate from acknowledged principles of international law in this case	142
186	6,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Not necessary to send further instructions to Lord Lyons.	143

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
187	May 7, 1863	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Dolphin." Restoration by Spanish authorities in Cuba of certain prizes captured by the Confederate steamer "Sumter"	143
188	7,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Telegraph." Illegal act of captain of the United States' ship of war in obliging captain of the "Telegraph" to bring his papers on board his ship. Right of a neutral ship to deviate from her outward-bound voyage. Treatment of W. Fisher	144
189	7,	United States	Law Off.	Ill-usage of British subjects in Confederate States under Conscription Act. Suggests appointment of unaccredited Consular Agents in Southern States	145
190	8,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Letter from Mr. Worley respecting British trade with Nassau. Belligerent character of war between Federal and Confederate States of America. Right to visit neutral vessels. Policy to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government in case of illegal seizures. Proposed Customs certificates	146
191	8,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Imprisonment of Dr. W. B. Booth at New Orleans. Parole required by United States' authorities not unreasonable	147
192	8,	United States	Law Off.	Capture of the British steamer "Adela" by the United States' cruizer "Quaker City." Violation of the rights of neutrals by seizure of the "Adela" on suspicion not founded upon the state of the vessel. Remonstrance to be made by Lord Lyons	147
193	9,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. A. Nicol on the United States' Government on account of the destruction of his property by United States' soldiery at Kingston, North Carolina. Justice of claim when arising from a deliberate act of private plunder and not from the exigencies of war	148
195	11,	France	Law Off.	Claim put forward by the Director of the postal service of the "Messageries Impériales" to certain harbour accommodation in the Island of Mauritius cannot be sustained by the Postal Convention with Great Britain of 24th September, 1856.	149
196	11,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Magicienne." Claim for compensation. Scale of compensation to neutrals made during Russian war	149
197	11,	United States	Law Off.	British subjects serving on board a Federal or Confederate man-of-war in a British harbour can be tried under Foreign Enlistment Act, should he be found on shore	151
198	12,	Brazil	Law Off.	Cases of the "Prince of Wales" and the "Forte." Approving answer to demand of Brazilian Minister for compensation on account of detention of Brazilian vessels	151
199	12,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Labuan." No further steps should be taken by Lord Lyons until award of Prize Court is known	152
200	May 12, 1863	United States	Law Off.	Murder committed on board the Confederate privateer "Sumter" at Gibraltar. The prisoner should not be landed at Bermuda, but kept on board a ship of war until delivered to Confederate authorities	152
201	13,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Illegal imprisonment at New Orleans of R. Ranger. Compensation due	153
202	14,	Portugal	Qu. Ad.	Opinion relative to "industrial tax" levied in Portugal on native and foreign merchants, in reference to Article I of Treaty with Portugal of the 3rd July, 1842	154
203	14,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Memorandum of conversation between Lord Lyons and Mr. Seward respecting the late Act of Congress relating to habeas corpus. Query as to Treaties being considered as the supreme law of the land by Courts of Law	154
204	15,	Brazil	Qu. Ad.	Embargo laid upon the property of Consul Vereker on account of the mal-administration of the proceeds of the "Canrobert." Legality of proceedings of Brazilian authorities. Conduct of Consul Vereker	155
205	15,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." The decision respecting the mail bags is satisfactory	155
206	15,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Not to communicate to owners Lord Lyons' despatch No. 226, respecting prospect of her condemnation	156
207	17,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Request of Messrs. Satow and Co. for assistance in bringing to justice Mr. Riezenbergen, who had absconded from Bahia and sought refuge in the United States. Support to be given by Lord Lyons and Consul Archibald	156
208	20,	United States	Law Off.	Imprisonment of Mr. Potts of the "Hiawatha." Adhere to previous Report of the 2nd April	157
209	20,	China	Law Off.	Approving proclamation of Acting Governor of Hong Kong, prohibiting the export of military stores. Permits should be allowed for export of stores for use of Imperial Government of China	158
210	20,	France	Qu. Ad.	Application of French Government for compensation for destruction of French property during an attack upon Epé by an armed party acting under the orders of Governor of Lagos	158
211	21,	Russia	Att. & Sol. Gen.	Stamp duty on Russian bonds	159
212	21,	Greece	Law Off.	Refusal of Major Stuart, Her Majesty's Consul at Janina, to act judicially with regard to a complaint of Mr. Manetta respecting a bill of exchange	160
213	21,	United States	Law Off.	Further report in case of the "Blanche"	161
214	22,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Granite City." Appropriation of a prize previous to condemnation. Power of Prize Court in Great Britain to order sale of a vessel declared to be in a perishable condition. Notes	161

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
215	May 23, 1863	United States	Qu. Ad.	Blockade. Cases raised in American Prize Courts as to necessity of warning ships of neutrals approaching a blockaded port, previous to capture. Wording of the President's Proclamation	163
216	23,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. W. Murphy, a British subject, on the Confederate Government, on account of goods stolen from his store at Galveston by Confederate soldiers. Justice of claim	164
217	27,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Antona." Cargo sold and vessel taken into United States' Naval Service, without previous condemnation. Imprisonment of Master, Mr. Grindle. Unjustifiable conduct of United States' Government	164
218	29,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Dolphin." Protest of master, &c. Case calls for special remonstrance of Her Majesty's Government	165
219	29,	Turkey	Law Off.	Conduct of Mr. Petherick in taking possession of property of the late Mr. A. Picifico, a British-protected subject. Steps to be taken by heirs for recovery of property	165
220	29,	Turkey	Law Off.	Opinion of conduct of Mr. Colquhoun, respecting complaint of Messrs. Crowder and Co., in re case of Mrs. Shee's property	166
221	30,	Siam	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Canada." Her Majesty's Consul should be instructed to remit the proceeds to Registrar of High Court of Admiralty in England	166
222	30,	Brazil	Qu. Ad.	Arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Vionnée, a British subject. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to intervene	167
223	30,	United States	Law Off.	Arrest at the Havana, from on board a United States' vessel, of a seaman named Charles Ford, a deserter from Her Majesty's ship "Nile." Claimed as an American seaman by United States' Consul. Application should be granted.	168
224	June 1,	United States	Law Off.	Confederate privateer fitting out at Nassau. Measures to be adopted by the Governor	168
225	1,	China	Law Off.	Case of the "Pearl." Right of Chinese authorities to confiscate both vessel and cargo for breach of Customs Laws	168
226	1,	Spain	Law Off.	Claim of Mr. Robinson on the Spanish Government on account of the confiscation of a cargo of grain shipped on board the Roman brig "Mio Zio." Mr. Robinson having compromised the case is an additional reason for non-interference of Her Majesty's Government	169
227	3,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Phantom." Insufficiency of proof that she is being fitted out for the service of Confederate States	170

No.	Date.	Country.		SUBJECT.	Page
228	June 3, 1863	China	Law Off.	Protest of Prince Kung against attempt to sue before British Tribunals, British subjects in the service of China. A British subject in the service of China is not civilly answerable in the British Consular Courts for acts done by him in his official capacity. Supreme Court at Hong Kong has no right to issue a mandamus to Consular Courts. British subjects in service of China do not cease to be so under the terms of the Order in Council	170
229	4,	United States	Law Off.	Limit of sixty-five days granted to foreigners who have declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States, to quit the United States and so avoid the conscription, under the Act of Congress, is reasonable	171
230	5,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Dolphin." Such prizes previous to condemnation enure to the Sovereign or Government of the State which commissions the captors. Power of the Sovereign to release the prize previous to condemnation. Opinion that after condemnation the property is vested in the captor, and the Government can no longer interfere in the matter	172
231	6,	Spain and United States	Qu. Ad.	Pretension of Spain to claim a jurisdiction of two marine leagues from coast of Cuba. Contrary to international law acknowledged by Great Britain and United States	173
232	6,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. Crosse on account of loss of property at Fredericksburg. Cannot claim compensation	173
233	6,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. John J. Craven. His banishment from the State of Missouri, in consequence of his writing a political pamphlet. Cannot claim compensation.	174
234	8,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Oreto." Question of supply of coal to belligerents	174
235	9,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Southerner," suspected of being fitted out for the service of the Confederate States. Not sufficient evidence to justify the seizure of the vessel	175
236	10,	Great Britain	Qu. Ad.	Application of Mr. Phené for information respecting a passport granted to his wife and Dr. Shute, in 1858. Information may be given	176
237	12,	Great Britain	Qu. Ad.	Protection of naturalized British subjects in the country of their birth. A naturalized British subject cannot claim British protection against the law of his native country	176
238	12,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Threatened arrest of Mr. A. A. Nevins at New Orleans	177
239	13,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Will o' the Wisp." No objection to papers being laid before Parliament with exception proposed	177
240	13,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Southerner." Not sufficient evidence to justify her detention	178

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
241	June 13, 1863	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Gibraltar" or "Sumter." Not sufficient evidence to justify her seizure under Foreign Enlistment Act	179
242	15,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Supposed capture of the "Elias Reid" in British waters. Further evidence required	179
243	15,	Denmark	Qu. Ad.	Correspondence respecting the nationality of Mr. Rainals, the British Vice-Consul at Copenhagen. Further information required respecting the place of his birth	180
244	16,	Denmark	Qu. Ad.	Refusal of Danish authorities to give up to the British Vice-Consul the property of Mrs. Strattin, a British subject deceased at Copenhagen	181
245	16,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Disagreement between the United States' Consul and Vice-Consul at Cape Town. As to power of Executive Government to interfere	182
246	17,	Oldenburg	Qu. Ad.	Charge of perjury against a naval officer in the service of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg. Captain Sommer not liable to prosecution for perjury, the affidavit not being sworn to in any suit or judicial proceeding	182
247	18,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Proposal of M. Mercier that England and France should obtain a joint assurance from the United States' Government on the subject of the disposal and protection of cotton, the property of neutrals, in the districts recovered by the United States from the Confederates. Rights of neutral property	182
248	18,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Further report. If employed in carrying munitions of war to Confederate States, although ostensible and professed destination might be a neutral port, she would be liable to capture	183
249	18,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Imprisonment of Mr. John Tovell, a British subject, at Nashville, Tennessee. Lord Lyons to apply for his release	184
250	20,	France	Qu. Ad.	Divorce. Case of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald. Not expedient to establish precedent of forwarding Report of Préfet de Police to Messrs. Freshfield and Co., through Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris	185
251	20,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Gibraltar" or "Sumter." Question of armament. Suggests temporary detention. Statement of Messrs. Klingender and Co. is unsatisfactory	185
252	22,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. Power. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere, Mr. Power having for a number of years exercised the functions, &c., of a citizen of Texas	186
253	22,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Passengers of the "Peterhoff." Messrs. Elsworth and Redgate. Their cases distinct from that of the "Peterhoff," and Prize Court cannot decide question of indemnity. Their illegal detention as prisoners of war	186

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
254	June 22, 1863	Great Britain	Qu. Ad.	Opinion as to whether a Power who merely accedes to a Treaty has a right to be consulted before the Powers who actually concluded the Treaty can make any alteration in its provisions	187
255	23,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Granite City." Lawfully condemned. The appropriation of prizes by the United States' Government, previous to their condemnation, is contrary to international law. Her Majesty's Government should remonstrate	188
256	23,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Tampico." Irregularity of proceedings by her being advertised for sale previous to adjudication. Abuse of belligerent power by detention of crews as prisoners of war	188
257	23,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Ill-treatment of British subjects in Confederate States. Opinion respecting the feeling of the Confederate Government at representations being made by British Consuls	189
259	27,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Whitlock. Liability to conscription of British subjects who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere in favour of British subjects who have received notice that at the termination of six weeks they would be liable to serve. Mr. Whitlock would be justified in refusing to serve against Her Majesty	190
260	30,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Minnie." Her capture justified by her position near a blockaded shore	191
261	30,	France	Qu. Ad.	Right of Indian labourers, on the expiration of their stipulated term of service at Réunion, to proceed to Mauritius at their own expense	191
262	30,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Castor." The Brazilian authorities had no right to prevent sale of coals on board the "Castor" to the "Alabama" and "Georgia," Confederate privateers lying in harbour of Bahia. Breach of neutrality by use being made of a neutral port by a belligerent, for the purpose of pursuing a neutral vessel	192
263	July 1,	United States	Law Off.	Murder on board the Confederate steamer "Sumter." Refusal of Federal Government to allow passage of British ship of war within line of blockade for delivery of prisoner to Confederate authorities. Prisoner should be released	192
264	2,	United States	Law Off.	Guns on board the "Gibraltar" (or "Sumter"). The guns not being adapted for use on board, the grant of a clearance should no longer be delayed	193
265	2,	Costa Rica	Qu. Ad.	Legality of marriages between British subjects solemnized in Costa Rica. Nationality of children born of British subjects in the Republic	194

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
266	July 3, 1863	China	Law Off.	Proclamation of Governor of Hong Kong against export of munitions of war from that Colony. Arms, &c., which have arrived previous to issue of Proclamation should be allowed to be reshipped. Proclamation should be published in "London Gazette"	194
267	3,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. John Green. Destruction of his property in Arkansas by Federal troops. Promise of Mr. Seward to bring claims on account of destruction of private property to the notice of Congress	195
268	3,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. John Shaver. His right to compensation for imprisonment. Proposed reference of such claims to a joint Commission	195
269	4,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. J. Carlin. Amount of compensation to be claimed	196
270	4,	France	Law Off.	Report on Glover v. Persigny. (See Appendix, p. 337.)
271	4,	United States and Uruguay	Law Off.	Transfer of American-built ships to British purchasers. Cases of the "Carolina" and "Kanawka," at Monte Video. Her Majesty's Government should take no steps in the matter	196
272	6,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the Confederate ship "Margaret and Jessie." Breach of international law by her being fired into within the limits of British jurisdiction. Immediate redress should be demanded	197
273	7,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Blanche," a Federal vessel captured by a Confederate ship of war, and condemned by a Confederate Prize Court, and subsequently sold to a British subject. Refusal of Federal Government to acknowledge act of Confederate Prize Court is contrary to international law, and right of British purchaser should be maintained	197
274	7,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Adela." As to answer to be returned to letter of Mr. Forward	200
275	9,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Alfred Sellers. Liability of foreigners to conscription who have declared their intention to become United States' citizens	201
276	10,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Refusal of Federal Government to allow export of certain timber from Pensacola, belonging to Messrs. Crow and Wylie	201
277	10,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Aries." United States' Government had no right to appropriate to its service the "Aries" previous to her condemnation	202
278	11,	Netherlands	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. Uhlenbeck. He having been born in Ceylon, in 1820, of Dutch parents, has the rights and privileges of a natural-born British subject	203
279	13,	United States	Law Off.	Permission should be granted to Messrs. Fawcett, Preston, and Co., to recaulk, &c., the "Alexandra"	203
280	13,	Peru	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Melville White. Proposed arbitration of Government of Hanseatic States. Approving draft of note verbale	203

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
281	July 15, 1863	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Consul," a British ship sent to Halifax, with an assorted cargo for Savannah, to await termination of war. Her liability to capture by Federal cruizers on a voyage to Nassau, without intent of breaking blockade	204
282	16,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Clyde." Seizure of enemy's goods found in neutral bottoms. Proceeding contrary to the language of Mr. Seward, that Declaration of Paris of 1856 would be acted upon	205
283	16,	Denmark	Qu. Ad.	Nationality of Mr. Rainals	205
284	18,	Spain	Qu. Ad.	Property of Mr. Joseph Wotterding. Claim of Spanish Consul at Liverpool to effects, in accordance with Treaty stipulations. Mr. Wotterding having died testate, and the Treaty stipulations alluding to intestate property only, the claim of the Spanish Consul is not well founded	206
285	18,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Act of United States' Congress relating to habeas corpus. Query as to a Treaty being superseded by a subsequent Act of Congress	207
286	18,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Antona," and imprisonment of Mr. Grindle. Not necessary to send further instructions to Lord Lyons	207
287	21,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Alexandra." Application of owners for restoration, in consequence of decision of Lord Chief Baron. Suggests purchase of the "Alexandra" by Her Majesty's Government	208
288	22,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Lord Clyde." Her detention on suspicion at Cardiff. Demurrage claimed ought to be allowed and paid by Her Majesty's Government	209
289	22,	United States	Law Off.	Claim of Mr. Robert Bowden, arising out his capture on board the "Peterhoff." Doubt as to amount of compensation claimed by Mr. R. Bowden	209
290	22,	Turkey	Law Off.	Approving Order in Council for alteration of fees levied by Her Majesty's Consuls in the Levant	210
291	23,	Peru	Qu. Proc.	Case of Mr. Melville White. Transmitting case on behalf of Her Majesty's Government for the use of the Senate of Hamburgh	211
292	24,	United States	Law Off.	Application of Mr. Adams for detention of certain steam-vessels stated to be constructing at Liverpool for service of the Confederate States. Evidence insufficient to cause detention by Her Majesty's Government	212
293	24,	United States	Law Off.	Revocation by Confederate Government of Mr. G. Moore's exequatur as British Consul at Richmond; and refusal to allow British Consuls in Confederate States to communicate with British functionaries within the enemy's lines. Her Majesty's Government has no valid or legal ground of complaint	212

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
294	July 24, 1863	Spain	Law Off.	Fine levied by Spanish authorities at Huelva on the master of the "Anne Catherine," in consequence of the accidental death of a Spanish soldier on board that vessel. No further steps should be taken beyond the remonstrance of Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid	213
295	24,	Persia	Law Off.	Robbery of British Mission at Tehran by Mirza John Ibrahim. Punishment should be left to the discretion of Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran	213
296	24,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Hardcastle	214
297	24,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Hiawatha." Further instructions to be sent to Lord Lyons	215
298	24,	China	Law Off.	Approving letter to Colonial and India Offices to prohibit export of arms from Hong Kong, pending differences between Great Britain and Japan	216
299	25,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. J. M. Vernon. The United States' Government has no right to imprison a foreign subject for attempting to break a blockade. The conduct of Mr. Vernon justifies the United States' Government in treating him as a de facto belligerent	216
300	28,	United States	Law Off.	The promise exacted of foreigners by the United States' authorities at Key West, to observe neutrality, is not contrary to international law	217
301	28,	China	Law Off.	Opinion that the power of mandamus is not possessed by the Supreme Court at Hong Kong	218
302	28,	United States	Law Off.	Appropriation of captured vessels by United States' Government previous to their condemnation by Prize Court	218
303	28,	China	Qu. Ad.	Anchorage of the United States' steamer "Wyoming," off Hong Kong. Her position near the Chinese coast. Ordinance to prevent supplies being conveyed to belligerents from Hong Kong, under such circumstances	219
304	28,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Magicienne." Referees to be appointed to agree on damages to be awarded	220
305	28,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Refusal of Captain to testify as to papers being thrown overboard	220
306	29,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Dolphin." Suspicious character of evidence. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	221
307	29,	Great Britain	Law Off.	Proposed alteration in Foreign Enlistment Act. Is new Bill to be proceeded with?	222
308	29,	Japan	Law Off.	Opinion that Consuls in China, Japan, and Siam should have additional powers to punish persons deported, and returning after deportation to those countries	222
309	31,	United States	Law Off.	Act passed by Legislature of New Brunswick for the management of local fisheries is not contrary to Treaty engagements with United States	223

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
310	July 31, 1863	United States	Law Off.	Opinion respecting list of vessels which have arrived at Nassau from American blockaded ports, sent by Mr. Mason to Her Majesty's Government	224
311	31,	United States	Law Off.	Claim of British subjects to exemption from conscription. Case of Mr. Scott. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere in the case of British subjects who have declared their intention of becoming United States' citizens	224
312	Aug. 4,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "John Freeman." Order of United States' Government prohibiting the export of arms, ammunition, or munitions of war. Its application to live stock. Claim to compensation	225
313	5,	Peru	Qu. Pr.	Case of Mr. Melville White. Revised draft of case to be submitted to arbitrator	226
314	5,	United States	Law Off.	Title to British protection of a certain class of persons residing in the United States. A son born in England, but of a British father, subsequently naturalized in the United States, and domiciled in that country, not entitled to British protection as against the United States' Government. A son born of a British father in the United States, although not a naturalized United States' citizen, cannot claim British protection as against the United States' Government	226
315	7,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Margaret and Jessie." Violation of British jurisdiction by a United States' ship-of-war. Redress should be demanded	227
316	10,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Virginia" or "Japan." Note from Mr. Adams, stating that the "Virginia" or "Japan," a Confederate privateer, was owned by a British subject, Mr. Bold. Evidence insufficient for purpose of criminal prosecution	228
317	15,	United States	Law Off.	Approving answer to remonstrance of Confederate Government respecting the appointment of Mr. Cridland to be Acting British Consul at Mobile	229
318	15,	France and Spain	Qu. Ad.	Case of Paul Gailhard Fisse. Demand for extradition made by French Ambassador at Madrid. Letters of naturalization as a British subject obtained fraudulently by M. Fisse. Not entitled to British protection	229
319	15,	New Granada	Qu. Ad.	Case of Messrs. Cotesworth and Powell. Mal-administration of justice. Amount of support to be granted by Her Majesty's Government	230
320	17,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Minnie." No reason to alter opinion contained in Report of the 30th June	231
321	19,	United States	Law Off.	Liability of British subjects to conscription. Refusal of United States' Government to consider Consular certificates as conclusive evidence of claim to exemption. Persons who have expressed their intention of renouncing their allegiance to the Queen, and have not quitted the United States' territory, are not entitled to favourable consideration	231

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
322	Aug. 20, 1863	Turkey	Qu. Ad.	Case of Dionisio Hippodimatipoulo. Claim against the Porte on account of a breach of contract. Competence of a Commission to make award	232
323	20,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Trial of master of the British ship "Dennis Hill" by United States' authorities at New York, for an assault committed on the high seas. Incompetency of tribunal. Expediency of negotiating a Treaty to meet such cases	233
324	20,	United States	Law Off.	Iron-clads constructing at Birkenhead; stated to be for a French banker, M. Bravay. Letters from Baron Gros and Mr. Adams. Insufficiency of evidence to cause their detention by Her Majesty's Government	233
325	20,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Adela;" capture on suspicion. Sentence warranted by rules of evidence and the practice of Prize Courts	235
326	20,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Laurent. Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to demand an indemnity for his imprisonment; Mr. Laurent having committed an act of perjury in signing a declaration that he was an American citizen	236
327	24,	Spain	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Criticado." Her seizure by Spanish guarda-costas out of Spanish waters, on suspicion of being engaged in smuggling. Her release by Spanish tribunals. Claims to indemnity for demurrage, &c. Claim should not be supported by Her Majesty's Government, it appearing morally certain that the "Criticado" was not engaged in a lawful voyage	237
328	25,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Empress." Right of a vessel to approach a blockaded port to ascertain the state of the blockade, if she does so in good faith. Approving decision of the United States' Circuit Court	238
329	25,	United States	Law Off.	Further report on the case of Edwards and Strirrup. Cannot claim compensation of United States' Government, the act of kidnapping having been performed without the sanction of the Government. Difficulties in the way of proposed purchase of Edwards. The act of kidnapping does not come within the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the United States	238
330	29,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Victor." Her capture by the United States' cruizer "Juniata." Breach of international law by use of a neutral port to assist in a capture. The "Victor" captured within neutral jurisdiction. Crews of neutral vessels captured on suspicion of breaking a blockade are not to be treated as prisoners of war	240
331	31,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Rhode Island." Right of Her Majesty to issue Proclamation respecting the entrance of belligerent vessels of war into British ports. Case of the Bahama Islands	242
332	31,	Mexico	Qu. Ad.	The sequestration of enemy's property, and the blockade of Mexican ports by French, are belligerent rights which it is competent for the Emperor of the French to exercise	243
333	Aug. 1863	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Margaret and Jessie." Capture within the limits of British jurisdiction. Claim of owners on Her Majesty's Government for compensation cannot be admitted	243
334	Sept. 3,	Tunis	Law Off.	No objection to amendments in Articles IV and XVII of Treaty with Tunis, to enable British subjects to hold immoveable property in that Regency	244
335	8,	United States	Law Off.	Cases of the "Peterhoff" and "Dolphin." Use of neutral ports for capture of neutral vessels	245
336	8,	Turkey	Law Off.	Persons employed in the Ottoman Bank are not exempt from serving on juries, under the terms of the present Order in Council	247
337	9,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the United States' vessel "Red Gauntlet." Answer to be returned to Messrs. Richardson and Co., as to redress being obtained through Her Majesty's Government on account of their property destroyed on board the "Red Gauntlet" by the Confederate privateer "Florida"	247
338	9,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Arrest of two British subjects, William Henrick and John A. Lee, in Texas. Steps to be taken by Consul Lynn	248
339	11,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Springbok." Case of appeal. The sale of a vessel after a sentence of condemnation is in accordance with practice of English Prize Courts. No immediate ground for official interference	248
340	11,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Case of appeal. Her Majesty's Government should not remonstrate pending appeal	249
341	12,	United States	Law Off.	Iron-clads building at Birkenhead. Their reported sale to M. Bravay. Her Majesty's Government has no legal power to seize or detain them on account of their being vessels of war. Goods the export of which may be prohibited under the 150th section of the Customs Law Consolidation Act (16 & 17 Vict., c. 107)	250
342	12,	United States	Law Off.	Case of John Stirrup, a British subject of colour, who was abducted from the Bahamas by the captain of a Confederate vessel. Cannot claim compensation of Confederate Government. As to Diplomatic relations with Confederate Government	252
343	16,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Blanche." Refusal of Mr. Seward to accede to demands of Her Majesty's Government for indemnity. Refusal of United States' Government to acknowledge right of Confederate States to establish Prize Courts. Expediency of a joint declaration on the part of Great Britain, France, and Spain with regard to neutral rights	254
344	18,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Harkaway." Acknowledgment by Confederate Prize Court of a decree of condemnation by Prize Court of United States. Documents required from Court at Key West	256

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
345	Sept. 19, 1863	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Clyde." Question of flag covering the cargo except in cases of contraband. Seizure of cargo contrary to spirit of Declaration of Paris. Right of owners to compensation	257
346	21,	United States ..	Law Off.	Opinion as to right of Confederate Government to force British subjects into ranks of the Confederate army	258
347	22,	Hans Towns ..	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. C. J. Bosdet to exemption from military service in the Hamburgh Contingent of the Federal army. The son of a British subject who has become naturalized in the State in which he resides, is not exempt from military service	259
348	22,	Netherlands ..	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. D. F. Duff. Complains of conduct of a notary in Holland, and requests assistance of Her Majesty's Government to obtain redress ..	260
349	24,	United States ..	Law Off.	Approving draft of note to Mr. Mason respecting the alleged equipment in this country of vessels of war for the service of the so-styled Confederate States ..	260
350	25,	United States ..	Law Off.	Trade between New York and the Bahamas. Unlawfulness of requiring that bonds should be entered into by British merchants. Contrary to Treaty obligations subsisting between Great Britain and United States	261
351	25,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Case of John Sweeney. His arrest and imprisonment in South Carolina. Petition for assistance of Her Majesty's Government to obtain compensation . ..	262
352	25,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Arrest at Nashville of Mr. T. R. Duncan, a British subject. Representation should be made to United States' Government..	262
353	28,	Italy and Great Britain	Law Off.	Papers to be produced before the Commission in the case of Mr. Udny	263
354	29,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Echo"..	263
355	29,	United States ..	Law Off.	Liability to conscription of certain class of British subjects. Refers to previous Reports	264
356	29,	Turkey	Law Off.	Report on claim of Mr. Tiano on Messrs. Bello and Piso. (See Appendix, page 337.)
357	30,	Turkey	Law Off.	Judgment obtained by Mr. Falkeisen, Russian Vice-Consul at Brussa, against Her Majesty's Consul in that city. Refusal of the latter to submit to judgment, and surrender property belonging to Mr. Falkeisen. He should be threatened with dismissal should he continue to resist	264
358	Oct. 3,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Case of Captain Sherwin. Unsatisfactory reply of Mr. Seward to British representations. Further steps to be taken ..	265
359	6,	Turkey . ..	Qu. Ad.	Application made by the Russian Consul at Trebizond for detention and search of the British steamer "Chesapeake," supposed to be laden with ammunition for Circassia	266
360	8,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. George Burrows. Illegal imprisonment. Right to compensation ..	266

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
361	Oct. 8, 1863	Chile	Qu. Ad.	Imprisonment of Mr. T. Henwood at Sota. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	267
362	8,	Mexico	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Caroline Goodyear." Her capture by French ship of war at Matamoros on the ground of her being laden with contraband of war. Statement that arms were destined for Confederates must be proved before a French Prize Court. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	267
363	9,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Capture of the British brigantine "Atlantic" off the bar of Rio Grande, by a United States' cruizer. Her subsequent recapture. Claim of the owner to compensation. The vessel having forcibly released herself from the possession of the captor, Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere..	268
364	9,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Seizure on board of a United States' vessel at Havana, by captain of Her Majesty's ship "Nile," of Charles Ford, stated to be a deserter from that vessel. Approving answer to Spanish Minister	268
365	10,	France	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. Thomas Lavergne. Complains of decision of Court at Pau, in an action brought against him by his wife. Mr. Lavergne having married a French wife, and taken up his domicile in France, is subject to the law of that country ..	269
366	15,	France	Law Off.	Necessity of residence of both parties for one calendar month within Consular district previous to celebration of a marriage by a Consul	269
367	19,	United States ..	Law Off.	Seizure by Her Majesty's Government of two iron-clads building at Birkenhead. Legal evidence should be obtained by Solicitor to the Customs. Workmen should be allowed to remain on board..	270
368	19,	United States ..	Law Off.	Cases of the "Georgia," "Alabama," and "Tuscaloosa." Capture of the "Sea Bride" by the "Alabama," beyond the three-mile limit. Character of the "Tuscaloosa" as an uncondemned prize, notwithstanding her employment as tender to the "Alabama"	271
369	19,	Austria	Law Off.	Refusal of Registrar of Wills and Deeds in Dublin to register a deed sworn to before Secretary of Embassy at Vienna.	273
370	21,	United States ..	Law Off.	Seizure of iron-clads building at Birkenhead	274
371	21,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Emma." Satisfactory assurance of Mr. Seward, that for the future no captured neutral vessel would be appropriated by United States' Government before condemnation	275
372	24,	Turkey	Qu. Ad.	Right of Ottoman Consul-General at Manchester to exemption from assessed taxes	275
373	24,	Peru	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Melville White. Opinion of counter-statement on behalf of Peruvian Government	276

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
374	Oct. 26, 1863	United States ..	Law Off.	Seizure of iron-clads at Birkenhead. Ill-feeling displayed by workmen in Messrs. Laird's yard. Any breach of the peace should be dealt with by Civil authorities.	277
375	26,	United States ..	Law Off.	Seizure of iron-clads at Birkenhead. Apprehension of intended attempt to run away with one or both. Competency of Her Majesty's Government to order their detention in any place which the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs may think fit	277
376	26,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Canton," screw steam-vessel, stated to be in course of construction at Glasgow for the service of the Confederate States. All legitimate means should be adopted by Her Majesty's Government to ascertain her true character and destination. Facilities offered by Scotch law for conducting preliminary inquiries into such cases	278
377	26,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Opinion of proceedings in United States' Prize Court. Evidence tends to sustain the sentence of the Court. Claimants should appeal to Supreme Court. Her Majesty's Government should not officially intervene in existing stage of the case	279
378	26,	Mexico	Qu. Ad.	Notification for insertion in "London Gazette," of French blockade of the coast of the Gulf of Mexico	280
379	27,	United States and Brazil	Law Off.	Cases of the "Abigail," "Fanny Crenshaw," and "Ann E. Grant," vessels formerly the property of citizens of the so-called Confederate States, but subsequently sold by auction in pursuance of a sentence of the Brazilian Law Courts, and purchased by a British subject. Their threatened seizure by United States' cruizers. Right of a belligerent to seize on the high seas vessels which were formerly the property of an enemy. Her Majesty's Government should communicate with the Government at Washington on the subject of claim put forward by General Webb, that property of Confederates became, at the breaking out of the war, ipso facto forfeited to the United States; and also upon the unneutral use of neutral Brazilian waters	280
380	27,	Italy	Qu. Ad.	Proposed grant of a marriage warrant to British Vice-Consul at Florence. Its interference with Leghorn Consular district	282
381	28,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Alabama." Approving draft of note to Mr. Adams	283
382	28,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Alabama." The sale of the "Sea Bride" by Captain Semmes to a British subject in the Bay of Angra Pequena was not a breach of neutrality	283
383	31,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Labuan." Injustice of the admission of further evidence after sentence, as to the principle and law of the case	283

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
384	Oct. 31, 1863	Argentine Confederation	Law Off.	Opinion of project of law submitted to Argentine Congress, by which all persons born within the Confederation are declared Argentine citizens. Law of 1857 by which the children of foreigners had the privilege of choosing their nationality at a certain age. Approving protest of Mr. Doria against retrospective application of proposed law	284
385	Nov. 4,	Ecuador . ..	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Mr. Abitbol. Refusal of Ecuador to pay its quota of the debt contracted by the original Republic of Columbia. A foreign Government has not the power of cancelling its engagement to a foreign State or subject by importing an ex post facto condition	285
386	5,	Japan	Qu. Ad.	Claim of Messrs. Jardine and Co. to compensation for losses sustained in consequence of state of affairs arising out of the demands preferred by Her Majesty's Government on that of the Tycoon ..	286
387	5,	Spain	Qu. Ad.	Case of Alexander Merriman, a British subject of colour, imprisoned by Spanish authorities in St. Domingo	287
388	5,	New Granada	Qu. Ad.	Murder by Thomas Morris of Mr. John Hunter, the chief mechanic of the New Granada Mining Company. Amnesty granted to criminals by Government of New Granada, by which T. Morris is shielded from criminal prosecution. Steps to be taken by Her Majesty's Government	288
389	10,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Peterhoff." Claims of passengers, Messrs. Redgate, Elsworth, and Bowden. Claims of Messrs. Wilson on account of portion of cargo. Proposed assistance of Mr. K. Hodgson. Legality of condemnation of the "Peterhoff" and her cargo by United States' Prize Court. Passengers interested in cargo cannot claim compensation for detention as witnesses	289
390	10,	United States and Brazil	Law Off.	Further report on the cases of the "Abigail," "Fanny Crenshaw," and "Ann E. Grant"	290
391	10,	Turkey	Law Off.	Proposed modification in Levant Order in Council of the 9th January, 1863, respecting registration	291
392	10,	Chile	Law Off.	Illegality of marriage performed by Acting British Consul at Coquimbo previous to his being duly authorized to act in the absence of Consul Ross. Parties interested should be informed	292
393	11,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Don José." Illegal capture, whilst on a voyage from Nassau to Havana, by the United States' gun-boat "Juniata." Compensation should be claimed, notwithstanding that the "Don José" was not proceeded against in Prize Court	292

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
394	Nov. 12, 1863	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Alabama." Claim of United States' Government to compensation for losses through the depredations of the "Alabama." Importance of Her Majesty's Government maintaining a firm and decided tone with reference to pretensions of United States' Government. Circumstances under which compensation was granted by United States for injuries inflicted on British commerce by French privateers. Belligerent character of the "Alabama." Contravening assumption of United States' Government that a ship-of-war built in England and sold and delivered in a Confederate port would merely be an instance of contraband trade; but that a similar sale and delivery within British territory would justify a demand for compensation ..	293
395	12,	United States ..	Law Off.	Establishment in Bermuda of naval depôts for use of Confederate States. Complaint of Mr. Adams. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere . ..	295
396	12,	France	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Léopard." Course to be pursued with regard to refusal of masters of vessels to produce papers when required by officers in command of vessels engaged in suppression of Slave Trade..	296
397	12,	Turkey	Law Off.	Approving draft of proposed Order in Council modifying Order of 9th January, 1863, respecting registration.. ..	296
398	13,	France	Law Off.	Complaint of the Rev. P. H. Maxwell at refusal of Consul at Havre to administer an oath to a person in his service, certifying to his and Mrs. Maxwell's existence. Disapproving conduct of Consul.	298
399	13,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Canton." Opinion of evidence obtained from Scotland regarding the fitting and structure of that vessel. Evidence insufficient to justify seizure, but sufficient for keeping strict watch over her and preventing her departure from the Clyde	299
400	13,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Margaret and Jessie." Application of Mr. Seward to be supplied with copy of evidence laid before Her Majesty's Government	300
401	14,	Turkey	Law Off.	Opinion of Consul Sandison's appeal against decision of Consular Court at Constantinople, regarding house leased by him from Russian Consul at Brussa ..	300
402	16,	United States ..	Qu. Ad.	Case of Mr. R. Atkin. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	301
403	17,	Siam	Law Off.	Approving amended rules and regulations for government of British subjects in Siam	302
404	17,	Spain	Qu. Ad.	Declaration of blockade of ports of San Domingo by Spain. Notice should not be published in Gazette, the blockade being illegal according to statements of Mr. Martin Hood..	302
405	18,	Prussia and Great Britain	Law Off.	Case of Weiss v. Loftus. Lease of house of Mission at Berlin. Earl Russell must attend trial with papers required by the subpœna	303
406	Nov. 19, 1863	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Carmita." Her capture off coast of Texas by the United States' ship "Bermuda," on suspicion of intended running of blockade. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	304
407	20,	Honduras ..	Qu. Ad.	Withdrawal of Mr. Acting Consul Kirkpatrick's exequatur by Government of Honduras	305
408	24,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Tampico." Legality of her condemnation by Prize Court for attempted violation of blockade ..	306
409	24,	Russia	Law Off.	Englishwomen, the widows of Russian subjects, assuming them not to have become naturalized, are entitled to British passports and protection	306
410	26,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Victor." Illegal use of a neutral port to pursue and capture vessels. Appeal of captors against sentence of Prize Court. Detention of vessel pending appeal. Lord Lyons should be instructed to remonstrate	306
411	26,	Prussia	Law Off.	Case of Weiss v. Loftus. Approving answer to note from Mr. Chaffers ..	308
412	26,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Alabama." Observations on journal of an officer on board, communicated to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Adams	308
413	26,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Sir William Peel." Stated capture within Mexican waters by a United States' ship of war off Matamoros. No further representation should be made pending inquiry before a Prize Court ..	309
414	27,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Etta." Question of legality of sale of an enemy's ship to a foreigner. Seizure at New York of the "Etta," formerly a Confederate privateer, but subsequently sold to a British subject. Redress should be obtained through Federal Law Courts	309
415	30,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Evans. Claim to compensation arising out of the burning of the "Anglo-Saxon" by the Confederate steamer "Florida"	310
416	30,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Isabella Thompson." Seizure upon the high seas of a neutral vessel sailing from one neutral port to another with a cargo free from all suspicion. Right of owners to cost and damages without being called upon to appeal ..	311
417	30,	United States ..	Law Off.	Claim of Messrs. Leach and Richards to exemption from conscription for the Confederate army. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere, the claimants having exercised certain privileges appertaining to citizens in Texas..	312
418	30,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of Mr. W. J. Matchett. His alleged ill-treatment and imprisonment. Mr. Matchett having taken part in the elections, &c., and otherwise identified himself as a United States' citizen, Her Majesty's Government are not called upon to interfere	312

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
419	Nov. 30, 1863	Japan	Law Off.	Provisional regulation regarding vagrants issued by Colonel Neale, is contrary to Orders in Council of the 23rd January, 1860	313
420	Dec. 1,	United States	Law Off.	Case of Mr. J. D. Hamilton, a British subject who had become naturalized in the United States, but anxious to resume his British nationality previous to his returning to this country. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere in his behalf as against the laws of the United States.	314
421	2,	United States and Brazil	Law Off.	Cases of the "Abigail," "Fanny Crenshaw," and "Ann E. Grant." Their detention by Brazilian authorities under pretext of legal proceedings, but actually to prevent a collision between American and British ships in Brazilian waters. Claim of General Webb to all property of the enemy of the United States by reason of its ipso facto confiscation	315
422	2,	United States	Law Off.	Compulsory military service of British subjects in Confederate States. British Consul at Galveston should remonstrate, provided that British subjects have not had the option of leaving the Confederate States, or enjoyed the rights of citizenship	315
423	3,	United States	Law Off.	Refusal of Confederate Government to allow exercise of Consular functions by British Agents. Proposed appointment of a British Agent to communicate with Confederate Government on subject of treatment of British subjects in those States. Compulsory military service. Question as to forfeiture of British protection by British subjects who have been employed in Confederate arsenals, &c. Suggestions regarding instructions to Agent	316
424	3,	United States	Law Off.	Proposed formation of a Company for construction of shot-proof vessels for running the blockade of Confederate ports. Answer to be sent to Mr. Hayman, as to Her Majesty's Government taking exception to such project	318
425	3,	Turkey	Law Off.	Case of Mr. Ninet. Proceedings against him for contempt of Consular Court	318
426	4,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Victor." No reason to change former opinion	319
427	4,	Italy	Law Off.	Application of Mr. C. Monticelli for a British passport	320
428	5,	Austria	Law Off.	Approving answer to application of Austrian Ambassador for permission to inspect iron-clads under seizure at Birkenhead, with a view to ultimate purchase by Austrian Government	320
429	7,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the Rev. F. Lightbourn. Plunder of his property by Federal troops at Jackson, North Carolina. Not advisable that Her Majesty's Government should undertake the protection of British subjects domiciled within territory of either belligerent	321
430	9,	United States	Law Off.	Case of John Smith. Complains of arrest and imprisonment in New York without trial	321

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
431	Dec. 9, 1863	Chile	Qu. Ad.	Case of a British subject named Clark or Clarkson. Question of administration to the property of a supposed convict. Ground of refusal of Chilian Government to admit intervention on behalf of Her Majesty	322
432	9,	France	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Foxhound." Tonnage dues charged by French Custom-house officers on a vessel from Zante, on the ground that the Ionian Islands are not a British Colony. Approving view of French authorities	322
433	10,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Rappahannock," formerly a ship of Her Majesty's navy, sold out of the Government service, and subsequently purchased by Agents of the Confederate States as a vessel of war. Steps to be taken by Her Majesty's Government. Suggests that a British Agent should be sent to Confederate States to represent breaches of neutrality	323
434	11,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Albert." Legality of sentence of Court of Appeal. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	324
435	11,	United States	Law Off.	Complaint of the Rev. A. C. Walshe at breaches of neutrality committed by United States' authorities in Canada	325
436	11,	United States	Law Off.	Approving proposed instructions to British Agent about being sent to Confederate States	325
437	12,	United States	Law Off.	Enlistment of British seamen on board the United States' ship of war "Kearsarge." Seamen who have been relanded at Queenstown should be prosecuted	326
438	12,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Kearsarge." Use of a British port to watch movements of Confederate steamer "Florida." The "Kearsarge" should be refused admission into ports of the United Kingdom	327
439	12,	United States	Qu. Ad.	Case of the "Rhode Island." Approving re-publication in Gazette of Regulations of January 31, 1862, respecting entry of belligerent ships into British Colonial ports	328
440	12,	United States	Law Off.	Enlistment of British subjects by Confederate Agents at Liverpool. Messrs. Jones, Hyatt, and Wilding should be prosecuted. Grounds for strong remonstrance to Confederate Government	328
441	12,	Turkey	Law Off.	Murder of a British Indian subject at Kerbela, in Turkish Arabia. Failure of justice in consequence of terms of existing Levant Order in Council. Suggest a Supplemental Order in Council for trial of British Indian subjects	329
442	12,	United States	Law Off.	Case of the "Springbok." Illegal character of capture and sentence of condemnation. Her Majesty's Government should not interfere pending appeal	330
443	12,	United States	Law Off.	Cases of the "Louisa Agnes," "J. H. Foone," "Prince Leopold," "Sarah Starr," and "Aigburth." Case of appeal	331

1863

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
444	Dec. 15, 1863	United States ..	Law Off.	Iron-clads at Birkenhead. Evidence to be obtained by Consul-General Colquhoun respecting sale of iron-clads by M. Bravay to Viceroy of Europe	332
445	22,	United States ..	Law Off.	Cases of the "Mersey," "Delta," "Empress," "Cheshire," and "Hiawatha." Legality of condemnation. Transfer of ships from a belligerent to a neutral ..	333
446	22,	Mexico	Law Off.	Case of the "Blue Jacket." Blockade of Campeachy by the French	333
447	22,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Kearsarge." Observation on Admiralty letter respecting use of British ports by the "Kearsarge" for belligerent purposes	334
448	23,	United States ..	Law Off.	Case of the "Juno." Capture off Terceira of the British ship "Juno" by the United States' steamer "Kearsarge." The apology of the United States' Government is ample and satisfactory. Belligerent use of a neutral port	334
449	29,	United States ..	Att.-Gen.	Case of the "Alexandra." Adverse decision in case of "Alexandra" would not govern the case of the iron-clads. Proposed sale of iron-clads to Denmark ..	335

APPENDIX.

No.	Date.	Country.		Subject.	Page
270	July 4, 1863	France	Law Off.	Alleged violent treatment of Mr. Glover by French police. Instruction sent to Lord Cowley sufficient	337
356	Sept. 29,	Turkey	Law Off.	Claim of Mr. Tiano on Messrs. Bello and Piso	337

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. June 1865.

CONFIDENTIAL.

Law Officers' Reports: 1863.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 1.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, January 1, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty dated the 24th December, stating that the following telegram in cypher had been received from the Senior Naval Officer at Gibraltar, viz.:—

"Confederate steamer sold to British owners. United States' Minister notifies the sale will not be respected by war vessels, and that 'Sumter' will be taken on the high seas when the vessel sails. Instructions requested."

That the Admiralty, referring to the case of the "Minerva" (6 Robinson's Admiralty Reports, pages 396 and 399), request to be informed whether the Senior Officer should be told in reply that the sale is invalid, and will not be supported by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Layard was to request that we would take the case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government ought to pursue in the matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's second letter dated the 26th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 24th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of the letter from the War Office, transcribing a further telegram received from Gibraltar respecting this case, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that the authorities at Gibraltar ought not to have prohibited the sale of the "Sumter" at Gibraltar. The United States' Consul's statement that the "Sumter" had been taken as prize appears to be unwarranted, and one to which no attention is due.

With respect to the probability and lawfulness of the capture of the "Sumter" on the high seas by an United States' cruizer, we have to remark that her seizure for the purposes of investigation and trial in the Federal Prize Court would certainly, in the circumstances, be justifiable and lawful.

We do not think it necessary for us now to express any final opinion upon the question of prize law, whether the purchase of the "Sumter" at Gibraltar by a neutral was or was not lawful.

The present Judge of the Admiralty Court decided (1855) that the sale of a single ship to a neutral by a belligerent during war was lawful, where payment was made of the purchase-money, and the title and interest of the belligerent vendor wholly divested. And he said, "It matters not, generally speaking, where the ship was lying at the period of such a sale, provided she was not in transitu, nor lying in a blockaded port." (The "Baltica," Spinks' Prize Cases, page 271.)

1863

This, however, is not inconsistent with the doctrine of Lord Stowell (the "Minerva," 6 Robinson's Admiralty Reports, page 401) that the purchase by a neutral from a belligerent of a vessel built (or, indeed, used) for war, but rendered incapable of acting as a ship of war by the arms of the other belligerent, and driven into a neutral port for shelter, is unlawful, as tending to enable the enemy to rescue himself from the disadvantage into which he had fallen.

It is true that the transfer of enemy's merchant ships, so driven into port, to neutrals has, after much doubt, been held legal by the English Prize Courts, and that in the particular case decided by Lord Stowell, the transfer was of a ship of war from a belligerent to a neutral; but the "Sumter" may properly be considered as being at the time of the sale in the same category, though to be used by the purchaser for commercial purposes only.

And, on the whole, we incline strongly to the opinion that her condemnation in the Federal Prize Court would not warrant any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

As regards the question contained in the last telegram from Sir W. J. Codrington, whether on the demand of the Liverpool merchant who is supposed to have made a bonâ fide purchase of the "Sumter," he ought to be registered as a British owner of the ship, we think the answer should be in the affirmative. It will be understood that in advising this answer, we take for granted that the several requirements, with reference to registration, of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," Part II (so far as applicable), will be complied with.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 2.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 1.)

Doctors' Commons, January 1, 1863.

My Lord,

JAPAN.

I HAVE the honour to state that I have received a letter from Mr. Hammond, dated the 29th December, 1862, in which, among other matters relative to the demands of Her Majesty's Government upon the Government of Japan, he states that he has your Lordship's directions to request me to prepare the usual instruments for the constitution of a Prize Court at Hong Kong, if I should be of opinion that it is proper to constitute the same, and authorizing me to obtain the assistance of the Queen's Proctor for this purpose; and as I am of opinion that it would be expedient to constitute a Prize Court at Hong Kong, I have therefore availed myself of your Lordship's permission to call in the assistance of the Queen's Proctor for the preparation of the necessary documents in which we are now engaged.

The Queen's Proctor has reminded me that, on all former occasions, the Advocate of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty was also called in for the same purpose.

I have therefore to beg that your Lordship will be pleased to direct the Queen's Proctor to request the Advocate to the Admiralty to render the assistance usual in these cases.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 3.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 2.)

Doctors' Commons, January 1, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th December ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying papers* respecting the arrest of Captain Sherwin, a British subject, in Fort Delaware, Pennsylvania; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the abstract right of the United States' Government to try Captain Sherwin for high treason cannot be denied; but that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed to express surprise at the gravity and suddenness of the charge, after the negotiations which had taken place with respect to that gentleman; to remark upon the great improbability of its being sustained; to point out the previous respectability of Captain Sherwin's character, and his positive denial of the charge, supported primâ facie, at least, most strongly by his refusal to leave his prison without indemnification; and to speak firmly as to the unquestionable right to ample compensation which incarceration and trial upon a false or unsustained charge of this description would give to the party accused.

It does not, however, appear to me clear why Captain Sherwin sent the five men in the schooner to Nassau; this act raises a suspicion that he was aware of their object and character. But I do not at present see any reasonable ground for supposing that he is indictable for high treason against the United States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 4.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 2.)

Doctors' Commons, January 1, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th December ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the papers noted in the margin,† respecting the destruction of the British schooner "Ellen" by the United States' cruizer "Mercedita."

That I should perceive from Lord Lyons' despatch and its inclosures that he has been informed by Mr. Seward, that under all the circumstances of the case, the United States' Navy Department is willing to allow three-fourths of the amount claimed as compensation, and that Lord Lyons awaits instructions as to accepting the sum.

Mr. Layard was to request that I would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon, and more especially as to whether the compensation offered by the United States' Government ought to be accepted by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the claimants.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report,—

That I think it is evident that the United States authorities know that the "Mercedita" was alone guilty of this collision, and it is probable that an unbiassed Court of Admiralty would find the "Mercedita" wholly to blame, and would condemn her owners in the full amount of the value of the lost schooner "Ellen," and in the costs of the suit.

Nevertheless, as the issue of such a suit is never at any, and especially in the United States' Courts at the present time, certain; as it is possible that both parties might be found in fault, in which case only half of the damage would be paid by the "Mercedita," and each vessel would be left to pay its own costs; and as even in the event of entirely successful litigation, there would be extra costs not included in what are called the taxed costs, which would fall upon the "Ellen," I advise that the tender of immediate payment of three-fourths be accepted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Messrs. Ismay & Co, November 17; to Mr. Stuart, No. 201; Lord Lyons, No. 490.

† Colonial Office, October 25, 1862; to Colonial Office, October 29, 1862; to Mr. Stuart, No. 175, October 29, 1662; Lord Lyons, No. 481, December 5, 1862.

1863

No. 5.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 3.)

Doctors' Commons, January 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th December ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence, as marked in the margin,* between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, relative to the objections entertained by the United States' Secretary for the Navy to furnish American cruizers with the Warrants and Instructions prescribed by the Treaty between the two Governments for the suppression of the Slave Trade, on the ground that the privileges granted by the Treaty are in conflict with the belligerent rights of United States' cruizers.

He was also pleased to transmit the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington on the subject; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether there is any foundation for the opinion entertained by the United States' Secretary for the Navy in this matter, and also whether the proposed draft to Lord Lyons is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the view taken by your Lordship, and expressed in the draft despatch to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, is perfectly correct.

I do not see any foundation for the apprehension of the United States' Secretary of Navy. It is quite clear that nothing is taken from, but something is added to, the power of the belligerent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 6.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 3.)

Doctors' Commons, January 3, 1863.

BRAZIL.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th December ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two despatches, from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio and Consul at Pernambuco,† regarding the administration of the property of a deceased British subject named Henry Gibson, who died at the latter place on the 3rd of last month; and to request that I would inform your Lordship what instructions should be given to Mr. Christie on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Christie should be instructed that upon the present statement the legal presumption is, that Henry Gibson, deceased, was domiciled at Pernambuco. There is an unsupported assertion that he was domiciled in England, but all the facts in these papers are against this supposition. That if he died domiciled at Pernambuco, the law of Brazil will govern the question of the validity of his testament, both as to real and personal property (it would govern it as to real property even if he were domiciled in England), and also the question of the guardianship of his minor children. There is no Treaty, I believe, with Brazil which exempts British subjects from the operation of the general rule of private international law.

The Consul may be directed to render such assistance as may be in his power to the executors, but not to dispute, as a matter of right, the jurisdiction of the Brazilian Court over the testament of Mr. Gibson. As far as the personal property in England is concerned, the Court of Probate there will follow the order of the Brazilian Court.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 7.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 6.)

Doctors' Commons, January 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th December, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 139, December 4), reporting the circumstances attending the capture of the British steam-vessel "Onachita" by the United States' cruizer "Memphis," for an alleged intention of violating the blockade of the Southern ports of North America; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the master's protest states the facts of a cargo of contraband arms having been taken on board at Bermuda, and of that cargo having been thrown overboard when the "Onachita" was chased.

The legal inference from these facts, unexplained, is, that the "Onachita" was carrying contraband to the Confederates, and might therefore be captured as lawful prize. But if she was seized 200 miles from the American coast on the ground of her intention to break the blockade, that question is again raised which appears to me of much importance, and not as yet to have met with a satisfactory solution either in the Prize Courts or from the Government of the United States, namely, the effect of the President's Proclamation upon the general law of blockade.

Previously to this Proclamation Great Britain and the United States had always maintained the position that a vessel sailing with intent to break the blockade was liable to capture anywhere on the high seas. France, on the contrary, had maintained that a vessel could not be seized, except after notice by a blockading ship, off the blockaded port.

In 1838 M. Molé put forth this doctrine in these words relatively to the blockade of the Argentine Republic:—

"Les bâtiments de guerre neutres se présentant devant un port bloqué doivent aussi être invités à s'éloigner; s'ils persistent, le Commandant du blocus a le droit de s'opposer à leur entrée par la force; et la responsabilité de tout ce qui peut s'ensuivre pèsera sur les violateurs du blocus."

And upon this text MM. Pistoye and Duverdy, in 1855, write the following comment (it is needless to say that they are mistaken as to the foundation of the English doctrine on the subject):*—

"Autrefois l'Angleterre, toujours par suite de ses idées sur les blocus imaginaires, saisissait tout navire que des croiseurs rencontraient en route pour un port bloqué, lorsqu'il était constant que ce navire avait mis à la voile après que la notification officielle du blocus avait été connue dans le port d'où il était parti. On considérait comme une violation de blocus le fait de se diriger vers des lieux qui étaient bloqués. Aujourd'hui il n'en saurait être de même, car les neutres ne sont obligés de respecter que les blocus effectifs; or, il peut se faire qu'un blocus notifié officiellement ne soit pas effectif, il peut même se faire qu'un blocus qui a été établi avec des forces suffisantes ait cessé d'exister; les neutres sont dans leur droit de se diriger vers un port bloqué, pour voir si le blocus subsiste toujours; ils ne sont coupables que lorsque, le blocus existant, ils cherchent à le violer."

The President's Proclamation would appear to have designedly set aside the old law, and adopted the French law, of blockade.

This was quite competent for the United States' Government to do; but if so, the United States' Prize Court must be bound by the Proclamation until it be formally altered:—

---

* To Mr. Stuart, No. 6; Mr. Stuart, Nos. 11 and 12; to Lord Lyons, No. 18; Lord Lyons Nos. 23 and 26.

† Mr. Christie No. 107; Consul Hunt, No. 22.

* De Pistoye and Duverdy, vol. i, page 375.

1863

"I, Abraham Lincoln, &c., have further deemed it advisable to set on foot a blockade of the ports within the States aforesaid, in pursuance of the laws of the United States, and of the Law of Nations in such case provided. For this purpose a competent force will be posted so as to prevent entrance and exit of vessels from the ports aforesaid. If, therefore, with a view to violate such blockade, a vessel shall approach, or shall attempt to leave either of the said ports, she will be duly warned by the Commander of one of the blockading vessels, who will endorse on her register the fact and date of such warning; and if the same vessel shall again attempt to enter or leave the blockaded port, she will be captured and sent to the nearest convenient port for such proceedings against her and her cargo, as prize, as may be deemed advisable."—(Proclamation of President Lincoln, dated April 19, 1861.)

I have drawn attention at some length to this point, because it seems to me expedient that it should be fully pressed upon the Prize Court on behalf of British subjects.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 8.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 6.)

Temple, January 5, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's four several letters dated the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a letter from the United States' Minister at this Court, dated December 30, 1862, calling your Lordship's attention to the sale of the vessel "Sumter" at Gibraltar; and also two letters from the War Department, dated December 31; copies of a letter from the Board of Admiralty, and of its inclosures; and a further letter from the Admiralty, both of the same date, together with its inclosures, all on the same subject; and that he was to request that we would take these further papers, together with those previously transmitted to us, into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That they do not appear to us to render necessary any alteration in the Report which we have already had the honour to make in this case. It may, however, be expedient to state explicitly that we are of opinion that the "Sumter" cannot be protected by any of Her Majesty's ships beyond the territorial waters of Gibraltar, that is, beyond the distance of three miles from the shore.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 9.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 6.)

Doctors' Commons, January 5, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to the case of the British steamer "Labuan," which formed the subject of the Law Officers' Reports of the 22nd March, 3rd April, and 17th September of last year,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 512, December 16, 1862), respecting the refusal of the authorities at New York to grant a clearance to that vessel on the 5th of November last, on which day she was loaded and ready for sea; That I should observe that the explanation given to Her Majesty's Minister for this refusal was lest, being bound for Matamoros, the "Labuan" should carry intelligence respecting General Banks' expedition, and that the clearance was at last given on the 11th ultimo, five days after General Banks had sailed.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the circumstances of this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in complaining of the detention of the "Labuan."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the circumstances of this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in my opinion, all the circumstances considered, the detention of the "Labuan" does not require any further remonstrance or intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, pages 70, 83, and 225.

No. 10.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 5, 1863.

NEW GRANADA.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in New Granada (No. 17) respecting a case in which a claim is advanced against the Government of that country, arising out of the seizure of a conductor of silver; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Griffith as to the course to be pursued by him in case the New Granadian Government should pay compensation in notes, stated to be at a discount, but which he admits are a legal tender.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That Mr. Griffith should be instructed not to support the Company in refusing the notes of the New Granadian Government, which are by the law of that country a legal tender; though the large discount to which they are now fallen may be fairly urged as an element in estimating the amount of indemnification, if it is to be paid in these notes.

I humbly suggest that the good faith of the New Granadian Government in this matter, and the difficulties with which they are pressed, entitle them to a very favourable consideration.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 11.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 6.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 6, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Madeira (No. 31, December 2, 1862), and a letter and its inclosures from the Admiralty, dated December 13, 1862, relative to the course pursued by the United States' ship "Tuscarora" in searching the British steamer "Thistle," shortly after the latter vessel had left the Island of Madeira:

That I should observe that, in the Consul's despatch, it is stated that the "Tuscarora" brought the "Thistle" to, and sent boats on board, when at a distance of between three and four miles from the shore, and that the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Leopard," in his report to the Admiralty, states that this occurred at a distance of four miles from land.

1863

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in objecting to the search of the "Thistle" under these circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it was competent to the United States' ship "Tuscarora" to stop and visit upon the high seas the British vessel the "Thistle."

That the "high seas" must be considered (at present at least) as beginning at the distance of three miles from the shore,—beyond which distance the visit is said to have taken place.

The search for contraband, moreover, was not, according to the letter of the British Consul, at all unreasonable. But it was not competent to the American cruizer to make a belligerent use of the port of a neutral State; and a more unneutral use of the port cannot be well conceived than lying in wait in it for the vessels of another neutral State as they enter and leave this port, and the instant they pass the limits of three miles, boarding and visiting them, and then returning to the port.

This conduct appears to me to call for a remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government, both to the Governments of Portugal and of the United States.

The former ought not to allow such an use of the port of Madeira to the belligerent; to persist in doing so would be a just cause of grave offence to Great Britain.

The latter, in making such a use, violates the principles of international law, both towards Portugal and Great Britain.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 12.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 7.)

Doctors' Commons, January 6, 1863.

My Lord,

JAPAN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith copies of two despatches addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (Nos. 38 and 41), respecting the reparation to be demanded of the Japanese Government, and of one of the principal Daimios, and if necessary to be enforced, for the murder and outrage committed on British subjects on the 14th of last September.

That I should observe that in the event of redress being refused by the Japanese Government, the Admiral commanding Her Majesty's naval forces in the waters of Japan will be instructed, in pursuance of Her Majesty's commands signified in the inclosed letter from your Lordship to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, to enforce the same either by reprisals or by blockade, or by both; and that in the event of reparation being refused by the Daimio, the Admiral will be instructed to use coercion against him by blockading his harbour, by seizing his ships, and if necessary, by attacking him in his residence.

That your Lordship directed Mr. Hammond to request that I would consider these instructions with reference to the steps which it may be necessary to adopt in the event of the indicated measures of coercion against the Government or the Daimio being had recourse to; and specifically with reference to the expediency of forthwith constituting a Prize Court at Hong Kong, before which vessels, either Japanese or neutrals, captured for breach of blockade, if instituted, might be proceeded against. That I would likewise consider the case of Japanese vessels taken as reprisals, and afterwards brought before a Prize Court for condemnation.

That if such a Court is deemed by me necessary, your Lordship apprehends that the authority of Her Majesty in Council will be required to give effect to it; and Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request, that in that case I would prepare without delay, and with the assistance of the Queen's Proctor if I should desire it, the proper drafts of instruments to be submitted for Her Majesty's sanction, so that the same may be ready at the time of the next Council being held, which will be shortly.

Mr. Hammond was also to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any observations which I may think it advisable should be communicated to the Admiral for his guidance in carrying out the instructions referred to in this letter.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that your Lordship had requested that the Queen's Proctor would, in conjunction with the Admiralty Advocate, render me such assistance as I might require in framing the necessary instruments for the constitution of such Prize Court.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me expedient that, in the event of Her Majesty being compelled to declare war against Japan, a Prize Court should be legally constituted at Hong Kong.

The blockade of the Japanese ports would, in all probability, affect the neutral commerce of the United States of America and of France, and might give rise to some delicate and serious questions of international law.

It is, therefore, in my humble judgment, a necessary precaution that the proper international tribunal, a Prize Court, should be in existence to decide upon them.

I have, therefore, with the assistance of the Admiralty Advocate and the Queen's Proctor, prepared the usual and proper instruments, which are as follows:—

1. Order in Council, authorizing the seizure and detention of Japanese vessels, and directing a Commission to be prepared, authorizing the Lords of the Admiralty to require the Admiralty Courts to deal with such vessels and their cargoes.
2. Commission to the Lords of the Admiralty.
3. Warrant to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty.
4. The like to the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Hong Kong.
5. Instructions to the Vice-Admiralty Courts.
6. The like to naval officers.
7. Interrogatories to witnesses.

In these papers I have followed your Lordship's instructions in treating the Prince of Satsuma, as well as the Tycoon of Japan, as belligerents.

There is a novelty in this mode of procedure; but there is no reason why the Prince should not be treated as de facto independent, which would seem to be the case, though whether he be so de jure, or not, must depend upon a more intimate acquaintance with the Constitution of Japan than I possess.

With respect to instructions to be given to the British Admiral commanding at Japan, I would suggest the importance of impressing upon him, that if he find it necessary to declare war and establish a blockade, he should in the first place publish the Notification of the blockade, according to the form which (in order to prevent the mistakes which arose in the last war) I have appended to this Report, and of which it would, I think, be convenient that some printed copies should be sent out from this country, to be ready for immediate use. He should then send copies of the same to the Representatives of foreign States in Japan, and by the earliest means in his power to Shanghae and Hong Kong, and of course to the Government at home, in order that a proper Notification may appear in the "Gazette," and be communicated to foreign Powers.

I think, moreover, that in the particular circumstances of this blockade the Admiral should be instructed not to seize any neutral vessels which have not previously been warned, and whose warning has not been indorsed upon their papers. At all events, at first and for a reasonable period, this course should be purused.

Your Lordship will observe that the Order in Council is drawn (according to precedent) widely, so as to enable Her Majesty's Government to constitute the High Court of Admiralty and any Vice-Admiralty Court a Prize Court; they are, so to speak, Prize Courts in posse, but it will be understood that only that Court to which a warrant and instructions are sent will be actually a Prize Court in esse.

1863

I mention this because I understand it to be the intention of Her Majesty's Government to create only one Prize Court, namely, that at Hong Kong.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 12.

Form of Notification of Blockade.

(Insert date at the top. Day, month, year, and ship.)

I, , Admiral, commanding the naval forces or Her Majesty Queen Victoria in the waters of Japan, do hereby notify that I have this day, the day of , by command of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, established a blockade of the following ports and harbours in the Islands of Japan, namely, and that the aforesaid ports and harbours are in a state of strict blockade by a competent force. And it is hereby further notified that all the measures authorized by the law of nations, and the respective Treaties between Her Majesty and the different neutral Powers, will be adopted and executed with respect to all vessels which may attempt to violate the said blockade.

R. P.

No. 13.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 7.)

Doctors' Commons, January 6, 1863.

My Lord,

AFRICA.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th December last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter, and its inclosures, from the African Association at Liverpool, calling your Lordship's attention to an Agreement between Pepple, King of the Bonny country, on the West Coast of Africa, on the one part, and Messrs. Foster and Chamerovzow and Viscount de Thury on the other part, by which certain exclusive privileges of trade and navigation are to be granted to the latter in consideration of the sum of 20,000*l.* to be paid by them to the King; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the provisions of the Agreement in question are at variance with the Treaty of November 21, 1848, concluded by Her Majesty's Government with the King and Chiefs of Bonny, which Treaty would be found at p. 51, vol. viii, of "Hertslet's Commercial Treaties."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the Agreement in question, which restricts for the period of twenty years, to particular persons, the rights of navigating the River Bonny, and of placing exclusive trading establishments thereon, is at variance with the letter and the spirit of the VIth Article of the Treaty of November 21, 1848, which confers upon all Her Majesty's subjects the right of trading freely in all the rivers, places, and ports of the kingdom.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 14.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 7.)

Doctors' Commons, January 6, 1863.

My Lord,

PERU.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General in Peru (No. 91), calling atention to the circumstances under which Mr. J. Smith has suffered loss by the proceedings of Peruvian authorities, and to request that I will take this despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether Her Majesty's Government are called upon to take any or what steps in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is some difficulty in understanding why Mrs. Smith applied in her capacity as an United States' subject for permission to open a canteen in San Lorenzo, and is a matter to be inquired into at Lima. I assume, at present, that she was, at the time of her application, the wife of Smith, the complainant, a British subject. He appears to have been treated with great injury and injustice; and I think Her Majesty's Representative at Lima should be instructed to support, in a moderate way and to a moderate degree, his claim for compensation from the Peruvian Government.

Probably about 1,000 or 1,500 dollars, instead of 8,000, should be the limit of the demand.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 15.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Doctors' Commons, January 10, 1863.

My Lord,

TURKEY AND EGYPT.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated the 30th December ultimo, from Messrs. Schunck and Co., soliciting your Lordship's support in regard to a claim advanced by a person named Emil Pasha on the Egyptian Government. That I should perceive from the previous papers in this case which were also inclosed the nature of Emil Pasha's claim, and the interest which Messrs. Schunck and Co. have in the matter; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether the case is one in which Her Majesty's Government should interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with Her Majesty's Consul at Cairo that this is a case in which Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 16.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Doctors' Commons, January 10, 1863.

My Lord,

ITALY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence* respecting the case of Mr. C. Wilkinson, a British subject residing at Leghorn, who was assaulted by an Italian workman in August last, and complains that he has been unable to obtain redress; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether any further steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government on Mr. Wilkinson's behalf.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Mr. Wilkinson, October 13 and December 17, 1862; to Sir J. Hudson, No. 256; Mr. West, No. 4.

1863

That I am clearly of opinion that no further steps should be taken in this matter by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Wilkinson must seek redress, according to the ordinary forms of law, in the proper tribunal.

He has suffered no denial of justice; on the contrary, the Italian authorities have perhaps gone further than those of this country would have gone, in taking measures for the future protection of Mr. Wilkinson against Borelli, in the absence of any case legally substantiated against that person in a Court of Justice.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 17.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Doctors' Commons, January 10, 1863.

ITALY.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Turin (No. 2), inclosing copies of correspondence relative to a search which was made in the houses of certain British subjects at Girgenti in October last, while Sicily was in a state of siege; he also inclosed a copy of the Decree ordering the establishment of the state of siege in the island; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether the proceedings of the Italian authorities on the occasion alluded to were such as to call for any remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in my opinion the proceedings of the Italian authorities on the occasion referred to have not been such as to render necessary any remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

It is important that I should state that this opinion is not founded on any doubt as to the general obligation of the Treaty of 1845 upon the existing Italian Government. I do not, indeed, understand that any such excuse is set up by that Government. I think that there was no deliberate intention of violating the provisions of that Treaty, but that in a state of siege, which suspends the operation of the ordinary municipal law towards all the inhabitants of the city, the visiting and search of the houses of certain British subjects in the necessary execution of a measure called for by regard for the public security, affords no reasonable ground for complaint to the Government of those subjects; especially when such visiting and search appears to have been unattended by violence or plunder. It would be pedantic and unjust to consider such a forced and temporary suspension, in time of war, of the provisions of a Treaty intended to operate in time of peace as an intentional or unjustifiable breach of its obligations.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 18.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Doctors' Commons, January 10, 1863.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres (No. 34, October 31, 1862), respecting the case of Martin Quigley, a British subject, who has been forcibly compelled to serve in an Argentine regiment, under the plea that he had been guilty of some criminal act; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take this correspondence into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion on the legality of this measure, and as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Doria.

Mr. Layard was pleased to observe that I should find the Treaty to which Mr. Doria refers in the last paragraph of his despatch, at page 47 of vol. iii of "Hertslet's Treaties."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, both upon general principles and the specific provisions of the Treaty, it was an unlawful act on the part of the Argentine Republic to compel a British subject to serve as a foreign soldier, though it be defended as a punishment for an alleged, and in this case unproved, criminal offence.

I am of opinion that Mr. Doria should be instructed to state, as the clear and definite instruction of Her Majesty's Government to him, this position of law to the proper authorities of the Argentine Republic.

Mr. Doria, in making this communication, will of course take care not to re-open the individual case of Mr. Quigley; but, on the contrary, to repeat the expression of his satisfaction that it has been so amicably terminated.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 19.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

RUSSIA.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th of December ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a correspondence[*] which had taken place respecting a claim on the Russian Government which had been put forward by Mr. Bate for payment for an astronomical instrument which he alleged was supplied by his father to the Emperor Alexander of Russia in 1818, and that we would see that the authorities at St. Petersburgh reject Mr. Bate's claim; and to request that we would take the papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government could give any further assistance in the matter to Mr. Bate.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with Lord Napier in believing the claim of Mr. Bate to be well-founded, and that the astronomical instrument was ordered on behalf of the Emperor, and sent to the Russian Embassy; and we also agree with his Lordship in thinking that the evidence offered by Mr. Bate (although not sufficient to substantiate any claim in a Court of Law if such claim had been competent) is sufficient to produce a moral conviction that the price of the instrument in question is really due from the Russian Government. At the same time we feel bound to add that the very great lapse of time, and the neglect of the opportunities which might have existed of substantiating the material facts by conclusive evidence, if greater diligence had been used (especially at the time when the instrument itself was discovered in the hotel of the Russian Embassy after Count Lieven's departure from this country), are such as to make its rejection by the Russian Government not necessarily inconsistent with good faith.

Entertaining these views, we think that Lord Napier should be instructed to make a further application, stating that Her Majesty's Government are unable to arrive at the same conclusion as the authorities at St. Petersburgh; and that, believing the claim to be made in good faith, and to be supported by evidence worthy of a more candid examination than that which it has yet received, they hope that the Imperial Government will consent to refer the matter to arbitration, as proposed by Lord Napier. Should this, however, be refused, we do not advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in the matter.

---

[*] Mr. Bate, July 1; to Mr. Bate, July 17; Mr. Bate, July 19; to Lord Napier, No. 136, 1861. Memorandum, April 25; to Mr. Bate, May 3; Mr. Bate, April 23 and May 8; to Mr. Bate, May 10; to Lord Napier, No. 103; Lord Napier, Nos. 447 and 455, 1862.

1863

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 20.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st December ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, as marked in the margin,* by which we would perceive that, with the view to render the Treaty of the 7th of April, 1862, between Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America for the suppression of the African Slave Trade, still more efficacious for its purpose, it was proposed to extend the reciprocal right of visit and detention of vessels to the coasts of the Island of Madagascar, Puerto Rico, and San Domingo.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that, by the Ist Article of the Treaty in question, this right could only be exercised within 200 miles from the coast of Africa to the southward of the thirty-second parallel of north latitude, and within thirty leagues of the Island of Cuba; and it was now proposed to extend it to within thirty leagues of the coasts of the Islands of Madagascar, Puerto Rico, and San Domingo: he was accordingly to transmit to us the draft of an Additional Article to the Treaty of the 7th of April, 1862, for giving effect to this arrangement, which Lord Lyons is to be instructed to propose to the United States' Government; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our early convenience, with our opinion whether it is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the draft of the Additional Article to the Treaty of the 7th of April, 1862, is, in our opinion, properly drawn for the purpose of effecting the contemplated arrangement.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 21.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th of December ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us, with reference to the concluding paragraph of our Report of the 8th of December, 1862,† respecting the case of the "Alabama," that your Lordship had expressed to Mr. Adams his readiness to confer with him with the view of endeavouring to ascertain whether any alterations could be made in the Foreign Enlistment Acts of this country and of the United States, whereby the hands of the respective Governments might be strengthened, so as to admit of their dealing more effectually with cases similar to that of the "Alabama."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that in anticipation of Mr. Adams availing himself of this offer, your Lordship would be glad to be furnished by us at our earliest convenience, with any suggestions which we may have to offer, by which this object might be effected so far as British law is concerned, and which your Lordship might place before Mr. Adams as proper to be adopted by the United States in regard to their laws.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 24, 25, and 27, Slave Trade; to Lord Lyons, No. 17, Slave Trade; Admiralty, October 31, 1862.

† See Reports for 1862, page 306.

Mr. Hammond was also further pleased to add that on previous occasions Mr. Adams has mentioned generally in conversation with your Lordship, that the provisions of the law of the United States are more stringent than those of the British statute.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act might be wisely strengthened, as we have already stated, by arming the Government with an earlier power of interference with respect to ships whose construction might denote that they were intended for belligerent purposes. The principal defects, in this respect, of the present Act are, that the 7th section prohibits only the "equipping, furnishing, fitting out, or arming" any ship or vessel, "with intent, or in order that," &c., and that these words might probably be held not to extend to the building or constructing, or altering and adapting a vessel, with intent or in order that the same might be used as a ship of war in the service of a belligerent Power, if the operation stopped short of what might be technically called equipment or armament; and also that there is nothing to prohibit the sale or delivery, for the like purpose, of a ship constructed (or even equipped and armed) as a ship of war, provided the act of equipment or armament for that purpose is not brought home to the seller. We think that the statute might with propriety be amended, so as to bring the acts of building, &c., and of sale, within the same category with those of equipping and arming, when the intent and purpose is the same. Great care would, of course, be necessary in framing such an amending Statute; and it does not occur to us that beyond this, any additional stringency or severity of provision could prudently be attempted.

Referring to the observations of Mr. Adams to your Lordship as to the greater stringency of the American Foreign Enlistment Act, we think it might be expedient if your Lordship would request him to state in what respects he considers it to be more stringent than the British Act of Parliament; and perhaps, when this information is obtained, your Lordship would have the goodness to submit it to us for our consideration.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No 22.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 13th, 14th, 24th, and 28th of November last,* respecting the case of the British steamer "Blanche" destroyed in Spanish waters by the United States' cruizer "Montgomery," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, the correspondence which has since passed on the subject,† including despatches from Lord Lyons, covering copies of notes which he has exchanged with Mr. Seward, relative to the claims for compensation which Lord Lyons has been instructed to put forward, and an instruction which has since been addressed to his Lordship (No. 326), directing him to ask for an apology in regard to the compulsion exercised on Mr. Clements to induce him to sign a false statement of the circumstances relating to the "Blanche."

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond has been pleased also to transmit to us, by your Lordship's

---

* See Reports for 1862, pages 278, 280, 285, and 296.

† Lord Lyons, No. 476, December 2, 1862; to Lord Lyons, No. 330, December 26, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 496, December 8, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 501, December 12, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 513, December 16, 1862.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS
1863

directions, a further despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons respecting this case (No. 531, December 19), and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, together with those previously sent to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do think Her Majesty's Government, after all that has passed, ought to leave the claim for compensation entirely in the hands of the Spanish Government; among other reasons against this course is this, that the demand for the apology on account of the compulsory false statement of Mr. Clements is a matter which could not well be left to that Government, and, indeed, one in which it would probably, and might properly, decline to interfere.

We think Lord Lyons acted properly in allowing the negotiation between Spain and the United States to precede his own demands on the part of Her Majesty's Government, but that he ought now to press these demands in a substantive form upon the United States' Government, both generally as to the unlawful seizure and destruction of the vessel, and particularly as to the grievous wrong done to Mr. Clements.

As to the general demand, however, it seems to us expedient that it should be in harmony as far as possible with that made by the Representative of the Crown of Spain.

It would appear by Mr. Seward's letter of December 17 (which has been sent to us since the former papers), that it is the intention of the United States' Government to dispute altogether the British ownership and character of the "Blanche."

We have at present no means of knowing upon what evidence an assertion apparently so improbable is founded.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 23.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 1st instant and 5th instant* respecting the case of the "Sumter," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of the answer which your Lordship proposed to return to the note from Mr. Adams on this subject, and to request that we would take this draft into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether it is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's command we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter of your Lordship, of which a draft is inclosed, is proper to be sent with the alterations which we have had the honour of making in the margin and at the end thereof.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 24.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

FRANCE.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th December ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the French Chargé d'Affaires at this Court respecting the case of the French vessel "Olivier," which, being bound from Hayti to Liverpool with a cargo of cotton and mahogany, appeared to have been abandoned at the latter port by the owners, in consideration of the heavy expenses already incurred, and which would further be necessary to render that vessel seaworthy.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that it appeared that the consignee of the cargo threatened the owners of this vessel with proceedings in the English Courts in consequence of the course pursued by them in this matter, and the expense he has had to incur before the cargo could be released; and that, on the other hand, the proceedings of the owners were stated to be justified by French law, and the French Chargé d'Affaires was desirous of ascertaining whether, in consideration of the serious consequences which would result to French maritime interests in general from an adverse judgment in this case, it would be possible to obtain the good offices of Her Majesty's Government to averts uch an issue; and to request that we would take the Marquis de Cadore's application into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that it is not competent to Her Majesty's Government, by any use of its good offices or otherwise, to prevent any subject of Her Majesty from bringing an action in the proper tribunal against a French subject for damages, whatever may be the cause of action alleged; nor to interfere with the trial and adjudication of any such action, if brought according to the ordinary rules of law.

Any conflict between the commercial laws of France and Great Britain will be duly considered by the Judge of the Court: and the question whether the law which ought to govern the contract be French or English will be determined upon the usual principles of jurisprudence applicable to such cases. If any inconvenient consequences should at any time result from the manner in which any such question may be eventually decided by the English Courts, in any case which may be of general importance to the commercial interests of the subjects of the two countries, the only mode of applying a remedy to such inconvenience will be by new legislation.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 25.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd December last, stating that with reference to our Report of the 30th September,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 483), inclosing a copy of a despatch from Mr. Vice-Consul Edwards explaining his statements respecting the treatment of the crews of captured vessels, and in particular respecting the treatment of the crew of the "Mersey;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

The previous papers relating to this subject were also therewith inclosed.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That we think the explanations offered by Mr. Vice-Consul Edwards, as far as relates to his statements in his letter to Lord Lyons of the 5th of June, 1862, respecting the treatment of the crew of the "Mersey," are by no means satisfactory.

---

* Pages 1 and 6.

* See Reports for 1862, page 236.

† Lord Lyons, No. 415; Mr. Stuart, No. 184; Law Officers, September 30; to Mr. Stuart, No. 143.

1863

We do not think it necessary to remark upon that part of the case, which originally rested upon the allegations of certain coloured seamen, who have at different times given different and inconsistent accounts of the same transactions. But we much regret to observe that on a point of graver and more serious importance, resting on matters within his personal knowledge, Mr. Vice-Consul Edwards has failed to justify his own statements.

It appears, from Mr. Upton's letter of the 15th of August, that on the 30th of May last, at the close of the examination of certain witnesses in the case of the "Mersey," an order of the Prize Court was applied for and obtained by Mr. Edwards' father (a Notary Public, then acting as counsel for the claimants), for the delivering to each of the "Mersey's" crew, who had been detained as witnesses, of his personal effects, according to a particular specification thereof, then made by the parties themselves on affidavit, and that this order was soon afterwards, in due course, carried into effect, and no complaint of its infraction was ever made. Nevertheless, on the 2nd June (three days after the date of this order), Mr. Charles Edwards, the Notary Public, and father of the Vice-Consul, who had himself obtained it, took from each of those witnesses a protest, in which it was represented that they had been "robbed and plundered of their personal effects;" and, on the 5th of June, Mr. Vice-Consul Edwards wrote to Lord Lyons in the following terms: "Although repeated applications have been made to the United States' Marshal by the parties in person, as well as, at my instance, by the counsel to the claimants, they have not up to the present time succeeded in obtaining restitution of the property taken from them. This system of robbery has characterized all the cases," &c., &c. No mention of the order for restitution being made either in the protest or in the Vice-Consul's despatch.

It is difficult, we think, to speak in terms of too strong censure of such a representation, made under such circumstances, by an Acting Consul, to the Minister of his own Government, unless it could be excused on the ground that he was himself misled, or left in ignorance of the material facts.

This, however, is not alleged by the Vice-Consul; nor, indeed, could it be, because it was at his instance, as he states, that his father, Mr. Charles Edwards, made application upon the subject to the United States' Marshal. What he now offers in his justification on this point, is a letter written on the 6th of June by his father to the United States' Marshal, complaining that a delay of five days had then taken place in the execution of the order of the Prize Court, for delivering up of the property in question; together with the reply of the United States' Marshal, bearing the same date, in which that officer says, "My order to deliver this property would have been given to your clients as soon as they were discharged, had they applied to me for it;" and explained, that it would be necessary for the owners to go to Fort Lafayette, where the property was, in order to have it delivered to them; adding in a postscript, "If your clients will go down to Fort Lafayette, and receipt for their effects, I will pay the express fare to New York." These two letters, the Vice-Consul now appeals to, as evidence of the literal truth of his own statement on the 5th June, that the witnesses had not up to that time succeeded "in obtaining restitution of the property taken from them." He appears, however, to forget that the whole importance of that statement consisted in the character ascribed by him to the detention of this property, as part of a "system of robbery," said by him to be practised upon the crews of captured British vessels.

With respect to the other matters now brought forward by the Vice-Consul in confirmation of his general statements, respecting the treatment of the crews of the captured vessels, we do not feel ourselves in a position to express any satisfactory opinion, and we would suggest that it may probably be desirable to learn, what is the view taken of these matters by Lord Lyons and Mr. Stuart.

The disproof which Mr. Edwards' statements have received in the case of the "Mersey" renders it not improbable that a similar investigation might, in other instances, be attended with similar results; and it is not shown to our satisfaction that in the particular instances now mentioned all proper and available means were taken to bring the alleged facts to the notice of the Prize Courts, or other proper authorities of the United States, and to obtain redress from them after due inquiry.

We observe that the United States' Marshal, in his letter of the 18th August last, says that, down to that date, no complaint of ill-treatment or peculation had ever been made to him. The Vice-Consul in his present despatch makes, however, one very remarkable statement, into which, we think, it will at all events be proper to institute further inquiry; namely, that the crews of four British ships, the "Fanny Laurie," the "Wave," the "Maria," and the "A. Middleton," were confined, either in Fort Lafayette, or in the City jails, for periods varying from twenty to thirty-five days, "most of that time in irons." These periods of detention, though long, may possibly be justified; but nothing (unless it were very violent and disorderly conduct on their own part) could justify the confinement in irons of British subjects, detained in prize cases as witnesses; in the other papers, however, which accompany this despatch, we find no where, any mention at all of irons, except as to one single coloured seaman, of the "Fanny Laurie," who is stated to have been placed in irons, for some hours, on board the United States' ship "Massachusetts" (on the pretext, as we collect, of some alleged refractory words or conduct), but who is not said to have been afterwards so treated, either in Fort Lafayette or in any other prison. It is remarkable, if this statement as to irons is really well-founded, that no direct complaint on so very grave a subject should have been previously made to Her Majesty's Government; while, on the other hand, if it should prove to be erroneous, or seriously exaggerated, it will furnish additional ground for receiving with much caution any future representations which may proceed from the same quarter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 26.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 511, December 16, 1862), respecting the cases of the British schooners "Isabel" and "Teresa," which have been captured by United States' cruizers, and taken into Key West for adjudication.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state, that, in these cases, a question has arisen as to how far the British Vice-Consul at Key West would be borne out in interfering on behalf of the Captains of the respective vessels—the one being an American citizen, and the other being claimed as such; and that we should observe, that Her Majesty's Minister, while referring this question for the ultimate decision of Her Majesty's Government, had directed Her Majesty's Consul at New York to furnish the British Vice-Consul at Key West with instructions in the sense of a despatch which your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Minister on the 7th of March last (No. 102), and which was founded upon a Report from the Law Officers of the 3rd of that month; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any further instructions which should be given in regard to them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington has taken a correct view of the law applicable to these cases, in his despatch to Mr. Consul Archibald. With respect to the question in the letter of Her Majesty's Representative (December 16, 1862), "whether bonâ fide United States' citizens, who have not become enemies of the States by adhering to the so-called Confederate Government, have, if taken on board British vessels, captured by the United States for a breach of blockade, any claim to British protection," we think this question must be answered, generally, in the negative. We observe, however, both with respect to this class of United States' citizens, and to all other persons captured on board British vessels, that questions might arise, not touched in this nor in our former Report, in the event of its proving that any vessel, out of which such persons may have been taken, was unjustifiably captured. It does not occur to us that further instructions, with respect to the particular cases referred to, need now be sent to Her Majesty's Representative at Washington.

1863

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 27.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Temple, January 12, 1863.

TURKEY.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd December ultimo, stating that your Lordship's attention having been called to an article in the "Daily News," having reference to a proceeding in the Consular Court at Constantinople, you were pleased to direct Sir Edmund Hornby, who was then on his return to that place, to send home a report on the case.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that this Report had been received, and that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit it to us,* together with the report of the proceedings in the Court, extracted from the "Levant Herald," and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the regularity of the course taken by the Court.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the charge on which Mr. Calvert was tried at Constantinople, before Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Francis, is described partially in the Report of Mr. Francis to Sir Edmund Hornby of the 8th December, 1862 (see page 4); and no further account of the form or terms of the charge is to be found in the papers which are before us. It is clear, from this language, as well as from the statements of Sir Edmund Hornby and of Mr. Francis, that the procceding which was adopted against Mr. Calvert had not (indeed could not have) any reference to the 291st Rule of the Consular Court, providing for the punishment of contempts and misbehaviour in the face of the Court, or during its sitting; on the contrary, it went altogether upon the ground of the utterance of the words used by Mr. Calvert in relation to Mr. Consul Fraser on the occasion referred to, amounting to a misdemeanour at common law, and being, therefore, under the Order in Council, a criminal offence if committed in Turkey. If a misdemeanour had thus been committed by Mr. Calvert, and he was properly tried for the offence, fine and imprisonment were a proper punishment; and although we think that, in awarding punishment, the Court would have acted wisely to have been governed by the extent of fine and imprisonment provided by the 291st Rule in the case of contempt of Court, yet we cannot say that it was bound so to act.

As regards the mode of trial, that is, "in a summary way," and without a jury, we think that the legality of the course pursued is established in the two Reports of Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Francis. The offence having been committed at the Dardanelles, the case was not one "within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Consular Court," so as to be governed by the 37th Regulation of the Order in Council, as regards "trials in a summary way." We are not satisfied, as Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Francis appear to have been, that this case could properly be treated as coming within the provisions of the 18th clause of the Order in Council, which applies to cases, the "pendency" of which is to be reported by the Provincial Consular Court to the Supreme Consular Court; and, here, it does not appear that any criminal proceeding had been instituted, or was pending, against Mr. Calvert in the Provincial Court. But, assuming the case not to fall within the 18th section, we think that it would properly come within the general terms of the concurrent jurisdiction, which is conferred, by the 16th section, on the Supreme Consular Court. It would also seem that the award of "costs" against the accused was warranted, as a part of the sentence, by the 338th Rule of proceeding in cases dealt with summarily.

---

* Sir E. Hornby, No. 77, December 10, 1862.

The main question remains—was the use of the language admitted to have been uttered by Mr. Calvert, on the occasion on which it was used, a misdemeanour? It is not often that, in England, oral defamation of this kind is made the subject of proceeding, either by indictment or criminal information, especially when the slanderous words do not appear to have been uttered in the presence and hearing of third parties; and there is no trace of such having been the case, here, on the notes of the Judge who tried the case; although Sir E. Hornby distinctly states, in his Report, that the words were spoken "in the presence of" foreigners (he believes) as well as British subjects. On the whole, however, we think that the words, having been spoken of a Judge, and being a serious calumny of him in his judicial office, might properly have formed the subject of an indictment if uttered in England, and were, therefore, criminally punishable in the person of a British subject in Turkey.

We must add, however, that the case is one of considerable nicety, and of a class which it is not desirable, without necessity, to bring before such an exceptional tribunal as the British Consular Court in Turkey. We make this remark the rather because it is to be collected from the Reports of the Chief Judge and the Legal Vice-Consul, that, in the punishment awarded regard was had, not only to the slander particularly complained of, but also to the supposed necessity of upholding the general authority of the Court, and even to the alleged aggravation of Mr. Calvert's offence by the intemperate line of advocacy adopted by his Counsel.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 28.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 14.)

Temple, January 13, 1863.

AFRICA.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd December last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that your Lordship had received from the Archbishop of Canterbury the inclosed Memorials, addressed to the Queen, praying for Her Majesty's licence, under the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, in order to enable his Grace to consecrate the Rev. W. G. Tozer, as Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland, to the tribes around Lake Nyassa and the adjoining country; and the Rev. Edward Twells to be Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland in the Orange River Free State, formerly within the diocese of Cape Town. That the Archbishop, however, does not, in his Memorials, as was done by his predecessors in the case of the Bishop of the Anglican Church at Jerusalem in 1841, and in the case of the Bishop of Honolulu in 1861, make any suggestion as to the limits to be assigned to the respective dioceses; but on the contrary, in the letter from his Secretaries which accompanied the Memorials, states that he is unable to offer any.

Mr. Layard was pleased to transmit to us the papers connected with the cases of Bishop Alexander in 1841, and Bishop Staley in 1861; and with reference to the form of Memorial and Licence used in those cases, and to the provisions of the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, and especially the 2nd section of that Act, your Lordship requested that we would furnish you with our opinion whether the Queen's licence to consecrate the two Bishops now to be appointed can properly be issued without a more precise definition of the limits within which they are to exercise their spiritual jurisdiction than is contained in the Archbishop's Memorials.

That, as bearing upon this subject, Mr. Layard was to refer us to two Reports addressed by the Law Officers to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonial Department under date of the 5th of October and 20th of December, 1858, relative to the consideration of the late Bishop Mackenzie, to whom Mr. Tozer, one of the two Bishops now intended to be consecrated, is to be the successor.

1863

That your Lordship would be glad to receive our reply at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, does not, in our opinion, render necessary any precise definition of the limits within which a Bishop consecrated under that Act shall exercise his spiritual functions in a foreign country, unless it be proposed that Her Majesty, besides authorizing the consecration by her Royal licence under the 1st and 3rd sections, should also, under the 2nd section, authorize the exercise by such Bishops of "spiritual jurisdiction over the ministers of British congregations of the United Church of England and Ireland, and over such other Protestant congregations as may be desirous of placing themselves under his authority." If, in the case of Mr. Tozer, it were sought to obtain Her Majesty's authority for the exercise of any such jurisdiction, we are not satisfied that it would not be necessary to assign more precise limits for that purpose than any which can be collected from the description of "the tribes around Lake Nyassa and the adjoining country," contained in the Archbishop's Memorial. Nor would there appear to us to be any serious practical difficulty in doing this (if it were thought desirable) consistently with the general nature and purposes of the Mission; for the whole space, within any given degrees of latitude and longitude, might be assigned (as the whole of Syria, Egypt, Chaldea, and Abyssinia was assigned in the case of Bishop Alexander), "subject to such alterations in respect to the limit of the jurisdiction to be exercised as may hereafter be made by Her Majesty's authority." The limits so assigned would be those only of the legal "jurisdiction" to be exercised over ministers of British congregations and others, voluntarily submitting themselves, in that respect, to British authority; and there would be no impediment to the extension, beyond those limits, of the Bishop's missionary operations.

In the case, however, of Mr. Twells, the description of "the Orange River Free State, formerly within the diocese of Cape Town," appears to us to be a specification of limits as definite as those which were thought sufficient in the cases of Bishop Alexander and Bishop Staley: and which might, therefore, be safely and properly adopted if it were thought expedient to authorize Mr. Twells to exercise jurisdiction over the ministers of British congregations, &c., pursuant to the 2nd section of the Act.

We observe that the Memorial of the Archbishop of Canterbury differs, in each of these cases, from those which were presented to the Crown by his Grace's predecessors before the consecration of Bishop Alexander and Bishop Staley, in this one important respect, viz., that it does not solicit Her Majesty to authorize the exercise, by the Bishops now to be consecrated, of any jurisdiction over ministers of British congregations, or others voluntarily submitting themselves to British authority. And if Her Majesty should simply comply with the prayer of these Memorials (as, in our opinion, she lawfully may), without proceeding to authorize the exercise of any such jurisdiction, the effect will be that, while the consecrations may lawfully take place, the Bishops, when consecrated, will not be entitled, by virtue of the Act, to exercise any jurisdiction over any ministers of British congregations, &c.

Her Majesty's Government will of course determine whether there is any reason of public policy which ought to stand in the way of the extension of the missionary operations of the Church of England among the native population of Africa by means of Bishops, without any dioceses fixed under the authority of the Act in the manner desired.

It does not occur to us to suggest any such objection; and being of opinion that Her Majesty's licence for the consecration of a Bishop under the 1st and 3rd sections of the Act may lawfully be granted in a case in which it is not thought expedient also to authorize the exercise of jurisdiction by such Bishop over the ministers of British congregations, &c., within any local limits, under the 2nd section, we answer your Lordship's question by saying, that we think the Queen's licence to consecrate the two Bishops now to be appointed may properly be issued, without any more precise definition of the limits within which they are to exercise episcopal functions than is contained in the Archbishop's Memorials; but that the licence, if so given, ought not to proceed (as in former cases) to authorize the exercise by such Bishops of any local jurisdiction.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 29.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,
Temple, January 16, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th of January instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 2nd instant, respecting the case of the "Alabama," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 544, December 23, 1862), inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward, justifying the proceedings taken in regard to the seamen of the captured vessel "Sunbeam" (case reported on by the Queen's Advocate on the 28th of November last), to induce them to enter the service of the United States' Government; and to request that we would take these circumstances into our consideration, with reference to any bearing they might have upon the case of the "Alabama."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the position taken up by Mr. Seward ought not to be left unnoticed.

It is in substance that it is perfectly competent to the Federal Government to induce, so that neither violence nor fraud be used, Her Majesty's subjects to act as belligerents, contrary to the Foreign Enlistment Act, and in direct opposition to the principles of international law contended for by Mr. Adams in the case of the "Alabama."

This is a circumstance not to be forgotten in any future correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and Mr. Adams on the subject of that ship.

It would not be proper, we think, to leave unanswered this letter from Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons. We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to express the regret which Her Majesty's Government feel at the declaration of Mr. Seward, its inconsistency with the obligations of the belligerent towards the neutral, and the manner in which it must embarrass Her Majesty's Government in their endeavour to observe a strict neutrality between the belligerent Powers.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 30.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

GENERAL.

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, January 16, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th January instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the previous day's date, suggesting the amendments which, in our opinion, might be made to the Foreign Enlistment Act, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that it appeared to your Lordship that it would be advisable, in addition to the alterations suggested by us, to give a power to the Secretary of State for the Home Department to act, as well as the Customs Department, or instead of the Customs Department, in seizing a vessel infringing the provisions of the Act; and to request that we would take into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the propriety of giving this power to the Secretary of State.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that it would be proper to give this power to the Home Department, without taking away the existing power possessed by the Customs Department.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 31.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

Temple, January 16, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 2nd instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Adams, dated the 5th January, inclosing copies of papers respecting the depredations committed by the "No. 290," or "Alabama," which he has been instructed to submit to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers containing accounts of the various captures made by the Confederate war-steamer the "Alabama" do not appear to us to affect in any way the principles of international law applicable to the proceedings of that ship which we have had the honour to bring to your Lordship's notice in our former Reports. Some of the memorialists pray that their Government will so order their naval force as to prevent such captures of the "Alabama." That is undoubtedly the remedy for the evil of which they complain, but it is, of course, one with which Her Majesty's Government have no concern. There is also an allegation that the crew of the "Alabama" are partly or mainly composed of British subjects; if this be so, these persons are acting in violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, but unfortunately in accordance with the principles upon this subject maintained by Mr. Seward in his recent despatch to Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 32.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

Temple, January 17, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship, with reference to our Report of the 8th of December last* respecting the case of the "Alabama," to transmit to us, together with the former papers, the correspondence which has since passed between your Lordship and Mr. Adams on the subject, viz., your Lordship's answer to Mr. Adams of the 19th ultimo, which is founded mainly upon our above-mentioned Report, and the note and inclosures which been received from Mr. Adams in reply.†

Mr. Hammond was pleased also to transmit to us the sketch or outline of a note which your Lordship has drawn up by way of rejoinder to Mr. Adams, and stated that your Lordship requested we would take this proposed note, and the other papers, into consideration, and return it to your Lordship with such corrections and additions to it as we might consider desirable.

Mr. Hammond also inclosed two memoranda relative to the case of the "America," which bear on the case of the "Alabama."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this note and the other papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the outline of the note drawn up by your Lordship contains, with certain slight additions, which we have made in the margin of it, all that it seems to us expedient to say by way of rejoinder to Mr. Adams.

We venture to suggest that the last paragraph, which we have placed within brackets, should be omitted, inasmuch as it does not appear that the United States' Government can properly be held responsible for any disloyal language of the persons referred to, and it seems better not to introduce any matter which may be open to that remark.

We have also suggested the substitution for that paragraph, of another having direct reference to the case of the crew of the "Sunbeam."

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 33.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

Temple, January 17, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th January, 1863, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two further despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 539, December 22, and No. 560, December 26), respecting the case of the steamer "Blanche," destroyed in Spanish waters by the United States' steamer "Montgomery;" and to request that we would take the same into consideration, together with those referred to us in Mr. Hammond's letters of the 31st ultimo and 3rd instant, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is impossible to read the evidence taken before the Court-martial without being struck by the evident determination of the Federal captain to disregard, in the most flagrant manner, the rights of neutrals, of which he does not pretend that he was ignorant.

Upon this point there cannot be a more aggravated case.

With regard to the origin of the fire which eventually consumed the ship, it is most incredible that any one of the crew of the ship was the author of it.

It is remarkable that "the card" of Mr. Clements was not forwarded with the proceedings of the Court-martial to the Spanish Minister. But we have every reason to believe that this compulsory statement of Mr. Clements forms one of the objectionable features of this great outrage.

It remains, lastly, to notice the declared intention of Mr. Seward to disregard the sentence of the Confederate Prize Court, duly and formally pronounced, on the ground that rebels cannot have a Prize Court.

If this doctrine be, indeed, formally promulgated, it will require the most prompt and decided contradiction on the part of Great Britain and every neutral State. It is as much at variance with the most important principles of international law as it is destructive of the belligerent rights and status, on which the conduct of the United States' Government throughout the war has been founded, and which have hitherto been scrupulously (however much to their injury) respected by the neutral States.

If this question really arise, we shall be prepared, if necessary, to express an opinion more fully with respect to it.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 306.

† To Mr. Adams, December 19, 1862; Mr. Adams, December 30, 1862.

1863

No. 34.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

Doctors' Commons, January 17, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 525, December 19), respecting a tax imposed by the United States' Government on captains of vessels retailing goods from the decks of their vessels in United States' ports; that I should perceive from the papers inclosed in this despatch that a question has been raised as to whether this tax is contrary to the Reciprocity Treaty;* and to request that I would take the matter into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the retail tax in question is not contrary to the Reciprocity Treaty (June 5, 1854) between Great Britain and the United States. The tax is not a Customs duty; and there can be no reason why articles which, in consequence of the Reciprocity Treaty, have been admitted free of duty should not pay the retail tax as well as any other articles. The fact that they are, for the mutual convenience of the seller and buyer, sold on shipboard, instead of on a stall in the market or a shop in the street, cannot exempt them from contributing to the tax, which, in itself, is perfectly lawful.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 35.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 21.)

Doctors' Commons, January 21, 1863.

My Lord,

CHILE.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 8th of September last,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Valparaiso,‡ relative to the administration of the property of a British subject named Clark or Clarkson, supposed to have been a convict; and to request that I would take this despatch, together with the former papers which were therewith inclosed,§ into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the despatch together with the former papers, into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. Consul Rouse should be apprized that Her Majesty's Government see no reason to find fault with what he has done, or to doubt that he has acted with diligence and with no other desire but that of performing his duty.

That Her Majesty's Government cannot form any opinion as to the propriety of the legal steps taken in the Court at Valparaiso; nor, as it appears from Mr. Thomson's letter of November 28, 1862, that the cause, with all its incidents, is now transferred to Santiago, is it necessary that they should enter into the discussion of this subject.

With respect to Mr. Thomson I have nothing to add to the observations upon the law applicable to the case which I had the honour to make in my last Report to your Lordship.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Mason, July 7, 1862; to Mr. Mason, July 10, 1862; Mr. Mason, January , 1863.

† See Reports for 1862, page 218.

‡ Consul Rouse, No. 12, December 1. 1862.

§ Mr. Thomson, No. 42, 1862; to Mr. Thomson, No. 21, September 10, 1862.

No. 36.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received January 22.)

My Lord, Temple, January 22, 1863.

RUSSIA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th of January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a note, dated the 14th November ultimo, from the Russian Ambassador at this Court, requesting, under the circumstances mentioned therein, the restitution of a sum of money paid as stamp duty on certain bonds of the Russian Loan issued on the 1st of May last.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of a letter referring that application to the Treasury, together with the reply, dated the 6th instant, which had been received from that Board: and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we concur in the opinion expressed by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and by the Lords of the Treasury, that the bonds in question were liable to stamp duty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we concur in the opinion expressed by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and by the Lords of the Treasury, that the bonds in question are liable to stamp duty: taking the facts to be as stated, that the bonds bear no date, and that they were signed on some day or days subsequent to the 3rd of June, when the Act enforcing the duty came into operation.

The question is one not of law, but of fact. If the statement of the date of signature, contained in Baron Brunnow's letter can be substantiated, there can be no doubt that the duty paid ought to be returned, and if no duty had been paid, we think that under the terms of the Act (having regard to the fact, appearing on the face of the bonds, that the debts thereby secured were inscribed in the Government Book of the Russian Empire on the 1st of May, 1862), there would be no legal presumption that the signature was later than the 3rd of June, and, consequently, that the onus of proving the date of such signature would have been upon the Crown claiming the duty. It is, of course, for Her Majesty's Government to consider how far they ought to give credit to any statement as to the time of the actual signature which may be made to them on a more careful examination into the facts by the Russian Government; but the onus probandi seems to us to have been changed, and now to rest upon the Russian Government by reason of the actual payment of the duty under the circumstances detailed in the letter of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 37.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 24.)

Doctors' Commons, January 23, 1863.

My Lord,

BRAZIL.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio (Nos. 71 and 113), relative to an embargo which has been laid on the property of Mr. Vereker, Her Majesty's Consul at Rio Grande do Sul, on account of certain moneys received by him in his official capacity from the proceeds of a British vessel, the "Canrobert," which has been sold by order of a Naval Court; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion upon the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the statement made by Mr. Christie as to the facts, and the opinion of Dr. Azevedo as to the law in this case, it appears to me that Mr. Vereker is liable to the persons claiming to be paid out of the proceeds of the "Canrobert." The opportunity for settling this affair should certainly not be allowed to escape. If Mr. Vereker be in England it would be expedient to communicate to him this opinion, and to apprize him that your Lordship finds it necessary to send instructions to Mr. Christie to settle this affair at once, which it seems will render it necessary, unless Mr. Vereker takes immediate measures to prevent it, that so much of his property in the Brazils should be sold as would be required to defray the claims in question.

1863

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 38.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 24.)

Doctors' Commons, January 23, 1863.

My Lord,

VENEZUELA.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch (No. 61), and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas, relative to a claim advanced by Mr. Robert Syers against the Government of Venezuela for damages done to his property by Agents of that Government; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to what support, if any, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in giving to Mr. Syers' case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas should be instructed to press, using his discretion as to time and mode, the claim of Mr. R. Syers upon the Venezuelan Government, and to effect, if it should be in his power, an amicable arrangement upon the basis of what he may consider a fair and reasonable estimate of the damage which Mr. R. Syers has sustained.

It is clear that the Venezuelan Government are liable to damages so estimated.

Mr. R. Syers should be apprised that his own estimate will not be made the basis of any official demand on the part of Her Majesty's Government; and if he decline to accept compensation, except upon this estimate, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires should be instructed to interfere no further in the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 39.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 24.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 23, 1863.

TURKEY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople,* respecting the claim of an Ionian, named Falanga, against the War Department of the Turkish Government, on account of goods supplied by him for the use of that Department; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report my opinion as to the course which it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise Her Majesty's Government to instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Constantinople to press the Turkish Government to consent to the appointment of a proper Commission, with power to try and decide the whole question of M. Falanga's claim, both as to its existence at all and as to the amount to which it extends.

The Commission must be of the usual mixed kind in these cases, and the contingency of the members of it being equally divided in opinion should be provided for, as Mr. Erskine suggests, by the previous appointment of an umpire.

It is manifest, from the letters of Aali Pasha to Sir H. Bulwer, that M. Falanga has a primâ facie claim of a very serious character against the Turkish Government; and also that the consent to appoint a Commission to try, but not to adjudicate, is founded on a desire to stave off, by delays, the payment of that claim, the substantial justice of which it was apprehended that the Commission would establish. The claim appears to be made in good faith; to be primâ facie not inconsiderable; the person making it is under British protection; it is founded on an alleged breach of contract, ruinous to the claimant, by the Turkish Government.

I humbly advise that it be so far supported by Her Majesty's Government as to cause it to be adjudicated upon by as fair and impartial a tribunal at Constantinople as the nature of the case will admit.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Erskine, No. 66, November 12, 1862; and No. 11, January 2, 1863.

No. 40.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 26.)

My Lord, Temple, January 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two letters from Mr. Mason,* the agent in this country from the so-styled Confederate Government, requesting explanations with reference to the terms employed by your Lordship in a despatch to Lord Lyons of the 15th February last, relative to the blockade of the Southern ports, maintained by the cruizers of the United States' Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Mason in reply; and was to request that we would take the same into our immediate consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations or suggestions which we may have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose copies of the Declaration of Paris, and of the Parliamentary papers containing your Lordship's instruction to Lord Lyons, and to state that that instruction was founded upon the opinion of the Law Officers given a short time before.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers and the draft proposed letter into consideration and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that your Lordship's letter to the Confederate Commissioner is proper to be sent, and contains a correct statement as to the law of blockade.

We have ventured to make some additions in confirmation of the view taken by your Lordship, and also pointing out the position of the United States' Government with reference to the Declaration of Paris.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 41.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 26.)

Doctors' Commons, January 24, 1863.

My Lord,

SIAM.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, dated the 27th December, 1862, respecting the estate of the late G. Attard, a native of Malta, who was drowned in Siam in June 1859. That I should observe that it is stated by Mr. Attard's widow, who has petitioned the Governor of Malta on the subject, that the estate of the deceased, who was under American protection, produced after liquidation by the United States' Consul at Bangkok, a sum of about 1,000 dollars, but that after a lapse of three years 83*l.* 11*s.* only has been remitted to Malta in respect of the proceeds; but that the Governor of Malta suggests that the United States' Government should be called upon for explanations, and for indemnification if it should appear that a loss has been sustained by remissness or unjustifiable carelessness on the part of the United States' Consulate. He was also pleased to transmit to me the previous papers, and to request that I would take the case into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

---

* Hertslet's Treaties, vol. ix, p. 998.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Attard, the deceased, must be considered as a subject of the United States. It is distinctly stated in the despatch from the Office of Privy Council for Trade, dated 1st November, 1859 (volume Siam, 1859), "that he was not a British subject, and that the British Consul had no jurisdiction to administer to his effects;" consequently the American Consul was the proper authority to deal with the whole question of his estate, and the report of that functionary as to the amount of it ought to be received as satisfactory by British authority, unless it be most clearly inaccurate or untrue. It does not appear to me that the Report of Mr. Chandler, the late United States' Consul, is necessarily open to either of these charges. It is true that he originally stated his belief that the estate would realize 1,000 dollars, and that there was a great delay, owing in some measure to the change of Consuls, and to a dispute about the nationality of the deceased, in the collection of property, and that the assets eventually realized only 366½ dollars, a fact which is thus accounted for in the letter of Mr. Chandler to the Governor of Malta, 28th April, 1862:—

"The estate was sold at auction in March, and the last of the claims were collected in on the 27th of that month. The last of the debts of the estate were also paid on that day. The claims against the estate were far greater than supposed, and after paying them there was left only the sum of 366½ dollars."

I see no reason to doubt the good faith of this transaction, and looking at all the circumstances, I think that the American authorities cannot be made responsible for any depreciation (if, indeed, any has taken place—of which there is no evidence) in the value the assets. I therefore do not advise Her Majesty's Government to require the production of vouchers, or to interfere further in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 42.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Temple, January 26, 1863.

My Lord,

TURKEY AND EGYPT.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th December last, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 6th of October and 5th of November last,* respecting the claim of Mrs. Shee on the estate of Anesti Kovako, now pending in Egypt, you were directed by Earl Russell to transmit to us therewith the drafts of two letters which, in consequence of what we stated in the last of those Reports, were addressed severally to Mr. Ayrton, the agent of Mrs. Shee, and Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General in Egypt.†

That Mr. Ayrton, as we should see by the answer which had been received from him,‡ objects to the course which it was stated was open to him for the settlement by legal process of the matter in dispute, and presses for the direct and immediate interference of Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

---

* See Reports for 1862, pages 240 and 270.

† To Mr. Ayrton, November 22, 1862; to Mr. Saunders, November 29, 1862.

‡ December 8, 1862.

That while the questions raised by Mr. Ayrton have been under consideration, a complaint has been received, apparently from the legal advisers in this country of the adverse parties in Egypt, remonstrating against the conduct of Mr. Agent and Consul-General Colquhoun in the matter, and your Lordship, as that gentleman's proceedings were directly impugned, thought it right in the first instance, and as he was in this country, to call upon him for an explanation.

That explanation, together with the complaint, Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose,* and stated that he was to request that we would consider the facts and statements put forward by Mr. Ayrton in his letter of the 8th of December, and by Messrs. Crowder and Co., and by Mr. Consul-General Colquhoun, in their respective letters of the 27th October and 2nd December, and advise your Lordship as to the course which in the present state of the business your Lordship should adopt.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, for convenience of reference, the former papers in the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, with reference to the facts and statements put forward by Mr. F. Ayrton in his letter of the 8th of December, we can but refer your Lordship to our former Reports of the 6th of October and the 5th of November last, respecting the claim of Mrs. Shee on the estate of Anesti Kovako now pending in Egypt. The former of these Reports was written in ignorance of, and consequently without reference to the practice of foreign attachment (or sequester) obtaining in the British Consular Courts in the Levant; and if that practice, though still prevailing (contrary to the view taken by Mr. F. Ayrton in his letter to Mr. Hammond of the 13th of October last), would, if appealed to, necessarily fail, as a means of raising Mrs. Shee's demand before the Consular Court, on the merits, the case is the same as if the practice did not exist; and viewing it in that light, we can but repeat, by reference, the observations which we had the honour to submit to your Lordship in our first Report. But if by the statements put forward by Mr. F. Ayrton in his letter of the 8th December, we are to understand (and this appears to us to be their purport) only that difficulties lie in the way of Mrs. Shee's obtaining what she desires—a hearing of her case before a competent Tribunal on the merits, and that the attempt to compass that end in the Consular Court by foreign attachment might fail, we still adhere to the opinion expressed in our second Report (5th November last) that the attempt ought to be made, and the result of such attempt known, before any case can fairly be made out for Her Majesty's Government to consider even whether the circumstances call for political or diplomatic interference.

We have to add that we find it difficult entirely to reconcile Mr. F. Ayrton's views as regards the sufficiency of the law of foreign attachment as administered at Alexandria and Constantinople to meet his client's case, expressed in his letter of the 13th October, with those set forth in his more recent letter of the 8th December. In the earlier letter he states, "if any doubt arises upon the right of Mrs. Shee to make the fund in question" (i.e. the portion of the Jeddah compensation which, remaining in the hands of Mr. Ayrton, had been handed over by him to the Consul-General at Alexandria) "available, it must result from the late Order in Council not having provided for this mode of procedure." Sir Edmund Hornby having in the meantime pointed out that "the late Order in Council in no way affected the right of Mrs. Shee to make the fund in question available," Mr. Ayrton then, in his second letter, "while deferring on the technical point mooted," proceeds to enumerate a great number of obstacles, insuperable or otherwise, to Mrs. Shee's being able to make the fund "available," notwithstanding that he is now satisfied that the Order in Council does not affect the question. In short, the former letter seems to represent foreign attachment as being all-sufficient, if only it were in force; the latter, admitting foreign attachment to be in force, describes it as so entirely insufficient as to call for the immediate political action of Her Majesty's Government, without even waiting for the event of a trial of the question.

Mr. F. Ayrton, in his second letter, also describes certain possible inconveniences which might occur to himself were the fund now held by the Consul-General to be returned into his keeping ("as mentioned in your despatch"), and intimates that, under the circumstances, he might "hesitate to accept" the fund. Upon this, we have only to observe that the delivery of the fund (now incorrectly described by Mr. Ayrton, as having been "arrested by Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General") to the Consul-General at Alexandria, was, as we understand, the voluntary act of Mr. Ayrton himself, and that it rests with him entirely, whether he will, or will not, apply for the restoration of the fund to his own keeping.

---

* October 27, 1862; and Mr. Colquhoun, December 2, 1862.

1863

Mr. Ayrton also speaks of your Lordship's possibly "sanctioning" the "return" of the fund; no intention having been expressed, or being entertained on the part of the Government in any way whatever to interfere with respect to the disposition of such fund.

We also think it proper to repeat what we stated in our first Report, that we do not conceive ourselves called upon to deal with or consider Mr. Ayrton's own claim, but that of his client, Mrs. Shee, only.

As regards the other matter on which your Lordship desires our advice, namely, the facts and statements put forward by Messrs. Crowder and Co., and by Consul-General Colquhoun, in their respective letters of October 27th and December 2nd, we must observe that the letter of Mr. Colquhoun does not appear to us to be quite satisfactory, regarding it, as we must, as intended to be an answer to the previous letter of Messrs. Crowder and Co. of the 27th October.

Messrs. Crowder and Co. state (and they are not contradicted by Mr. Colquhoun) that proceedings were commenced in the Consular Court at Cairo against Mr. F. Ayrton by Messrs. Miralacchi and Co., for recovery from him of the fund in question, and that to such proceedings Mr. Ayrton did not even appear. We have pointed out, in our first opinion, that to any such proceedings (though we are only informed of their having been taken by the letter of Messrs. Crowder and Co.) no answer could possibly be set up by Mr. Ayrton on the ground of Mrs. Shee's claim.

Messrs. Crowder and Co. further allege that, in this state of the case, the fund was transferred to, or placed at the disposal of, Mr. Colquhoun; that gentleman's own statement being that he "directed the bank to hold it to the order of Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt."

It would also seem, according to Messrs. Crowder and Co's uncontradicted statement, that the matter of the suit by Messrs. Miralacchi and Co. against Mr. Ayrton having been brought on before the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court (he happening to be at Cairo, was "adjourned" in consequence of what is called the "sequester imposed by Mr. Colquhoun on the moneys recovered by Mr. Ayrton." It thus appears to be admitted that a delay, at least of proceedings, in the ordinary course by the firm of Miralacchi and Co. against Mr. Ayrton, has been occasioned by the interference of the Consul-General; and what we fail to discover in Mr. Colquhoun's letter of December 2nd, is any legal justification of such interference. It is not alleged that any application for sequester on behalf of Mrs. Shee was made to the Consular Judge; and it is clearly to be inferred that the course, as regards foreign attachment, which Sir E. Hornby describes as proper and necessary, was not pursued.

It appears to us to follow that if the Consul's conduct admits of justification, that justification has yet to be adduced.

Even if a legal sequester had been applied for and obtained, it would be a question, depending on the practice of the Court, how far such sequester could be allowed to interfere with the progress of an action, previously commenced, for recovery of the debt attached by the person to whom it was primarily due.

We do not enter upon any consideration of the statements made by Messrs. Crowder and Co. as to the facts and merits. We assume them to be according to the instructions which those gentlemen have received, but at the same time we agree with Mr. Colquhoun that the Consular Court might, on a full hearing and discussion, satisfactorily dispose of all matters really in controversy. We must add, however, that Messrs. Crowder and Co.'s letter only the more convinces us of the inexpedience of any present interference of Her Majesty's Government as desired by Mr. Ayrton.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 43.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Russia.

My Lord, Temple, January 26, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a draft of a note to the Russian Ambassador at this Court, containing a question which it is proposed to address to his Excellency with regard to the time of the signature of the Russian bonds, on the question of whose liability to stamp duty we reported on the 22nd instant; and to request that we would take this draft into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether the question is rightly and properly put.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have considered the draft of your Lordship's proposed note to the Russian Ambassador at this Court, and we are of opinion that the question therein contained is one which may be rightly and properly put.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 44.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Russia.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 26, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the correspondence marked in the margin,* relative to the claim of Mr. Richard Willis, a British subject, for losses alleged to have been sustained by him in regard to some property which he holds near Sebastopol, a portion of which was, after the siege of that place, occupied as a burial-ground by the allied forces; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and that I would, with reference to the questions put in Lord Napier's No. 500 of the 23rd ultimo, report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to his Excellency in reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Lord Napier might be instructed to use his good offices on behalf of Mr. Willis, who appears to be an innocent sufferer to a considerable extent; but not to place his interference on the ground of international right on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and of correspondent international obligation on the part of the Russian Government.

The affair is, strictly speaking, one appertaining to the public law of Russia exclusively. A foreigner who buys land in a foreign State, and who suffers in common with the native subjects of that State from the operations of war, has a right, generally speaking, to be put upon the same, but not on a better, footing than the native subjects.

It would certainly be equitable, and according to the analogies of all jurisprudence derivable from civilized municipal law, that Mr. Willis should be compensated by the Russian Government for injuries which his property sustained on account of the defensive operations of the Russian army, but the matter cannot be pressed beyond this by Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Consul Eldridge, April 4; Consul-General Murray, May 1; to Lord Napier, No. 110; to Office, May 18; from Office, May 28; Lord Napier, No. 251; to Lord Napier, No. 115; Lord Napier, Nos. 384, 402, and 500.

1863

No. 45.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Doctors' Commons, January 26, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the letter from Mr. J. N. Crosse, dated the 14th January instant, inquiring whether Her Majesty's Government will claim compensation for a house and furniture at Fredericksburg, Virginia, the property of British subjects, at present assumed to be destroyed; and to request that I would take Mr. Crosse's letter into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken Mr. Crosse's letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That your Lordship's attention should be drawn to the fact that the statement of Mr. Crosse is of the most bare and jejune description. No circumstances or incidents are mentioned which attended the destruction of the house, nor, indeed, is the fact of destruction itself stated positively, but hypothetically. To such a statement I humbly suggest that the proper answer would be that, in the absence of any knowledge as to the circumstances attending the transaction, it would seem to Her Majesty's Government that the property in question, if destroyed at all, which appears uncertain, has suffered in common with other property in its own neighbourhood, from the inevitable operations of war, and that the case, as now stated, presented no grounds for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 46.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 30.)

Temple, January 27, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 17, January 3, 1863), reporting the circumstances under which he had positively forbidden Mr. Acting Consul Magee to send in one of Her Majesty's ships of war from Mobile to Havana, some specie, which the Bank of that city was anxious to remit to this country in payment of interest, payable in London, upon bonds of the State of Alabama. That Lord Lyons also requests to be instructed whether, if Mobile or other Southern ports should be taken by the United States' forces, money destined for the payment of interest on American securities held in England, or on which the interest is payable in England, is to be regarded as British property, and whether Her Majesty's Consuls are to demand of the United States' authorities that it be respected as belonging to neutrals.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Lord Lyons took a correct view of the principles of international law, applicable to the subject of the transmission of money to the English creditor, in one of Her Majesty's ships, from a blockaded port.

We think however that Lord Lyons might be instructed to communicate to the United States' Government the course which, in obedience to the dictates of strict good faith, he has pursued; and that (as it cannot be supposed that the United States' Government would wish to prevent the discharge of a public debt contracted by the State of Alabama, while a de facto as well as de jure member of the United States, with the subjects of a friendly neutral country) he might reasonably ask permission to be allowed to transmit this money, notwithstanding the existence of the blockade, through the safe channel of one of Her Majesty's ships to England.

With respect to the application of Lord Lyons for advice as to the course which ought to be pursued in the case of money found in a captured Southern port, destined for the payment of interest to British creditors upon State bonds, we have to remark that there can be no doubt that, according to the common law of England, and of some States in the United States, a change of property cannot be effected by mere dedication or destination on the part of the first proprietor, and independent of any act or consent of the intended transferee, or of some agent or representative on his behalf; without such act or consent, all remains, as it is said, in fieri, liable to be revoked and undone by the original owner.

Upon this principle, therefore, money bonâ fide destined for the payment of interest on American securities held in England, or on which the interest is payable in England, could not, by reason of this destination alone, be properly regarded as British property, and upon this principle Her Majesty's Consul should be instructed not to demand of the United States' authorities that money so circumstanced should be regarded as the property of neutrals.

We are of opinion that this principle ought to be applied to the suggested case, and therefore that the Consul should be so instructed.

We are also of opinion that if the money, instead of being merely dedicated and set apart in the hands (or repositories in the territory) of the debtors, had been bonâ fide delivered over, in any such Southern port, to an agent or agents there, duly authorized to receive the same, and to give effectual receipts on behalf of the British creditors, that the money would in such case be the property of the British creditors, and demandable by Her Majesty's Consul as such.

We cannot doubt that the British creditor himself, being in such ports, might lawfully receive payment of his just debt, and that money so paid to him would immediately and for every purpose become British property; and on general principles such a payment to an agent as we have supposed would have the like effect.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 47.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 29.)

Temple, January 29, 1863.

My Lord,

AFRICA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th January, 1863, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th instant,* on the subject of the proposed consecration of the Rev. William George Tozer to be Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland to the tribes around Lake Nyassa and the adjoining country, and of the Rev. Edward Twells to be Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland in the Orange River Free State, formerly within the Diocese of Cape Town, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us drafts of licences to the effect prayed for in the Memorials of the Archbishop of Canterbury, which had been already submitted to us, and which were again submitted to us therewith; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take those drafts into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience, as it is desired by the Archbishop that the consecration should take place early next week.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these drafts into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that in the licence to consecrate Mr. Tozer, the words "in Africa" ought, as proposed, to be added.

And with respect to both licences, we think that inasmuch as no jurisdiction is proposed to be conferred under the powers given to Her Majesty by the second section of the Act of Parliament, the recital of that section should be struck out, and we have struck it out accordingly.

* Page 20.

1863

In other respects the licences seem to us quite proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 48.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 31.)

Doctors' Commons, January 30, 1863.

My Lord,

FRANCE.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter from Sir Alexander Tulloch, inclosing a petition from Mr. Clark of Wilton Park, setting forth the circumstances under which a sum of money has lapsed to the French Crown, but which he imagines there would be no difficulty in recovering, if the rights of the case were brought to the personal knowledge of the Emperor of the French, and with that view he solicits the assistance of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether it is a case in which Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere officially in this matter.

The money of an intestate bastard has lapsed to the French Crown, as under similar circumstances it would have lapsed to the English Crown. It is true that Her Majesty, as a matter of grace and favour, usually makes a grant to the next of kin, but this course of proceeding cannot properly be pressed upon a foreign Government.

Mr. Clarke should himself present a petition to the Emperor, and perhaps Her Majesty's Ambassador might be able, though not officially, to secure its due presentation to His Majesty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 49.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 4.)

Temple, January 31, 1863.

My Lord,

SPAIN.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 3rd of July last,* regarding the application made by Mr. Mackenzie on behalf of the assignees of Mr. Mould,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of a letter which your Lordship caused to be addressed to Mr. Mackenzie,‡ calling for the further information suggested by us.

That no reply to this letter was received from Mr. Mackenzie, but an application has been made to your Lordship by Mr. West for the assistance of Her Majesty's Government as against Mr. Mould, in the letter which Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose (January 10, 1863).

That, in Mr. West's letter, allusion is made to Mr. Mackenzie as having been that gentleman's agent in some of the transactions connected with this case, and your Lordship therefore caused a communication to be made to Mr. West (January 13, 1863), the draft of which, together with Mr. West's answer (January 19, 1863), were also inclosed for your information.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in this matter.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 174.

† Mr. Mackenzie, June 17, 1862.

‡ To Mr. Mackenzie, July 12, 1862.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government may properly instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid to bring to the notice of the Spanish Government the claim of Mr. West, and the peculiar grounds upon which it rests, namely, that the formal sanction given by the Spanish Government to the arrangement between Mr. Mould and the Railway Company shuts out Mr. West from the ordinary remedy in a Spanish Court of Law, and that there appears to be good reason to believe that the Spanish Government was deceived by a suppression of the truth when it gave the sanction in question.

In giving this opinion we assume that at the time when Mr. West obtained the security for his debt, Mr. Mould had not been, and indeed is not now, declared bankrupt.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 50.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received February 5.)

My Lord, Temple, January 31, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us three despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 534, December 20, No. 535, December 20, and No. 536, December 22), respecting the liability of British subjects who have exercised the rights of franchise in the United States to be drafted for service in the Militia, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that he had likewise transmitted therewith two previous despatches from Mr. Stuart on the same subject (No. 99 and No. 123).

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 11), inclosing a copy of an opinion delivered by the Attorney-General of the United States on the question of citizenship, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the other papers relating to this subject referred to us in his letter of the 6th instant, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we regret that we cannot entirely concur in the view taken by the Queen's Advocate of the proper answer to be given to your Lordship in this case, and which is expressed in his separate Report.

We do not conceive this to be a case involving any question of the ordinary right of aliens, by international law, to be exempted from compulsory militia service in a war carried on by the nation among whom they reside. Agreeing, therefore, with the observations of the Queen's Advocate on that subject (which are in conformity with former Reports, in which we have concurred), we are not satisfied of their relevancy upon the present occasion.

We also agree with the construction placed by the Queen's Advocate (according to the law laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case) upon the Act of Congress of 1792, concerning the Militia; and we think (so far as it may be proper for us to enter into any mere question of American law) that the persons whose status is now in question may properly be assumed not to be legally "citizens of any State," within the true meaning of that Act of Congress.

The Government, however, of the United States appear disposed either to

1863

construe their own law differently upon this point, or arbitrarily to overrule it (as they have done many other of their own municipal laws during the present contest). And in this state of things two questions appear to us to arise: the first, whether, on general principles of international law, aliens resident in a country where they have been admitted to the exercise of a high political franchise (such as the right of suffrage) on the same footing with citizens, and upon the condition and faith of a declaration that they intend to become citizens, may not justifiably be treated by the Government with which they have so far identified themselves, as liable to the same compulsory military service with citizens; the second, whether, if aliens under such circumstances cannot justly invoke the protection of their own nation against compulsory military service, on general principles of international law, they would be entitled to do so on the ground that, according to the true construction of the municipal law of the country exacting that service, no persons are liable thereto who are not complete "citizens" according to the proper legal definition of that term.

We think that the first of these questions ought to be answered in the affirmative, and the second in the negative.

As to the first, it seems to us difficult to conceive any sound reason, on abstract principles, why persons who have become, in the strictest sense, constituents of the Government and Legislature under which they are living, and partakers of the ultimate sovereign power residing in the Electoral Body, on which the whole political superstructure is built up, should be exempt from military service. The facts stated by Mr. Anderson and Lord Lyons exclude the supposition that they were, in any State, admitted to the exercise of those privileges on the faith that they would continue aliens, and so be exempt from the burdens of citizenship. On the contrary, they were required publicly to declare their intention to become citizens as a condition of their being thus admitted, by anticipation, to some of the highest rights of citizenship; and we cannot but think that the State in which they live is morally entitled to hold them, under such circumstances, bound by that contract (of which the performance is entirely within their own power), and not entitled, by delaying or evading its performance, to escape from the penalties to which they would be subject if it were performed. The case seems to us to be wholly different from that of persons who have merely declared an intention to become naturalized, and have taken preliminary steps for that purpose, but who have not been put into possession in the meantime of any public status or privileges upon the faith of that declaration. Such persons have a locus pœnitentiæ till their naturalization is complete, because their status is not in the meantime altered, and their intention to change it continues to be (as it was originally) merely voluntary and gratuitous. But where an alien is put into possession of the highest fruits of citizenship, on the faith of a public declaration that he intends to be naturalized, the situation of both parties (i.e., both the individual and the State) is altered, and he seems to us to have no longer any moral right, as between himself and that State, to recede from that engagement.

2. With respect to the second question, if the right to exemption be one, dependent merely on the construction of an American Statute, and upon the argument (however well-founded) that a person who has contracted to become a citizen is not legally liable to serve in the militia under that Statute until his naturalization is complete, we think that this does not raise a case for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, but that the question ought to be discussed and the exemption established (if at all) in the American Courts of law.

This is the principle on which Her Majesty's Representatives at Washington have already announced Her Majesty's intention to act* (taking, in this respect, a different line from France) with respect to those British subjects who, not being naturalized in the United States, have de facto exercised, in some of the States, political franchises to which none but complete citizens are in those States de jure entitled. These persons are not legally "citizens of any State" within the true construction of the Militia Act of 1792, and they have none of the rights legally belonging to citizens. Indeed they are (in that respect) still further removed from a true citizenship than those whose status is now under consideration; for it is to be presumed that they will not be suffered to continue in the enjoyment, without a legal title, of political franchises which they are

---

* See Mr. Stuart's despatches Nos. 99 and 123, July 25 and August 3, 1862; and Lord Lyons No. 536, December 22, 1862.

proved to have hitherto usurped by wrong. But Her Majesty's Government have expressly renounced the right to interfere in their favour, considering them to be morally estopped from denying their citizenship, for the purpose of evading liabilities to which they would be legally subject if the profession of citizenship, on the faith of which they have enjoyed political franchises, had been true. It appears to us that, on the same principle, we ought to consider the persons now in question also morally estopped from setting up their own want of a complete title to citizenship, for the purpose of evading, through the interference of Her Majesty's Government, liabilities to which they would be legally subject if the promise to become citizens, on the faith of which they have enjoyed political franchises, had been or were now fulfilled. Our conclusion upon the whole matter is, that Her Majesty's Government ought to leave all persons of this class to establish (if they can) the exemption which they claim, in the Courts of the United States, and ought not to interfere in their favour.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 51.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 5.)

Doctors' Commons, January 31, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

THE reason for my troubling your Lordship with a separate Report will appear at the conclusion.

This question appears to me to involves the following important considerations, namely:—

1. The liability of British subjects who have exercised the franchise to be enrolled in the United States' Militia, regarded as a question of international law.

2. The same question considered as a matter of the public or Constitutional law of the United States.

3. Whether, if both international law and the public law of the United States be opposed to this liability, it nevertheless be not undesirable that Her Majesty's Government should interfere on behalf of subjects who have so far incorporated themselves into the constitution of a foreign State.

With respect to the first consideration, I can do little more than repeat the opinion which the Law Officers have already had the honour to offer to your Lordship, upon the general question of British subjects being compelled to enter foreign military service, namely, that British subjects resident in a foreign State may be lawfully called upon to serve in any force having for its object the preservation of domestic peace, e.g., to act as constables or police, or the like.

That they are not liable to compulsory service in the army or navy of a foreign State, unless they had been apprised by the law as existing when they took up their abode in such foreign State, that this consequence would follow from their continued residence in it; or unless they have been given an option (to be reasonably imposed and exercised) of leaving the State, or submitting to such service.

These observations appear to me to apply with great stringency to a case like the present, in which British subjects are called upon to serve (for such I presume to be the consequence of their enrolment in the Militia) against a belligerent with whom Her Majesty is at peace.

With respect to the second consideration, namely, that which relates to the public or Constitutional law of the United States, I have thought it right to express my opinion upon this also.

The opinion of Mr. Carlisle has led to a careful examination of the law upon this point, and I venture to express my entire concurrence with the statement of that gentleman.

The great importance of the case, the possibility that your Lordship may think it fit to instruct Lord Lyons to press this, as well as the other consideration, upon the Government of the United States, and the clearness of my conviction with respect to the mis-statement of the law by Mr. Seward, have induced me to state to your Lordship the premises which have led me to the conclusion that the exercise of the franchise does not place the foreign subject in the category of the citizen, who, by the law of the United States, is bound to serve in the Militia.

1863

The law is laid down with so much authority by the Supreme United States' Court in the great case of Dred Scott v. Sandford, (xix "Howard's Reports," p. 393), and in terms so apposite to the present question, that I cite them at length.

Chief Justice Taney observes (pp. 405, 406) that—

1. "Each State may still confer these (rights of citizenship) on an alien, or any one who it thinks proper, or upon any class or condition of persons, yet he would not be a citizen in the sense in which that word is used in the constitution of the United States."

2. "No State since the adoption of the Constitution, can, by naturalizing an alien, invest him with the rights and privileges secured to a citizen of a State under the Federal Government."

3. "It is true every person, and every class and description of persons, who were at the time of the adoption of the Constitution recognized as citizens in the several States, became also citizens of this new political body, but none other."

4. The same learned Judge (speaking of Article IX, section 5, of the Articles of Confederation, and of the distinction between citizens and free inhabitants), observes:—

"The word citizen excluded, and no doubt intended to exclude, foreigners who had not become citizens of some one of the States when the Constitution was adopted; and also every description of persons who were not fully recognized as citizens in the several States." (Page 419.)

6. "Another of the early laws of which we have spoken is the first Militia Law, which was passed in 1792 at the first session of the second Congress. The language of this law is equally plain and significant with the one just mentioned. It directs that every free able-bodied white male citizen shall be enrolled in the militia." (Page 420.)

7. "But it is said that a person may be a citizen and entitled to that character, although he does not possess all the rights which may belong to other citizens; as, for example, the right to vote, or to hold particular offices, and that yet, when he goes into another State, he is entitled to be recognized there as a citizen, although the State may measure his rights by the rights which it allows to persons of like character or class resident in the State, and refuse to him the full rights of citizenship. This argument overlooks the language of the provision in the Constitution of which we are speaking." (Pages 421, 422.)

"Undoubtedly a person may be a citizen, that is, a member of the community who form the Sovereignty, although he exercises no share of the political power, and is incapacitated from holding particular offices.

"Women and minors, who form a part of the political family, cannot vote; and when a property qualification is required, to vote or hold a particular office, those who have not the necessary qualification cannot vote or hold the office—yet they are citizens.

"So, too, a person may be entitled to vote by the law of the State itself, who is not a citizen even of the State itself. And in some of the States of the Union foreigners, not naturalized, are allowed to vote. And the State may give the right to free negroes and mulattoes, but that does not make them citizens of the State, and still less of the United States."

To this authority might be added the printed opinion of the United States' Attorney-General Bates, sent to us by your Lordship (Washington, 1862, pp. 4, 5).

It appears, therefore, to be demonstrably clear that Mr. Seward is wrong in stating that the exercise of the franchise is the criterion of citizenship in the United States; and that so far as Mr. Seward founds the obligations of these persons to serve in the Militia upon this basis, his position is contrary to the law of the United States.

There remains the third and last point, namely, whether it be not undesirable that Her Majesty's Government should interfere on behalf of British subjects who have exercised the political franchise, but have not completed their naturalization as citizens of the United States.

This requires a twofold consideration—

1. Apart from the public United States' law.
2. With reference to that law.

First. Apart from the consideration of the peculiarity of the Constitution of the United States, the consequences flowing from the Federal relations to each State, and the public law as to the conditions of citizenship, it would seem, upon general principles of international law, difficult to conceive any sound reason why persons who have so far incorporated themselves with the public life and constitution of a Republican State like the United States, as to exercise the political franchise, should not be considered as subjects by that Republic.

It is also true that they are, so to speak, inchoate citizens, having obtained the privilege of voting on the faith that they will become naturalized subjects; nevertheless they are not now citizens by the law of the United States.

Secondly. With respect to the second consideration, namely, as to the expediency of interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government on the ground of the public or Statute law of the United States, I am disposed to take rather a more doubtful view than my colleagues of this very grave question.

While, on the one hand, it appears to me in one point of view not unreasonable that Her Majesty's Government should leave these persons, who who have exercised the franchise, to fight their own battle for exemption from service in the Militia in the Courts of the United States, on the other hand, I am pressed by the recollection of the severe doctrine of British law, that allegiance is inalienable; that Her Majesty's Proclamation, declaratory of the public law of Great Britain, forbids British subjects (which these persons still are) to take any part in the present conflict between the United States' Government and the Confederates; and I am not clear that the strict observance of the duties of neutrality towards the Confederate belligerents does not call upon Her Majesty's Government to exert its influence to prevent, or at least to protest against, the enrolment of British subjects in the United States' Militia.

It may not be inconvenient, perhaps soon, or at least hereafter, that Her Majesty's Government to be able to say to the Confederate belligerents that they have acted in this manner.

It is possible that in a civil war, waged with such daily increasing bitterness, questions of an embarrassing kind might arise, relating to British subjects taken prisoners by the Confederate forces.

Upon the whole, I so far differ from my colleagues as to think it desirable that Her Majesty's Government should instruct Lord Lyons to put forward on behalf of these persons the point of law which is open to them, and upon which it seems to me clear that they would put the United States' Government in the wrong, and would also probably avoid future international difficulties.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 52.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 4.)

Doctors' Commons, February 2, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th January ultimo, stating that with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's late Advocate-General of the 19th February, 1862,* upon the case of the British schooner "Telegraph," which was seized and carried into Key West by the United States' cruizer "Wanderer," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the former papers, the further correspondence† which passed on the subject in the summer of last year, and a letter which has now been received from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of the Bahamas, in explanation of the delay which has occurred in following up this case, and forwarding a letter from Mr. Dillet,

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 42.

† To Lord Lyons, No. 80; Lord Lyons, No. 311; to Colonial Office, May 30, 1862; Colonial Office, January 21, 1863.

1863

an attorney at Nassau, again claiming compensation from the United States' Government on behalf of the owner, master, officers, and crew of the "Telegraph."

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the seizure and detention of the "Telegraph" appears to have been an unjust and vexatious act, without any reasonable justification.

The "Telegraph" was clearly a neutral ship; she had no contraband on board; there was nothing to found any suspicion of her intending to break any blockade. She had received, as is now admitted, distinct permission from the Collector of Customs at Key West to touch at Vaccus for wood. Her clearance was, according to the same Collector's admission, perfectly proper and regular.

The neutral ship ought not to suffer from any mistake of the belligerent commander; and, moreover, it is clear that an order of the American flag-officer's, dated 19th December, 1861, could not affect or justify the conduct of Commander Spotts in the November preceding.

The seizure was, in these circumstances, in itself an act of violence.

The manner in which the belligerent's right of visit and search was exercised was, both as to the ship and crew, unjustifiable.

As to the ship, because Commander Spotts ought to have conducted his right of search on board the vessel, and had no right, except in a case, which this was not, of necessity, to order the papers to be brought on board his ship.

As to the crew, because the treatment of William Fisher was an unjustifiable act of violence and cruelty.

The excuse is manifestly insufficient, and probably untrue.

The defence of the United States' Commander for forcibly taking a British sailor out of a British ship, and for putting him in irons for three days and three nights, is, that at one time the sailor, under the provocation of a seizure which always was and is now proved to be unjust, swore loudly on board his own ship, and therefore the United States' captain took him out of this ship and put him in irons on board of an American ship for three days and three nights.

Mr. Seward cannot seriously think that this is any valid excuse for treating a neutral subject, taken illegally out of a neutral ship, for this length of time like a felon, or that any neutral State, able to protect itself, can be satisfied with such an excuse.

I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought to demand reasonable compensation on both grounds: first, for the illegal detention of the ship, and it may be observed that a Prize Court ought to have dismissed her with costs and damages against the captor; secondly, for the gross ill-treatment of W. Fisher.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 53.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 5.)

Temple, February 3, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES. WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty inclosing copies of a despatch from Sir A. Milne, dated the 28th January ultimo, and of the instructions which he had left with the senior officer of Her Majesty's ships and vessels at Bermuda with reference to the contingency of the mail-steamer from St. Thomas to Halifax being detained by any Federal cruizer.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these instructions into consideration, and furnish your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these instructions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the principles of existing international law with respect to the status and character of mail-packets in time of war were correctly laid down by your Lordship in your despatch to Mr. Seward of the 23rd January, 1862, to the effect that mail-packets are not, by virtue of their office, exempt from visitation and search by belligerents, and from the consequence of a violation of neutrality; but that, nevertheless, they are objects of special protection to the Government which employs them, while engaged in the discharge of their legitimate function of carrying mail-bags and passengers; and that their seizure and detention, without the gravest reason, is an injury, not merely to private interests but to the public interests of neutral and friendly States.

It cannot therefore be denied, as an abstract proposition of law, that it is competent to the belligerent to seize a British mail-packet, and take her into port for adjudication in the Prize Court, on the ground of her having committed a breach of her neutral obligations.

It remains to be considered whether the act which she is supposed to have done, be or be not such an offence as would justify the belligerent in detaining her.

It must be considered with reference to principle and precedent; and upon both grounds we should entertain no doubt as to the lawfulness of the seizure if the mail-packet had either been hired for the conveyance of soldiers in aid of belligerent purposes, or for the service of the belligerent State, whether for immediate active service against the enemy or not; or even if not hired for that specific purpose, but conveying, though among other passengers,* soldiers to places where they are to exercise military functions. In either of these contingencies, the mail-packet would have forfeited the privileges of her neutral character.

A neutral so acting is not medius in bello, but has become a participator in the military acts of a belligerent.

This doctrine is distinctly laid down by Lord Stowell in the cases of the "Orozembo" and the "Friendship,"† and it appears to us to have the warrant of sound principle, as well as the high authority of that great Judge in its favour.

We do not, however, understand that the mail-packet in question is chargeable with such conduct. We assume that she is conveying these Confederate officers as passengers simply, and to a neutral territory.

To this hypothesis very different considerations are applicable. "Under these circumstances," Lord Stowell said in the "Friendship," "I am of opinion that this vessel is to be considered as a French transport. It would be a very different case if a vessel appeared to be carrying only a few individual invalided soldiers or discharged sailors, taken on board by chance and at their own charge." . . . "It is asked, will you lay down a principle that may be carried to the length of preventing a military officer in the service of the enemy from finding his way home, in a neutral vessel, from America to Europe? If he was going merely as an ordinary passenger, as other passengers do, and at his own expense, the question would present itself in a very different form. Neither this Court nor any other British tribunal has ever laid down the principle to that extent."

Lord Stowell, therefore, would have holden the mail-packet innocent of any breach of neutrality, even if, in such circumstances, she had been conveying home (no blockade being in question) a few soldiers, passengers among other passengers.

Still, it may be said that this position only extends to the liberation of the packet after due judicial inquiry, and that the right of the belligerent to visit and detain, in such circumstances, remains in force.

To this proposition we should accede, if there were, under the circumstances of the particular capture, any room for the captors to contend that the seizure had been made upon any of those grounds which, according to international law, justify the taking in ships for adjudication. And therefore we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government that Admiral Milne's orders to recapture the mail-packet, if taken, should receive their sanction. Such an act, in any circumstances at all ambiguous, would be wrongful, and at variance with those principles for which we ourselves have contended; and it might justly be regarded as a hostile act

---

* "The Court is not to scan with minute arithmetic the number of persons that are so carried."—The "Orozembo;" 6 Robinson's "Admiralty Reports," p. 436.

† 6 Robinson's "Admiralty Reports," pp. 426, 428, and 436.

1863

by the United States. Nor are we prepared to say, however improbable it may be, that a violation of neutrality by a British mail-packet bound to a British port is a priori impossible, seeing that there might be such an act as a conveyance of contraband of war in transitu to the Confederate States, of which the ultimate destination might or might not be known to the conveying packet.

Therefore, if the cause of the capture were left in any degree of uncertainty, we should advise that the vessel should be permitted to be taken into port, and that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed then to represent the case immediately to the proper authorities: asking, on the specific ground that the vessel had been intercepted and detained without any apparent lawful cause in the course of a lawful voyage, and with consequences highly prejudicial to important public and private interests of Great Britain, for her immediate release, and for full indemnity on account of her detention. Should this request be denied, and should it be said that the Prize Court must determine the case, the facts should be brought forward which might tend to show that she had been taken in upon the mere ground of the presence on board her of Confederate officers as passengers, destined to a neutral port; and the United States' authorities should be requested to state whether they had to allege any other ground by which her continued detention could be justified.

If no other ground should be alleged, then we think the demand of Her Majesty's Government for her instant release should become peremptory; notice having been already given in your Lordship's reply to Mr. Seward's despatch in the case of the "Trent," that Her Majesty's Government will not submit even to any adjudication against a British ship by a United States' Prize Court, and will not admit the lawfulness of her detention, on such a ground.

A state of circumstances of greater difficulty may perhaps arise. There might, at the time of the capture, be avowedly no other ground than the mere presence on board of the Confederate officers as passengers; so that the circumstances would be attended with no ambiguity. Under such circumstances it will of course be for Her Majesty's Government to judge what the dignity and honour of the country may require. But even in that case we should think it a subject for much regret if any forcible measures were taken by Admiral Milne without any previous communication upon the subject between Her Majesty's Representative at Washington and the United States' Government.

We think however that, inasmuch as Admiral Wilkes appears to have caused it to be publicly made known that he threatens the capture of a British mail-packet, bound for a British port, on the sole ground of her carrying Confederate officers as passengers to that port (being the same ground which was in controversy in the case of the "Trent," and Admiral Wilkes being the same officer who perpetrated the former outrage upon the British flag), there is sufficient danger of his executing the threat to warrant a communication by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the United States, expressing their firm determination to act upon the principles laid down in your Lordship's reply to Mr. Seward in January 1862; and requesting an assurance from the United States' Government that Admiral Wilkes will be instructed uot to treat any British mail-packet, bound to a neutral port in the ordinary course of her engagements, as liable to capture or detention, upon the sole ground that among the persons whom she has on board, proceeding as ordinary passengers to her proper neutral destination, there may be some (whether officers or civilians) who may belong to the Confederate States.

And it may, if necessary, further be intimated that in case the United States' Government refuse compliance with this most reasonable request, Her Majesty's Government, acting on the principles laid down in your Lordship's despatch, will feel itself at liberty, however reluctantly, to instruct Her Majesty's Admiral on the station to prevent, by all the means in his power, such an interference with the mail-packets, and that the sole responsibility of any consequences which may ensue therefrom must rest with the Government of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—If Her Majesty's Government should think fit to take this course, we wish to add (as the result of some further consideration which we have given to the subject since the meeting of the Cabinet Council on Monday, which we had the honour to attend), that we think there would be no objection to its being intimated to the United States' Government that the Admiral's instructions might be such as would authorize him to take the necessary defensive measures, after enquiring of the United States' Admiral or his officers concerning the cause of any attempted capture, either in the event of the sole cause alleged being the presence on board of any such passengers as before described, or in the event of no answer, alleging any other cause, being given to such inquiry. The presumption against the existence of any justifiable cause of capture against a British mail-packet on her way to Halifax, under the circumstances contemplated in the papers before us, is so great as to approach very nearly to absolute certainty; and we think, under such circumstances, that the course above indicated might justifiably be taken, after full notice to the United States' Government, although we clearly are of opinion that if the United States' Admiral should allege any cause of capture other than that which Admiral Milne will be expressly authorized by Her Majesty's instructions to disregard, it will not be proper for him to inquire further into the validity of such cause. This remark, however, is to be taken with the qualification that, if the American officer should simply allege for cause that the packet is "carrying contraband of war," without specifying what he means by "contraband," this ought not to be accepted as an answer to the inquiry, until the nature of the alleged contraband has been stated.

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 54.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 4.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 4, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th January ultimo, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 15th November last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, two further despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,† respecting the alleged intention of the United States' Government, to appropriate to their own use the British vessel "Bermuda," before the proceedings in the Admiralty Court against that vessel have been brought to a close:

That from the last of those despatches I should perceive that the Prize Court has refused to order the sale of the vessel at present, but Mr. Hammond was, nevertheless, to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer upon the papers now submitted to me.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from Mr. Carlisle's opinion that the power of the Prize Court in the United States, with respect to the sale of vessels is less than that of the modern English Prize Court.

The Judge of the United States' Prize Court appears to have discharged his duty in spite of the pressure from his Government; and I have only to recommend that any attempt to sell the "Bermuda" before judgment of condemnation be resisted steadily by the counsel for the owners of that vessel.

With respect to the purchase of the munitions of war by the Government, if it be fairly made at the proper market value, I think it would be too much in accordance with our practice during the last French war to afford any just ground for complaint.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 281.

† Lord Lyons, No. 565, December 31, 1862; No. 18, January 7, 1863.

1863

No. 55.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 5.)

BRAZIL.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 4, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter with reference to my Report of the 23rd ultimo,* on the subject of the embargo laid on the property of Mr. Vereker, Her Majesty's Consul at Rio Grande do Sul, on account of certain moneys received by him in his official capacity, from the proceeds of the British vessel "Canrobert," which had been sold by order of a Naval Court. He was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a draft of a letter to Mr. Vereker founded upon my Report.

That since it was prepared, however, the accompanying despatch has been received from Mr. Vereker; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the contents of Mr. Vereker's despatch will induce me to suggest any alteration in the terms of the proposed letter to Mr. Vereker.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose the former papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That it is to be regretted that Mr. Vereker should have so long delayed sending his instructions to Mr. Acting Consul Gollan, who appears, from his letter to Mr. Christie (September 30, 1862), to have been anxiously expecting them at a much earlier period.

That I have had the honour to make an addition to the draft despatch proposed by your Lordship to Mr. Vereker and Mr. Christie, and that the despatch appears to me proper to be sent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 56.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 9.)

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 6, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th of January last, stating that, with reference to the Reports of my predecessor of the 30th September, 1857, the 14th July, the 31st May, and the 1st of September, 1858, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to the Argentine Confederation (No. 46), calling attention to a new Decree lately issued by the President of the Republic regarding the administration of intestate estates at Buenos Ayres.

Mr. Hammond was also to inclose the previous correspondence on this subject;† and to request that I would take Mr. Doria's despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Doria in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am afraid the apprehensions of Mr. Parish (December 9, 1862), as to the delay and expense caused by the intervention of the Argentine Courts in matters of intestacy are but too well founded. But the jurisdiction, however exercised, which is claimed by them does not materially differ from that maintained by England over the effects of intestate Argentine subjects in this kingdom.

Nevertheless, I am of opinion that every reasonable effort should be made by Her Majesty's Representative at the Argentine Republic to obtain an alteration of the 13th Article of the President's Decree, by substituting for it the most favoured nation clause. Practically that Article, as it now stands, places Great Britain upon an inferior footing to other nations with respect to the particular subject matter. For at present Her Majesty's Government have no power to grant the reciprocity required; nor would it be easy to attain this end by legislation if such a course were desirable.

---

* Page 27.

† Mr. Christie, No. 84, 1857; to Mr. Christie, Nos. 90 and 92, 1857; Mr. Christie, Nos. 23, 63, 68, 70, and 128, 1858; to Mr. Christie, Nos. 21, 36, 37, and 38, 1858; to Mr. Fagan, No. 9 1859.

I think, too, that it may fairly be urged that this part of the Decree of the President is ultra vires, inasmuch as the Decree recites that it is "equally stipulated in these and other Treaties with other nations that all their Governments and subjects shall be considered as the most favoured nation, it being the rule of the Argentine Republic to consider all strangers to be in the enjoyment of perfect equality of rights;" while, as I have said, the practical effect of the Decree is to remove Great Britain from this position.

It will no doubt be answered that Great Britain, by refusing the reciprocity which other States grant, puts herself out of the advantages of the most favoured nation clause; but I do not think this answer, if made, should be accepted as satisfactory: the reply being that, as a matter of fact, the Decree has loosened the condition of British subjects.

It is clear that Mr. Parish's position with respect to the interpretation of the 13th Article of the Treaty of 1825 with Great Britain cannot be sustained. Her Majesty's Government have already decided that the expressions "sin intervencion alguna" (without interference) do not warrant the inference that the property of British subjects is entirely exempt from all jurisdiction of the local Courts; and I agree with the interpretation of my predecessor in office, upon which that decision of Her Majesty's Government was founded.

With respect to the 12th Article of the President's Decree, namely, "If there are no heirs ab intestato, according to the laws of the country of the deceased, the administrators shall deliver up the property to the State," it is desirable to know —(1.) Whether this be a new regulation, introduced for the first time. If this be so it should be resisted. (2.) If it is to apply equally to British subjects domiciled and not domiciled, or only to naturalized foreigners.

It is, however, proper to state that the goods of a foreigner who is neither domiciled nor naturalized, but who dies in England intestate and without known relations, become the property of the Crown.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 57.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 10.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, February 9, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th January ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers as marked in the margin,* respecting the case of two boys of colour, British subjects, who were carried off from the Bahamas in an American vessel in March 1861, and sold into slavery, on which occasion a third negro was drowned in endeavouring to make his escape.

That it appears that the name of the man who committed this outrage is Frederic Clark, and the Secretary of State for the Colonies has suggested that every effort should be used to obtain the surrender of Clark to be tried for this crime by the Bahamas Courts, and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion how far Her Majesty's Government would be borne out under the Treaty between this country and the United States of the United States of the 9th August, 1842, in claiming the surrender of Clerk for the purpose of being tried on this charge.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we assume that the act of kidnapping was committed within British jurisdiction, as, unless such were the case, no question of extradition could arise.

With reference, at the same time, to acts committed within such jurisdiction, the right to demand the extradition of criminals under the Treaty of the

---

* Lord Lyons No. 15, , 1863; Colonial Office, May 18, 1861; Lord Lyons, No. 175; to Lord Lyons, No. 148; to Colonial Office, May 28; Colonial Office, August 30, 1862; to Mr. Stuart, No. 115; Mr. Stuart, No. 287; Lord Lyons, No. 486; Colonial Office, June 17, 1862.

1863

9th of August, 1842, is limited, by the Xth Article, to persons charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, and persons guilty of kidnapping are not included therein. We are, therefore, of opinion that the surrender of Clark cannot be demanded by Her Majesty's Government.

We think that Her Majesty's Government may properly urge upon the United States' Government the duty of taking criminal proceedings against the perpetrators of so grave an outrage upon British subjects if it should now, or hereafter, be in their power to do so.

There is no reason to doubt the willingness of the United States' Government to comply with such a request, which, indeed, sufficiently appears by the papers before us. But if (as we collect from the inclosures Nos. 3, 6, and 7, in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 486 of December 5, 1862), the kidnapper Frederic Clark is a captain of a Confederate vessel, who is now residing at large in the Confederate States, it is manifest that he is not at present within the power of the United States' Government, and that, in order to have him brought to justice, Her Majesty's Government must now address themselves to the authorities of the Confederate States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 58.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 14.)

My Lord,
Temple, February 13, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th January last, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 12th January[*] upon the cases of the British schooners "Isabel" and "Teresa," which had been captured by United States' cruizers and taken into Key West for adjudication, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,[†] a despatch and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,[‡] containing further information respecting the case of Mr. A. P. Laurent, the master of the "Isabel," and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, transmitting to us a further despatch which your Lordship has received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington relative to these cases.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the fact of Captain Laurent's having falsely sworn, for the purpose of obtaining the command of an United States' ship, that he is an United States' citizen, will not, per se, deprive him of all his rights as a British citizen:

But that it constitutes a primâ facie case in favour of the claim of the United States to consider him as their citizen, which it lies upon him to disprove.

It is a question of fact whether he has been naturalized or not; and after what he has sworn, the United States' Government cannot be expected to accept his present statements as evidence to the contrary.

If there be a register kept of naturalized citizens and his name does not appear therein, or if there be any means of proving the negative, it is for him to have to recourse to them; for instance, if he can prove, as he alleges in his letter to Mr. Archibald (3rd January, 1863), that he was prohibited from using the United States' flag, and that the register of the last United States' vessel he commanded was confiscated and sent by the United States' Consul to Washington, and that such confiscation proceeded on the ground of his not being

---

[*] Page 19.

[†] Law Officers, March 3, 1862; to Lord Lyons, No. 102, March 8, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 511, December 16, 1862; Law Officers, January 12, 1863.

[‡] Lord Lyons, No. 14, January 7, 1863.

naturalized, he would establish the fact that he is not a citizen of the United States.

The fact that he has perjured himself does not authorize his detention as a rebel by the United States' authorities. He may be indicted for perjury, but he cannot be imprisoned for treason, if he disproves his naturalization, and proves his British origin.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 59.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 17.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, February 16, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 27th December last[*] respecting the case of the "Will o' the Wisp, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, and with the draft of an instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons on the 3rd ultimo[†] founded upon my Report, two despatches[‡] and the inclosures in No. 541, which have since been received from his Lordship respecting this case.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these additional papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the further steps, if any, which it is desirable that Her Majesty's Government should take on behalf of the parties interested.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these additional papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of Mr. Seward with respect to the remedy of an appeal is one which, I believe, the Government of this country have often given in similar circumstances, and technically, at least, it is difficult to gainsay.

Nevertheless, the special circumstances of this case were such as to warrant Her Majesty's Government in expecting a more favourable answer to their application.

With respect to the second answer of Mr. Seward, it is by no means clear that a case of this description could be brought before the Commission which has been proposed.

Upon the whole, I think Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed to express that Her Majesty's Government have heard with regret the answer of Mr. Seward on the part of the United States' Government, and still hope that he will reconsider the refusal which it contains to their application.

That the circumstances of the case present so clear an instance of unwarrantable seizure, and the ground alleged by the Judge for not awarding costs, at least, if not also damages, is so inadequate on the face of it, as to enable Mr. Seward, upon consulting the Law Officers of the United States' Government, to grant the redress prayed, without referring the injured parties to the delay and expense of further judicial proceedings.

But I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to press the case (for the reasons given in my former Report), further than by making this renewed application.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 60.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 17.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, February 16, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship

---

[*] See Reports for 1862, page 324.

[†] To Lord Lyons, No. 9.

[‡] Lord Lyons, No. 541, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 57, 1863.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS

1863

to transmit to me the papers, as marked in the margin,* respecting the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Lingham at New Orleans by order of General Butler; and to request that I would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the extreme inaccuracy and material incorrectness of the first statements made to your Lordship in this matter is now admitted, it is expedient to proceed with great caution in taking any further steps with respect to it.

In a city subject to martial law, and in most troublous times, a foreign subject was confined in a room, not alleged to be generally incommodious, though the windows had iron bars, for one night and two days upon a suspicion, perhaps quite erroneous, of misconduct, but certainly not altogether destitute primâ facie of some foundation.

I do not think such a proceeding per se warrants any further steps than have already been taken by Her Majesty's Government.

I am not sure that I understand clearly for what the bond for 50,000 dollars was exacted, or whether it be still in force since the departure of General Butler for New Orleans. But I presume the bond was exacted to guarantee the holders of the new notes, which it appears from Mr. Lingham's admission were, so far as he was concerned, irregularly, if not illegally, issued.

Upon this point I think Her Majesty's Government must cause further inquiries to be made through Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans, and require from him a full statement upon the subject, if Mr. Lingham, or his friends acting for him in this country, seek for further intervention of Her Majesty's Government in this matter. I cannot tell from the papers before me whether he or they do so or not.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 61.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 16, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 60, January 21, 1863), respecting the case of Mr. Nelson Mc Stea, the owner of some cotton stated to have been destroyed by order of the so-styled Confederate authorities and the authorities of the State of Louisiana, and requesting instructions with regard to certain questions put to him by Acting Consul Coppell relative to the claims of British owners of cotton destroyed under such circumstances.

Mr. Hammond was to transmit to me the instructions of the 25th October, 1861, and the 23rd July, 1862, referred to by Her Majesty's Minister, which were founded on the Law Officers' Reports of the 21st October and 12th July of those years,† and was to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the further instructions which should be addressed to Her Majesty's Minister for his guidance in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour report—

That Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed to inform Mr. Coppell that the United States' Government cannot now, or probably ever be, holden responsible by Her Majesty's Government for the destruction of British property in New Orleans by the Confederate authorities.

If, indeed, the United States' authorities should succeed in recovering the territory and places now subject to the Confederate authorities, it might be a question hereafter whether that Government might be not liable to make compensation for these injuries, on the principle that every Government is responsible for the acts of subjects of its territory towards subjects of a neutral State. But it is far safer to say that the demand for redress must be made, if at all, to the Confederate authorities, recognized by Her Majesty as a de facto belligerent. But at present, and while the war is still being waged, such a demand cannot be reasonably made. In the event of the war having ceased, and the authority of the Confederate States being de jure as well as de facto established, it will be competent to Her Majesty's Government to urge the payment of a compensation for the losses inflicted on Her Majesty's subjects by the Confederate authorities during the war, for reasons of State or of military necessity.

In the meantime the property of Her Majesty's subjects in the territory of the Confederates cannot claim to be exempted, as a matter of strict right, from the inconveniences and perils which the bonâ fide military necessities of the Confederates have imposed upon the property of their own subjects.

The answer to the question whether compensation is to be claimed, whensoever, from the individual States under the control of the Confederate Government, or directly from that Government itself, in some measure depends what is, and what may be the Constitution of the Confederate States, and the terms of subordination of each State to the general Government; but it appears improbable that whatever that Constitution is, or may be, Her Majesty's Government should not have the right of demanding compensation from the general or controlling Government of these States, to which all international questions must almost of necessity, and by analogy to all other Confederations of the like kind, be submitted.

It may be expedient that Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans, or elsewhere in the Confederate States, where British property is destroyed, should avail himself of any proper opportunity to declare to the de facto Confederate Government the reason why Her Majesty's Government abstains at present from demanding compensation for the injury done to British property, and that they will at some future and fitting opportunity make whatever demands for compensation, international law and usage may warrant them in preferring.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 62.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

My Lord, Temple, February 18, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Mason (dated the 16th February), calling your Lordship's attention to the reports received through the ordinary channels of intelligence, that the United States' squadrons blockading the ports of Galveston, in Texas, and Charleston, in South Carolina, were respectively driven off by a superior Confederate force, the one on the 1st and the other on the 31st ultimo, and contending that any alleged pre-existing blockade of those ports was thereby terminated on the above dates. And to request that we would take Mr. Mason's letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion as to the bearing upon the blockade of the ports of Galveston and Charleston of the state of things announced in the newspapers.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the draft of the letter to Mr. Mason quoted by him was inclosed for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is difficult to give a satisfactory opinion upon the questions raised in the letter of Mr. Mason to your Lordship without a more exact knowledge than we at present possess of the actual occurrences at Galveston and Charleston. But it may be useful to state to your Lordship the general principles of international law relating to the raising of blockades by a superior force, and to draw your Lordship's attention to the difference between the removal of the blockading fleet effected by such superior force, and the removal of it effected by the accidents of weather.

These points were well considered by Lord Stowell in the case of the

---

* Mr. Donaldson, October 15 and 16, 1862; to Mr. Stuart, No. 155, October 16, 1862; to Mr. Donaldson, October 17, 1862; Mr. Donaldson, January 29, 1863.

† See Reports for 1861, page 246; ibid., 1862, page 180.

"Hoffnung" (6 Robinson, 116, 117). And we cannot suggest a clearer explanation of the law than is contained in the following extract from his Judgment:—

"It appears that the ports of Cadiz and St. Lucar were put under blockade by a notification of the 25th of April; but it unfortunately happened that the notification issued at a time when it became equally notorious that no blockade existed, since the British squadron had been recently driven off by a superior force. In a former case a question was raised, whether the notification which had issued was not still operative, at least for the purpose of sustaining the effect of these instructions. But the Court was of opinion that it could not be so considered, and that a neutral Power was not obliged, under such circumstances, to presume the continuance of a blockade, nor to act upon a supposition that the blockade would be resumed by any other competent force.

"It was argued on that occasion that neutrals were bound to act upon such presumptions; and on the same principle on which it has been held that when a blockading squadron is driven off by adverse winds, they are bound to presume that it will return, and that there is no discontiuuance of the blockade. But certainly the two cases are very different. When a squadron is driven off by accidents of weather, which must have entered into the contemplation of the belligerent imposing the blockade, there is no reason to suppose that such a circumstance would create a change of system, since it could not be expected that any blockade would continue many months without being liable to such temporary interruptions. But when a squadron is driven off by a superior force a new course of events arises, which may tend to a very different disposition of the blockading force, and which introduces, therefore, a very different train of presumptions in favour of the ordinary freedom of commercial speculations. In such a case the neutral merchant is not bound to see or conjecture that the blockade will be resumed; and therefore if it is to be renewed it must proceed de novo by the usual course, and without reference to the former state of facts, which has been so effectually interrupted. On this principle it was that the Court held the former blockade to have become extinct, and intimated an opinion that there should be a repetition of the same measures, on its re-commencement, to bring it to the knowledge of neutral States, either by public declaration or by the notoriety of the fact."

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 63.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 20.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 20, 1863.

TURKEY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 6th of December of last year,* relative to the alleged fraud committed on Messrs. Cababé by Mr. Thomas Walsh, their Agent at Aleppo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Aleppo (No. 6), containing the Report which I suggested that he should be desired to make upon the whole subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise Her Majesty's Government to apprise Messrs. Cababé that Her Majesty's Government have taken their Memorial into consideration, and communicated upon the subject of it with Her Majesty's Consul at Aleppo, and that they see no reason to interfere with the ordinary course of law administered in the Consular Court. They must therefore decline to comply with the prayer contained in the Memorial of Messrs. Cababé.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 304.

No. 64.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 21.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 20, 1863.

SPAIN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 26th of December last,* respecting the claim of the Spanish Consul-General at Odessa, for compensation for the damage done to his farm at Kertch by the Turkish Contingent, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter, dated the 13th January ultimo, from the Spanish Minister at this Court, in which he again presses the claim.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter from the War Office, dated the 14th February, 1863, to whom Señor Gonzalez' communication was referred; and was to request that I would take the case again into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether any arguments are advanced by Señor Gonzalez which would induce me to alter or modify the opinion I have expressed with regard to this claim.

Mr. Hammond was likewise pleased to return the previous correspondence connected with the case for my convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to further report—

That the arguments advanced by Señor Gonzalez in his despatch of the 13th January, 1863, do not induce me to alter or modify the opinion which I have had the honour already to express in my Report of the 26th of December last, respecting the claim of the Spanish Consul-General at Odessa for compensation.

I may here observe that Señor Gonzalez does not controvert—indeed, by implication admits—the justice of the principles upon which that Report was founded; and I am unable to agree with his Excellency that the case of the Spanish Consul is of so exceptional a nature as to exempt it from their operation.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 65.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 21.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 21, 1863.

BRAZIL.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th February instant, stating that he was directed to inform me that the Government of Brazil have instructed their Representative in this country to notify to Her Majesty's Government that he is authorized to pay to Her Majesty's Government, under protest, whatever sum they may demand in the shape of compensation in the case of the British vessel "Prince of Wales," wrecked on the coast of Brazil; that the demands which Her Majesty's Government made on the Government of Brazil in this case are embodied in the instruction to Mr. Christie of which the draft was inclosed for my information; that the responsibility of assessing the compensation which can equitably be demanded from Brazil was not sought by Her Majesty's Government, who, indeed, proposed through Mr. Christie that the question should be referred to arbitration, but that the course pursued by the Brazilian Government leaves Her Majesty's Government no option in the matter.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the amount at which the compensation should be assessed.

That with a view to arrive at a decision on the point in question, your Lordship has called on Mr. Stephens, the owner of the "Prince of Wales," and who claims to represent all the interests connected with that vessel, and of the families of those who perished in the wreck, to furnish the particulars of the total property lost by the wreck of the vessel, and its results, whether as regards the crew or the cargo.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 321.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose Mr. Stephens' reply, as well as two letters which your Lordship had previously received from him, and on the strength of which the sum of 6,525*l.* 19*s.* is mentioned in your Lordship's instruction to Mr. Christie; and that as Mr. Stephens is at present in London for a few days, he will be desired to hold himself in readiness to wait upon me at such time as I might appoint, for the purpose of giving any further explanations which I may desire to receive; that Mr. Stephens' address is "Webbs' Hotel, 220, Piccadilly;" and that if I should also desire it, Mr. Hammond would be prepared to request the Board of Trade to direct a gentleman conversant with mercantile details to attend me when I take this matter into consideration; and was also pleased to state that your Lordship considers it very desirable that a decision should be arrived at with the least possible delay as to the compensation to be paid in this case; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion on the point.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th February instant, inclosing a further letter from Mr. Stephens, together with a Memorandum forwarded to the Board of Trade, and the reply received from that Department regarding the amount at which compensation should be assessed in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion—

First. That Her Majesty's Government ought not to make any demand in excess of the sum mentioned by Mr. Christie to the Brazilian Government.

Secondly. That no demand should be made on account of freight.

Thirdly. That no demand should be made on account of the loss of the vessel.

It remains that the amount of compensation should be founded upon the plunder of the cargo, of the effects of the crew, and upon the too probable murder of some or all of them.

It appears that the wreck was of a character to enable the cargo to have been carried off comparatively uninjured. The crew were fifteen in number, including master and mate: 40*l.* (5*l.* to captain, 35*l.* to rest of the crew) appears to have been due for wages. I estimate the probable value of their personal effects (captain 100*l.*, mate 20*l.*, thirteen seamen at 10*l.* each) at 250*l.* Their actual loss (wages and effects) therefore at 290*l.* I estimate (roughly of course) their compensation for their probable murder, which is to be paid to their surviving relations, captain 300*l*, mate 150*l.*, thirteen sailors 30*l.* each; total, 640*l.[]

As to the cargo, originally estimated at 5,500*l.*, it must be remembered that, besides deductions for probable and necessary damage, large salvage would have been due to the inhabitants of the coast, if they had been salvors instead of robbers.

I therefore estimate the compensation by a rusticum justicium (to borrow Lord Stowell's phrase), on the best evidence I have been able to procure, at 2,360*l.*, making a total of 3,000*l.*[†]

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 66.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 24.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 18th instant,[‡] on the question of the blockade of the ports of Charleston and Galveston, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me,

---

[*] Should be 840*l.*

[†] Should be 3,200*l.*

[‡] Page 51.

together with a copy of an instruction which would be sent to Lord Lyons by the next day's mail, two despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons on the subject (Nos. 116 and 122); and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the propriety of publishing in the "Gazette" Mr. Seward's letter to Lord Lyons of the 5th of February, stating, with reference to recent events at Galveston, that the blockade of that port was resumed immediately, and would be continued until further notice.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Official Report, dated from the United States' steam-sloop "Hartford," at anchor off New Orleans (January 12, 1863), leaves no doubt that the blockade of Galveston was, de facto and de jure, raised on the 1st of January this year. The fact is distinctly stated in the concluding paragraphs of that Report.

The same fact is indirectly, though not very ingenuously, admitted in Mr. Seward's despatch to Lord Lyons (February 5, 1863).

The language of that despatch is very important, as, apart from other considerations, it unquestionably entitles neutral vessels, for some time at least, to notice upon the spot that the blockade is de facto resumed.

I think that the letter of Mr. Seward should be published in the "Gazette."

With reference to the alleged raising of the blockade of Charleston, there is at present no statement of facts upon which your Lordship could rely.

With reference to the inclosed draft of your Lordship's instructions to Lord Lyons (February 20, 1863), they appear to me quite correctly drawn.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 67.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 26.)

My Lord, Temple, February 24, 1863.

CHINA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters dated the 16th and 25th January ultimo, and their inclosures, from the Colonial Office, from which we would see that a question had been raised at Hong Kong whether, under the provisions of the Regulations in force in that Island, and of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, the Chinese Government had the right to demand the extradition of persons accused of political offences against that Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose copies of the Treaty of 1843, referred to in these papers, and of the Treaty of Tien-tsin and Convention of Peking, and to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to the Governor of Hong Kong.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the crimes for the commission of which, in China, by Chinese subjects, the Government of that country has the right to demand the extradition of the accused, being fugitive at Hong Kong, are, in our opinion, generally crimes against the municipal laws of China. In the Supplementary Treaty of 1844 (which, though abrogated by Article I of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, may properly be referred to on a question of the construction of the later Treaty), this was expressed in terms, "crimes or offences against their own Government" (Article IX); and the Regulations of 20th March, 1850, made for carrying out that Treaty, naturally adopts similar language,—"crime or offence against the laws of China." It is true that the terms of the Treaty of Tien-tsin (Article XXI) are more general, namely, "criminals, subjects of China;" but inasmuch as the crime supposed must have been committed in China, and the criminal must be a person fugitive from China, and taking "refuge" in Hong Kong, in order to make "extradition" applicable, it follows that, under the existing as well as under the former Treaty, the "crime" must be a crime against Chinese law. When, therefore, a Chinese is accused at Hong Kong of crimes which in Europe would be described as "political offences," the only question, as regards the nature of the accusation, that appears to us properly to arise is this,—Is the particular offence in its circumstances (if proved) an infraction of the municipal law of China? And this, of course, it may be, although ranging under the head of political offence.

1863

In expressing this conclusion we must observe that, in the extradition portions of the Chinese Treaties, a course has been pursued entirely opposite to that which has been followed in the framing of Treaties of Extradition, entered into between Great Britain and various European and American States. In those Treaties a very limited number of the most heinous crimes are enumerated, as those to which alone extradition is to apply, and in such enumeration no "political offences" are ever to be found; whereas (as it seems to us unfortunately) in the Treaties with China the British Government undertake to deliver up fugitive Chinese criminals to the Chinese authorities, whatever the nature of their crime may be, provided only it be a crime against the law of China, and the "guilt" of the accused be "proved." The explanation of this difference is probably to be found in the circumstance that the places in which Chinese criminals might take refuge from the laws of their own country, and from which they would be delivered up under these Treaties, were not territories belonging, by any original and independent title, to the British Crown, but were either British ships, houses, or factories within the Chinese territory itself, or British ships frequenting Chinese waters for trade, or portions of the former territory of China ceded by these Treaties themselves to Great Britain.

As regards the requisite "proof" to be adduced before British authorities at Hong Kong, under the Treaty of Tien-tsin, we think that reasonable evidence ought to be accepted as sufficient; such, for example, as would lead a grand jury in this country to find a true bill, where the evidence is ex parte only, or such as, with evidence on both sides, would induce a magistrate to commit for trial. It is at the same time quite clear on the letter of the Treaty (Tien-tsin) that it is only "on proof of their guilt" that Chinese criminals can be demanded by Chinese officers; and the "proof" intended can, of course, be no other than proof satisfying the minds of those, the British officers, who have to determine the question at this preliminary stage.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 68.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 26.)

Doctors' Commons, February 24, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence with the Union Association of Underwriters,* relative to a claim put forward by the owners and underwriters of the barque "Symmetry," for damages sustained from a collision with the United States' ship of war "Vanderbilt;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this is, in my opinion, a proper case for compensation from the United States' Government.

The protest shows that the "Symmetry" was run down by the United States' steamer "Vanderbilt," who mistook her for the "Alabama."

---

* Union Association of Underwriters, January 8, 1863; to Union Association of Underwriters, January 13, 1863; Union Association of Underwriters, February 17, 1863.

According to the papers before me, there can be no doubt the United States' steamer was solely to blame: if this be so, according to universal maritime law the "Symmetry" is entitled to recover against the wrongdoer all the costs and damages incident to her claim and to her reparation.

I presume that the amount specified is not excessive; and it appears from the letter of the 17th of February, 1863 (on the part of the Union Association of Underwriters), that the protest and surveys are attested by the United States' Consul at Belfast.

It is difficult to suppose that, on the representation of these facts by your Lordship to the Government of the United States, any objection will be raised to the payment by them of the sum demanded.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 69.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 26.)

Doctors' Commons, February 24, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 99, January 30), inclosing a correspondence between Mr. Seward and the Mexican Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, relative to the exportation of articles contraband of war for the use of the French army in Mexico; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would peruse this correspondence, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have perused and considered the said correspondence, and have the honour to report—

That such correspondence* appears to me valuable to Her Majesty's Government, as furnishing irrefragable evidence of the different principles of law which the Government of the United States applies to her answer to Mexico and to her demands upon Great Britain upon the same subject, namely, the allowing a belligerent to be supplied with the means of carrying on the war from a neutral territory.

In the land war now raging between Mexico and France, waggons are to the latter Power pretty much, to a great extent at least, of the same service as ships in the maritime war between the United States and the Confederate States would be to the latter.

"The shipment of arms" (Mr. Seward says, page 10) "is denied to Mexico on the ground, not of want of them on her part as a belligerent, but on the ground of the military situation of the United States; and, on the other hand, the waggons are allowed to be shipped, not on the ground that France wants them as a belligerent, but on the ground that the military situation of the United States does not demand an inhibition."

Mutatis mutandis, this reasoning might be applied by Great Britain to the remonstrances of the United States in the matter of the "Alabama." But Great Britain, by virtue of the Foreign Enlistment Act, did endeavour to do that which, according to Mr. Seward's position in this correspondence, by general international law, would not have been incumbent upon her to do, namely, prevent the "Alabama" from leaving her ports.

Mr. Seward makes no attempt to prevent the transport of the waggons from the ports of the United States.

The answer of Mr. Romero (pages 14, 15) consists in calling upon the United States' Government to apply to Mexico the principles of law which he proves by citations from despatches she has applied to Great Britain.

The answer meets with no reply.

The correspondence in question will be of use whenever the complaints in

---

* American Papers: 37th Congress, Ex. Doc., 3rd Session, No. 24. Message of the President of the United States. "Correspondence from the Mexican Government as to Export of Contraband from the United States to France."

1863

the matter of the "Alabama" be renewed, or any similar complaint be made by the United States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 70.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 27.)

Temple, February 25, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th February instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 22nd March, 3rd of April, and 17th of September last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the correspondence which had since passed between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,† respecting the case of the "Labuan."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we would see from Lord Lyons' despatch No. 29 of the 13th ultimo, that the claim of the owners and charterers of that vessel for compensation on account of her seizure was referred to the Court of Admiralty at New York in October last, but that Court has not yet taken cognizance of it. That the agent of the parties interested has now applied to Lord Lyons, urging his Lordship to press the United States' Government for a settlement of the claims; the amount of compensation to be assessed, not by the Court of Admiralty, but by professional persons competent to decide on it.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we humbly advise Her Majesty's Government to instruct Lord Lyons to urge upon the United States' Government that, having regard to all the circumstances of this case, the flagrant violation of law committed by the original seizure of this vessel, a violation never, from first to last, denied by the United States' Government, the sending back this vessel to the Prize Court for further adjudication as to costs and damages is, even if technically correct, a practical evasion of the plain duty cast upon the United States' Government to make, without delay, all the reparation in its power for an act of hostility towards a neutral and friendly State, condemned alike by the Government and the legal tribunal of the United States.

That the delay of two months which has already occurred by sending back the case to the Prize Court is a serious addition to the injuries already sustained by the owners of the "Labuan." That the question is now, and in its present state, really and bonâ fide one to be settled between the two Governments; as it cannot be supposed that Her Majesty's Government would consider that any sentence of the Prize Court could, in the circumstances of this case, release the United States' Government from the obligation of making ample reparation for so great an outrage upon neutral rights.

That the question of amount of compensation is one manifestly proper to be submitted to experienced and skilful mercantile persons, and that as to the principle, Her Majesty's Government cannot, and do not, entertain any doubt whatever.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, pages 70, 83, and 225.

† Lord Lyons, No. 29, 1863; Mr. Stuart, No. 289, 1862; to Mr. Stuart, No. 135, 1862.

No. 71.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 26.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 26, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of February instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 20th instant (upon which I had already had the honour to make my Report, dated the 23rd instant*), he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 133, February 9, 1863), respecting the blockade of Galveston, and to request that I would take the same into consideration, together with the papers previously before me, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to further report—

That the information as to the resumption of the blockade, contained in the Circular, is so precise, and has been so widely disseminated by Lord Lyons, as, under the general law, and apart from considerations incident to the President's original Proclamation, to go far towards supplying the fresh notification which is required after a raising of the blockade.

Nevertheless, I think it would be expedient that Lord Lyons should be instructed to state to Mr. Seward that Her Majesty's Government expect that vessels approaching Galveston be warned upon the spot; and that instructions to this effect be sent to the United States' naval officers, inasmuch as it is admitted that the blockade has been de facto and de jure raised; and as the counter statements of the belligerents as to its resumption may tend to embarrass innocent vessels.

Probably the Representatives of France and Spain at Washington would join in such a requisition.

I have already had the honour to express my opinion that it would be expedient to publish the letter of Mr. Seward in the "Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 72.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 27.)

Temple, February 26, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 23rd ultimo,† upon the proposed draft of answer to Mr. Mason's letter of January 1863, complaining of the terms employed by your Lordship in a despatch to Lord Lyons relative to the blockade of the Southern ports, and also with reference to his letter of the 16th instant inclosing a letter from Mr. Mason, in which he stated that he should in the course of a day or two send a reply to your Lordship's letter of the 10th instant, he was now directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Mason, dated the 18th February instant, containing that reply, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us that the letter of Mr. Mason calls for any further answer upon the question of blockade from your Lordship. But, in acknowledging that letter, it might perhaps be as well to state that your Lordship did not intend to state that any number of vessels of a certain build or tonnage might be left at liberty freely to enter a blockaded port, without vitiating the blockade, but that the occasional escape of small vessels on dark nights, or under other particular circumstances, from the vigilance of a competent blockading

---

* Page 54.

† Page 29.

1863

fleet, did not evince that laxity in the belligerent which enured, according to international law, to the raising of a blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 73.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 3.)

Doctors' Commons, March 2, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th January, stating that with reference to my Report of the 1st January,* respecting the case of Captain Sherwin, a British subject who had been imprisoned at Port Delaware, and whom the United States' Government had stated its intention of prosecuting for high treason, he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, the drafts of two instructions which were addressed to Lord Lyons on the 10th ultimo (Nos. 15 and 16) respecting this case, and despatches which have since been received from his Lordship (Nos. 42, 71, 72, and 125), from which it appears that the intention of prosecuting Captain Sherwin has been abandoned, and that a question has now been raised as to whether Her Majesty's Government should demand directly from the United States' Government an indemnity for Captain Sherwin's imprisonment.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That the case of Captain Sherwin appears to be as follows:—

A British subject of good character and position, commanding a merchant vessel purchased in the United States, and lawfully employed, is suddenly arrested on a charge of high treason, and detained for twelve weeks in prison. At the end of that period, after a strong remonstrance from Her Majesty's Government, he is released, because the proper Law Officer of the United States advised his Government that he cannot "at present be successfully prosecuted for high treason;" but it is added, "his conduct is believed to have been unwarrantable and injurious."

He is also required to sign a parole of honour, not to aid or comfort the rebellion against the authority of the United States.

The plain meaning of this is, that the Government of the United States cannot prove the serious charge upon the ground of which alone they have for a long period deprived a British subject of his liberty, most seriously injured his fortunes as the Captain of a trading-vessel, and subjected him and his friends to the gravest anxiety.

Captain Sherwin, both by English and United States' law, is innocent if he is not proved guilty, as Mr. Seward must be perfectly aware. Nor is the injury done to him at all justified by the vague and illegal language that his conduct has been unwarrantable and injurious. There are, moreover, other circumstances in the early history of the case which make it incredible that Mr. Seward ever believed that the charge could be seriously sustained, and which make it credible that it was persisted in for this length of time, in order to cover the injustice of the original seizure of Captain Sherwin.

The imprisonment of this person was moreover continued after remonstrance from Her Majesty's Government, and after an intimation that if the charge proved, as Her Majesty's Government had reason to believe it would prove, wholly untenable, indemnity would be claimed at the hands of the United States' Government.

I am of opinion that in these circumstances Her Majesty's Government should demand from the United States' Government an indemnity for the imprisonment of Captain Sherwin.

It is to be remembered that the necessities of the United States have compelled them to suspend their habeas corpus Act, and it is possible that Mr. Seward may allege peculiar circumstances warranting, in the present distracted state of the United States, these arbitrary proceedings: if any such circumstances should be alleged by way of vindication by the United States' Government, they will of course be the subject of further consideration.

---

[*] Page 2.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 74.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 3.)

Doctors' Commons, March 2, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 34, February 11), inclosing printed copies of the sentence of condemnation pronounced by Judge Betts upon the steamer "Sunbeam" and her cargo, which formed the subject of my Report of the 28th November last, and of the Report of the Law Officers of the 16th ultimo.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would peruse this sentence, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have perused and considered the sentence of Judge Betts, and have the honour to report—

That the general principles of prize law appear to have been correctly applied to this case, and the vessel to have been upon these principles rightly condemned.

It is for the owners to consider whether they will appeal from the sentence; but this is not a case, in the present state of facts, which calls upon Her Majesty's Government for any interference.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 75.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Temple, March 2, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a printed copy of a letter dated the 9th ultimo from Mr. Adams, the United States' Minister at this Court, inclosing copies of an intercepted correspondence which Mr. Adams states, goes to show a deliberate attempt to establish within the limits of the United Kingdom a system of action in direct hostility to the Government of the United States, the plan embracing, as Mr. Adams observes, not only the building and fitting out of ships of war, but the obtaining from Her Majesty's subjects the pecuniary means essential to the execution of those hostile projects; and to request that we would take this correspondence into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether any of the facts alleged in it would, if proved, be punishable in Her Majesty's Courts of Justice.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the correspondence referred to does not appear to us to contain any sufficient evidence of "a system of action in direct hostility to the United States," on the part of any of Her Majesty's subjects.

It appears to show, that Agents of the Confederate States, resident in this country, have received instructions from their own Government to endeavour to raise money on securities of that Government in England, and to enter into contracts for the purchase of munitions of war and for the building of iron-clad vessels; and it may be supposed that they have been acting upon those instructions. But we cannot discover by these papers, that, either by receiving such instructions, or by acting upon them, those agents have as yet brought themselves within the reach of any criminal law of the United Kingdom. It is not contrary to law for Her Majesty's subjects to lend money, on securities, or otherwise, to "the persons administering the Government of the Confederate States;" nor to sell to that Government ordinary munitions of war. With respect to the building of iron-clad steamers for either belligerent Government, although this is clearly prohibited by the Foreign Enlistment Act, we do not find in this correspondence sufficient information as to anything actually done within this country in pursuance of that intention, to be made the groundwork of any criminal prosecution. We are, therefore, of opinion that as yet no such definite facts are alleged as, if proved, would be punishable in Her Majesty's Courts of Justice.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 76.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Temple, March 2, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 17th January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed Report from Mr. Rothery, the legal adviser of the Treasury on Slave Trade matters, with the draft of the Regulations which it is proposed to issue for the guidance of the Mixed Courts of Justice established under the Treaty between Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America for the suppression of the Slave Trade; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and inform your Lordship, at our early convenience, whether we were of opinion that the Regulations as now proposed are right and proper.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship at the same time to transmit to us, for reference, if required, a copy of the Regulations which were drawn up in 1842 for the guidance of the Mixed Commission Courts established under the provisions of the Treaty of July 1842 between this country and Portugal for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and to state that, if the instructions now drawn up by Mr. Rothery are approved, your Lordship proposes, if we see no objection to such a proceeding, to have the instructions for the guidance of the British and Portuguese Mixed Commission Courts made conformable with those drawn up for the use of the British and American Courts of Justice.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused the Regulations for the guidance of the Mixed Courts of Justice established in pursuance of the Treaty of the 7th April, 1862, between Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America for the suppression of the African Slave Trade, and are of opinion that they are proper, with the slight alteration and addition suggested by us, to be carried into effect.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 77.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Doctors' Commons, March 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying papers, as marked in the margin,* relative to the capture by the United States' cruizer "Tioga" of the British steamer "Pearl" while on a voyage from St. Thomas to Nassau; and to request that I would take the same into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there appears to be no legal ground for the seizure and detention of this vessel.

I think Lord Lyons might be instructed to represent the injustice of this class of seizures, namely, those which are made upon the merest pretext off the Bahamas, and sent to the Prize Court at Key West.

The recent case of the "Rising Dawn," mentioned in these papers, having been seized for having one gross of matches on board, might be cited by Lord Lyons as fairly exemplifying this class.

While the permission to appeal (if it were discretionary, as it would seem to be, with the Court) after the Judge had declared his inability to understand the grounds of the capture, illustrates the hardship inflicted on the owners of these vessels.

The "Pearl" appears to have had no cargo, and to have done no act which amounted to reasonable suspicion, or warranted her detention.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 78.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Temple, March 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 17th ultimo,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous correspondence, a further letter dated the 19th February ultimo, from the United States' Minister at this Court, inclosing a Memorial which has been addressed to the United States' Secretary of State by the New York Mutual Insurance Company, claiming the repayment by Her Majesty's Government of certain policies of insurance upon the United States' vessels "Brilliant" and "Manchester," which have been destroyed on the high seas by the Confederate steam-vessel "Alabama."

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an answer should be sent to Mr. Adams to the following effect:—

"That Her Majesty's Government entirely disclaim all responsibility whatever for any acts of the 'Alabama,' and had hoped that they had already made this decision on their part plain to the Government of the United States."

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 79.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Temple, March 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship

---

* Mr. Archibald, No. 33; Messrs. Loundes and Co., February 17, 1863; Messrs. Johnson's Memorials, February 18 and 25.

† Page 24.

1863

to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 32), inclosing the papers laid before Congress in support of the recommendation of President Lincoln in his last Annual Message, that compensation should be paid to the owners of the Norwegian barque "Admiral P. Fordenskiold," which, in May 1861, was prevented by the blockading squadron from leaving the port of Charleston.

That your Lordship thought it right we should have cognizance of these papers, and Mr. Hammond was therefore to request that we would consider the same, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That no inference can be drawn from the compensation paid by the United States' Government to the owners of the Norwegian barque, that in ordinary circumstances a vessel which had taken on board a cargo in a blockaded port after the commencement of the blockade, would be allowed to go out with that cargo.

The facts of this case, as to the time when the cargo was taken on board, are not quite clear; but the compensation has been paid, rightly or wrongly, on the ground that an indulgence conceded to a British vessel ought not to be denied to a Norwegian vessel.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 80.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Temple, March 3, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th February ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th January last,* respecting the case of the steamer "Gibraltar," or "Sumter," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a letter dated the 16th February ultimo, from Mr. Adams, the United States' Minister at this Court, stating that he had received information of the arrival of that vessel at Liverpool, and requesting your Lordship's attention to the bearing on this case of Her Majesty's Proclamation limiting the stay of vessels of the respective parties to the present struggle in America within Her Majesty's ports; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that it is not competent to Her Majesty's Government, upon the facts at present known to them, to assume, as Mr. Adams appears to do, that the ship lately called the "Sumter" has not been legally and bonâ fide sold to a British owner for commercial and peaceful purposes; and, unless it were established that the sale was, as Mr. Adams assumes, merely fictitious, we think that Her Majesty's Proclamation, to which his Excellency refers, cannot be treated as now applicable to that vessel in the port of Liverpool.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 16.

No. 81.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

My Lord, Temple, March 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th February ultimo, stating that with reference to our several Reports upon the case of the "Blanche," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers and with the drafts of instructions which were recently addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, founded upon our Reports of the 12th and 17th January last (No. 32, January 17, and No. 41, January 23), two despatches and their inclosures which have since been received from Lord Lyons respecting this case (Nos. 39 and 55), and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st February ultimo, stating that with reference to the case of the "Blanche," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 121, February 5th) in continuation of those on the same subject inclosed in his letter of the 10th February, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration when framing our further Report upon this case.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that your Lordship had approved the course proposed to be pursued by Lord Lyons, as reported in the despatch then sent to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the course which has been hitherto taken by the Representatives of the English and Spanish Governments has been proper; and we think it will be right still to decline to recognize the proceedings of the United States' Court-martial as being capable of exercising any influence upon the demands of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 82.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 5.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 4, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 131, February 7), inclosing a copy of a despatch from Mr. Acting Consul Coppell, together with a petition addressed to your Lordship by John Hughes, a British subject, who claims compensation from the Government of the United States on account of his arrest and imprisonment at New Orleans by order of the United States' military authorities at New Orleans.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in a place like New Orleans, under the dominion of martial law, it is not every interference with the liberty of Her Majesty's subjects, or even their temporary imprisonment upon a suspicion, which (though it turn out to be unfounded) calls for the direct intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

It might not unfrequently, perhaps, be fairly answered by the United States' Government that, in their present necessity, they mete out the same measure to their own citizens as they do to foreigners. Nevertheless there must be limits to this concession, and each case of the kind which is laid before Her Majesty's Government must be considered with reference to its own circumstances. And it certainly appears to me that the arbitrary imprisonment (if, indeed, it was as groundless as it is represented in these papers to have been) of this man Hughes for six weeks, was unjustifiable, and beyond the latitude of any concession which might reasonably be made by Her Majesty's Government to the peculiar condition of the United States' Government.

I assume that the facts are correctly stated by Mr. Consul Coppell; though it is to be regretted that a copy of the Report of the Judge Advocate has not been forwarded to your Lordship.

The amount of indemnity claimed appears to me very extravagant. But, as at present advised, I think an indemnity, the amount of which, perhaps, Lord Lyons might estimate, is due to Hughes.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 83.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 5.)

Doctors' Commons, March 4, 1863.

My Lord,

ITALY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 2nd October last, relative to the case of the British vessel "Ranger," detained at Messina, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a further despatch from Mr. West, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Turin, communicating the refusal of the Italian Government to make any compensation in that case; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and communicate to your Lordship any observations I may have to make thereon.

The former papers relating to this case were inclosed therewith.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this despatch, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of the Italian Government is not, in my opinion, satisfactory.

No evidence is offered to prove that the "Ranger" was chartered by the Emancipation Society of Genoa, to aid the operations of Garibaldi; and the immediate orders given, without any suggestion of the kind, for the return of the vessel, by a telegraph from the Italian Minister for Foreign Affairs, on the 8th September (see despatch No. 335 from Sir James Hudson), at the application of Sir James Hudson, appear to be inconsistent with this allegation.

The averments, if accurate, that the captain of the "Ranger" made inquiries as to the progress of Garibaldi (which, probably, most foreigners made at the time), and gave contradictory statements as to his object in coming to Messina, do not amount to the requisite proof, though it would be proper to ask the captain for his version of this part of the story.

If, indeed, the Italian Government can offer any clear evidence that the intention and object of the "Ranger" was to aid the expedition of Garibaldi, the case would be very different, and the detention of the vessel might be considered to be warranted by the exigency of the Government at that time.

The Italian Government should be requested, I think, to furnish this proof, or, in the absence of it, to grant the proper compensation for demurrage, and the costs of the new insurance.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 84.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 6.)

Doctors' Commons, March 6, 1863.

My Lord,

TURKEY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a note from the Turkish Ambassador in this country inclosing a translation of an Ordinance prohibiting the importation of arms, &c., into Turkey; and to request that I would inform your Lordship whether that Ordinance is in regular form, and may be published in the "Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Ordinance appears to me sufficiently regular in form to be inserted in the "Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 85.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 9.)

Doctors' Commons, March 7, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th February ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 74), respecting a claim for damages put forward by the master of the British schooner "Echo," on account of that vessel having been refused a clearance for Matamoros under circumstances similar to those under which the "Labuan" was also detained at New York, and which formed the subject of my Report of the 5th January, and to request that I would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd March instant, transmitting a further despatch from Lord Lyons having reference to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I advise your Lordship that the case of the "Echo" does not appear to me to call for any official interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government. It is not distinguishable from the case of the "Labuan," in which I had the honour to tender similar advice to your Lordship.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 86.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 9.)

Doctors' Commons, March 7, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd March instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 20th [18th] and to my Report of the 23rd February ultimo,* he was directed to transmit to me, together with the former papers, the accompanying further despatches as marked in the margin,† respecting the question of the blockade of the ports of Charleston and Galveston, and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

He was also pleased to add that in conformity with the advice contained in my Report of the 23rd ultimo, Mr. Seward's letter to Lord Lyons of the 5th of February was inserted in the Gazette of Friday last.

I am also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th March instant, transmitting a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 138) relating to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, with respect to the blockade of Galveston, it is observable that the note of Mr. Seward speaks of the blockade being resumed, and that the language of it appears to recognize the duty of the blockading squadron to give notice on the spot to vessels attempting to enter the port.

With respect to the blockade of Charleston, it certainly appears to have been raised or interrupted upon the 31st of January. But it is also evident from Mr. Consul Bunch's letter of February 1st (No. 16) that upon that day it was de facto resumed by a competent blockading force; for the absence of vessels from off what is called the Maffit or Bead's Channel would, I presume, not practically prevent the completeness of the blockade. As to the general law upon a blockade so raised or interrupted, I take the liberty to refer your Lordship to the Law Officers' Report of the 20th February. The Government of the United States appears to have taken no formal notice of this interruption of the blockade of Charleston. I think, however, that Lord Lyons should be instructed to call the attention of the Government to the fact that it has been interrupted, and to the evidence supporting the fact, and to intimate that if the blockade has since been lawfully resumed, neutral States have a right to expect that their vessels will be warned upon the spot, and not seized unless the warning be disregarded. It would of course be very desirable that Lord Lyons should act in concert with the Representatives of other neutral States at Washington in this matter.

---

* Pages 51 and 54.

† Lord Lyons, Nos. 154 and 155; Consul Lynn, No. 4; Consul Bunch, Nos. 15, 16, and 17.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 87.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 13.)

Doctors' Commons, March 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letters of the 5th and 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the despatches, as marked in the margin,* from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington and Mr. Consul Archibald, respecting the case of the "Mont Blanc," a British schooner captured when at anchor at Sand Cay, Bahama Bank, within one mile of the shore.

Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether compensation should be claimed from the United States' Government in this case, and also as to any steps which should be taken with reference to the "Mont Blanc" having been seized in British waters.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is admitted that this vessel was seized according to the statement of the United States' Attorney-General in British waters, and actually (see Lord Lyons' letter to Mr. Seward, January 9th) while at anchor in them.

I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought to require compensation for the plain wrong done to the owners of this vessel, and ought to address a remonstrance to the United States' Government upon the violation of British territory, requesting that orders may be given to the United States' navy to be most careful in abstaining for the future from committing the like very grave offence against international law and the dignity of the British Crown.

The necessity of such orders is shown (as should be pointed out) from the fact that, in this case, the captor, Captain Collins, appears from his letter (December 26, 1862,) to the Secretary of the United States' Navy, to be either entirely ignorant of this law, or entirely to disregard it; and the fact that the "Mont Blanc" was at anchor at the time of the capture renders the wrong inflicted on the owners, and the contempt for British rights exhibited by the captain, very flagrant.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 21, January 9, 1863; No. 93, January 30, 1863; No. 123, February 6, 1863; No. 149, February 12, 1863; Consul Archibald, No. 24, January 30, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 104, February 2, 1863.

No. 88.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 13.)

Doctors' Commons, March 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 24th February ultimo, inclosing copies of a correspondence received from the Governor of the Bahamas respecting the capture of the British schooner "Emma Tuttle," by the United States' ship of war "Cambridge," and the subsequent resumption of the command of the "Emma Tuttle" by her proper captain.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I see no just foundation for any claim on the part of the United States' Government against Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

According to general law and usage a captor must take care of his own prize; he has no right to expect or require the authorities of a neutral State, much less of the State to which the prize vessel belongs, to assist him in maintaining his possession.

The statement of the master of the "Emma Tuttle" that he had been entreated by the captor to save the vessel and the lives of those on board from destruction, and had been offered his vessel again as an inducement, seems to me, in the circumstances, very probable.

It is certain that necessity, not choice, drove the captor of a British vessel to seek refuge in a British port.

It is also certain that the captor with nearly all the prize crew abandoned, with whatever object, the vessel for a time. There is no evidence that the Collector of the Customs forcibly or "illegally detained" (as suggested in the second but not in the first letter of the United States' Consul) the vessel.

It was not the duty of that officer to interfere at all in any matter of prize; and it is to be regretted that even the tidewaiter was allowed to go on board, though he appears to have gone there rather as the agent of the captor, or perhaps of both parties, than in any other capacity.

In this state of things the original master of the vessel obtains, without any interference on the part of the local authorities, possession of her, and sails away with her. Whether it be true or false that he broke his promise to the captor, Her Majesty's Government cannot tell, and need not inquire. It is the business of the captor to secure his prize, not of the State to which the prize originally belonged to secure it for him.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 89.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 14.)

Temple, March 13, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter and its inclosures from Mr. Thomas Stirling Begbie, dated the 27th February ultimo, requesting that Her Majesty's Minister at Washington might be instructed to claim the release of his vessel the "Springbok," which had been seized by an United States' cruizer, while on a voyage from London to Nassau.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York on the same subject (No. 36), and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased in a note dated the 2nd March instant to state that, with reference to his letter of the 27th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Begbie with reference to the case of the British vessel "Springbok."

1863

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th March instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 27th ultimo respecting the seizure of the British barque "Springbok" by the United States' cruizer "Sonoma," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Begbie, dated 10th March instant, and two letters dated the 25th February and 9th March, 1863, from Messrs. Barter and Co., of Gracechurch Street, inclosing the charter-party of the "Springbok," and extracts of letters from her captain addressed to the owners, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those then before us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there does not appear to be any justification for the seizure of this vessel and cargo. The supposed reason, namely, that there were articles in the manifest not accounted for by the captain, certainly does not warrant the seizure, more especially as the destination of the vessel appears to have been bonâ fide neutral. We should be of opinion (if it could be safely assumed that there are no facts in the case besides those before us) that Lord Lyons might be instructed at once to demand her restitution, with proper compensation for the detention. But, inasmuch as it is probable that the "Springbok" has by this time been carried before a Prize Court of the United States for adjudication, and that an adjudication may shortly follow (if it has not already taken place), we cannot advise any other steps being taken by Her Majesty's Government at present than to watch the proceedings and judgment of the Court, and to apprize the owner, Mr. Begbie, that he will do well not to neglect the exercise of his own right to appear, and to establish the true facts of the case, and, in the end, to claim the release of the vessel and cargo, with costs and damages. After the conclusion of the trial, and full information as to its course and results (but not until then), Her Majesty's Government will be in a position to determine whether any, and if so what, application should be made to the Government of the United States.

With reference to the complaints contained in the papers referred to in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th March, they appear to us to be of the same character with those which have been made in many other cases; and we do not think that, in this stage of the proceedings, they require any special notice from Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 90.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 14.)

Doctors' Commons, March 13, 1863.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 6th ultimo,* respecting the new Decree issued by the President of the Argentine Confederation regarding the administration of foreign intestate property in Buenos Ayres, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a memorandum on this subject prepared by Mr. Thornton, Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres, who is now in England on leave of absence; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the propriety of adopting Mr. Thornton's suggestions as contained in the accompanying paper.

The previous papers,† together with my Report on this case, were returned to me.

---

* Page 46.

† February 6, 1863; Mr. Doria, No. 46, December 12, 1862.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers, together with the Memorandum referred to, into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it would be proper to adopt the suggestions contained in the Memorandum of Mr. Thornton.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 91.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 14.)

Temple, March 13, 1863.

SPAIN.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th of February ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd of July last* respecting the bankruptcy of Mr. Mould, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 26th of January ultimo, from Mr. Mackenzie, inclosing a copy of the adjudication of the Court of Bankruptcy in this case, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether that document was sufficient for the purpose of furnishing Sir John Crampton with the instructions suggested in our above-mentioned Report.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to return to us the Report in question for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the document inclosed in Mr. Mackenzie's letter to Mr. Layard of the 26th of January last is not an "office copy" authenticated by the seal of the Court of Bankruptcy such as was pointed out in the Report of the Law Officers of the 3rd of July, 1862, as proper to be forwarded to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid. We think that the suggestions contained in that Report ought to be carried out to the letter if Mr. Mould's assignees are to be assisted by the good offices of the Government; for it should be borne in mind that good offices are all that the Government can, by possibility, use in favour of British suitors or defendants before foreign Tribunals.

We would add that an office copy of the certificate of the appointment of assignees, also under the seal of the Court, had better accompany the office copy of the adjudication of bankruptcy to the Minister at Madrid, to be by him presented (should his interference be thought expedient) to the Spanish Government, together with the copy of the adjudication.

No such application to the Spanish Government, previous to the appointment of assignees of Mr. Mould's estate, as Mr. Mackenzie desires, can, in our opinion, be properly made.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 92.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

Temple, March 13, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Tatham and Co., dated the 3rd March instant, asking, with reference to the stoppage of several vessels lately by Federal men-of-war, what goods, if any, they should refuse to ship in their vessels to Nassau.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state, that he inclosed the draft of answer which it was proposed to return to Messrs. Tatham and Co., and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether, in our opinion, it is right and proper.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 174.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the draft of the answer proposed to be returned by your Lordship to Messrs. Tatham and Co. is fit and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 93.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 14.)

SIAM.

Temple, March 14, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Sir Robert Schomburgk, Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok (No. 13, May 8, and No. 21, June 21, 1862), respecting the question of the importation and sale of spirits in Siam.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter, dated the 7th February ultimo, from the Board of Trade, stating the opinion of that Board that Sir Robert Schomburgk's measures should be approved. And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we concur in the proposed approval of the steps taken by Sir Robert Schomburgk in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we concur in the approval of the Board of Trade as to the steps taken by Sir Robert Schomburgk respecting the importation and sale of spirits in Siam.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 94.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, March 14, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch dated the 24th January ultimo, from the Governor of the Bahamas, transmitting a Proclamation which he had issued prohibiting native pilots from serving on board belligerent ships, and stating that he had instituted proceedings against two men who had acted as pilots.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not clearly appear whether the Proclamation purports to forbid Her Majesty's subjects from exercising towards the vessels of belligerents the ordinary calling of pilots, that is, from merely piloting vessels of war in and out of the Bahamas harbours, not remaining permanently on board, but returning to their boats as soon as they have safely conducted the vessels within or without the harbour; or whether it is intended to prohibit Her Majesty's subjects from serving permanently as pilots on board belligerent vessels.

In the former case we should think that the prohibition goes beyond the law in this matter; in the latter case it appears to us open to no objection.

It would be inexpedient to recall the Proclamation for the sake of introducing words calculated to remove the ambiguity; but in practice it ought not to be allowed to effect pilots exercising, in the ordinary way, their ordinary vocation.

So far as the Proclamation prohibits the service of seamen not employed as pilots, it is in accordance with the law upon the subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 95.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

ITALY.

Temple, March 14, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a translation of a letter dated the 28th January ultimo, received at this office from M. Giovanni Mariotti, claiming British protection on the ground that his father was born in Corsica at the time when that island was a British possession, and served as Quartermaster of the Royal Corsican Regiment of His Britannic Majesty; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that this person having been born in Sicily is primâ facie not a British subject; and it does not appear to us that the papers before us contain sufficient facts to show that he is entitled to British protection, or to a certificate of British nationality, under the provisions of the Naturalization Acts, or otherwise.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 96.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 17.)

UNITED STATES.

Doctors' Commons, March 16, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter from the Admiralty, dated the 3rd March instant, inclosing a copy of the instructions issued by the Admiral in command of the United States' Eastern Gulf blockading squadron, to the officers under his orders; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these instructions into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these instructions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these instructions are in accordance with the expositions of international law, upon the subject to which they refer, in the English Prize Courts.

It is to be observed that they proceed upon a disregard of the original Proclamation (19th April, 1861) of the President of the United States with respect to notice upon the spot being given in the first instance to all neutral vessels—at least according to my construction of the language used in that instrument.

1863

But these instructions are agreeable to the law of blockade administered in our Prize Courts.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 97.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 17.)

Doctors' Commons, March 16, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of 21st February, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Adams, dated the 20th January ultimo, calling your Lordship's attention to another instance of a claim for the restitution of a vessel which seems to have been heretofore made by Her Majesty's Government, under circumstances similar to those of the case of the "Emily St. Pierre," which formed the subject of the Law Officers' Reports of the 28th of April, 3rd of May, 20th of May, and 7th of June of last year.*

Mr. Hammond was to transmit to me the correspondence, as marked in the accompanying manuscript volumes, respecting the case of the "Yonge Albert," which is presumed to be that referred to by Mr. Adams, as well as a short abstract of that case, which has been drawn up at the Foreign Office; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer as to the bearing of the case of the "Yonge Albert" upon that of the "Emily St. Pierre."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a careful examination of the correspondence relating to the "Yonge Albert," contained in the eight volumes sent to me from the Foreign Office, shows that it does not furnish a precedent for the demands of Mr. Adams in the case of the "Emily St. Pierre."

The case of the "Yonge Albert" was of a very extraordinary and anomalous character, and neither Her Majesty's Government nor the Dutch Government appear to have relied upon any express decision or direct precedent in support of their respective opinions.

The Dutch Government eventually gave up the vessel: the British Government, having maintained the principle of their demand, restored the vessel to the Dutch Government. It underwent no jurisdiction, as Mr. Adams supposes, in the Prize Court.

But whatever may have been the merits of that case, it is discriminated by the peculiarity of its facts from that of the "Emily St. Pierre."

The gravamen of the British complaint in the case of the "Yonge Albert," was, that in a Dutch port the Dutch authorities had forcibly detained a British prize vessel, and had, by active aid or by passive connivance, abetted Dutch subjects resident in the port, in overpowering the British prize crew on board the vessel, and in removing the cargo, which, as well as the vessel, belonged jure belli to the captor until the adjudication of the Prize Court. The Dutch civic authorities were, in other words, required to undo the wrong they had done.

The complaint was not that a Dutch crew, unaided and uncountenanced by Dutch authorities, had in the open sea overpowered and sent away the prize crew of a British prize, and afterwards brought the vessel into a Dutch port.

This is the case of the "Emily St. Pierre."

If, in these circumstances, England had demanded the aid of Dutch authority to restore the lost prize, the Dutch Government might have replied, as unanswerably as the English Government does now to the United States' Government, "Our municipal law does not furnish us, when neutral in a war, with the power of assisting either belligerent in making or retaining prizes, and international law absolutely forbids us so to do. It admonishes us that the recognized duty of the neutral is (with well-known exceptions incident to the protection of our own territory) in bello se non interponere."

If the neutral magistrate interposed to release or secure a prize, or to adjudicate upon a question of prize, he sins against this rule of law.

---

* See Reports for 1862, pages 99, 111, 121, and 143.

The true doctrine is, that the belligerent captor must take care of his own prize. He has no right to call upon the neutral Magistrate to help him in performing the task.

This is a doctrine founded on the reason of the thing, and maintained by all international authorities, conspicuous among whom are the jurists of the United States.

I do not think Mr. Adams can cite a single accredited American authority who contradicts this position.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 98.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Temple, March 16, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from Mr. Adams, dated the 4th March instant, inclosing a copy of a letter addressed to him by the United States' Consul at Liverpool, stating that Mr. M. G. Klingender, the purchaser of the steamer "Sumter," had been acting as agent for the payment of some sailors who have arrived in this country, after having been discharged from the Confederate vessel "Alabama," and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the reply of your Lordship should be confined to a simple acknowledgment of the receipt of the letter of Mr. Adams.

It is clear that, although the sailors, who are said to have been paid their wages, through the agency of Mr. Klingender, have been guilty of a criminal offence under the Foreign Enlistment Act, Mr. Klingender has not, by the mere act of paying these wages, violated any provision of that statute, or any other law of this country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 99.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Doctors' Commons, March 17, 1863.

My Lord,

DENMARK.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen (No. 38), forwarding correspondence as to the proceedings of the Danish authorities in regard to the property left by Mrs. Strattin, a British subject, lately deceased at Copenhagen; and Mr. Murray was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion of the case at my earliest convenience.

Mr. Murray also inclosed a further despatch on the same subject from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, transmitting to me a further despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen on this subject (No. 6).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers present substantially two questions for consideration:

1. As to the due construction of the Treaty;

1863

2. As to the correctness of the decision arrived at by the Danish Magistrate upon the national character of Mrs. Strattin.

But for that decision I should have scarcely thought it possible that there could be any doubt that Mrs. Strattin, the wife of a living Englishman, was an English subject in the sense of the Treaty. And if there could be no reasonable doubt on this matter, it is clear from the words of the Treaty, that "the right to possess" the property of the deceased was immediately on her death vested in the English Consul.

It would be inconsistent with the whole tenour and object of the Treaty so to construe it as to hold that in every case the Danish Magistrate is to ascertain, by a preliminary inquiry, whether the deceased intestate is or is not a British subject. Such a construction would deprive the Treaty of much of its value.

On the other hand, in cases of bonâ fide reasonable doubt, the Danish authorities may fairly claim time to inquire whether the casus fœderis has or has not arisen.

But in the present case the primâ facie presumption was very strongly in favour of the British character of the deceased person; and in my opinion the casus fœderis arose immediately, and the English Consul ought to have been allowed to have taken immediate possession of the effects of the deceased wife of a British subject.

It follows, of course, that in my opinion the decision of the Danish Magistrate is erroneous.

It does not allege any law of Denmark whereby the wife of a foreigner retains during the life of her husband her national character in Denmark; the existence of such a law might, indeed, furnish grave matter for consideration, which is at present wanting in the case.

It can hardly be disputed that by the general law, and the usages of comity, the wife becomes incorporated in the country of her husband during his life, and acquires his national character.

A return to her own country for one or two years, or more, does not divest her of this character according to the principles of general jurisprudence applicable to this question.

I forbear to enter into the consideration, as to whether the fact of a divorce a mensâ et toro would affect this status, both because there was no such divorce in this case, and because the Danish Magistrate, though he erroneously thought that there had been a divorce, did not found his sentence upon this mistake.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 100.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Doctors' Commons, March 17, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me three despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,* inclosing copies of his correspondence with Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston and with the United States' Secretary of State respecting four British schooners which were lying in the Sabine River at the time the pass was occupied by the United States' forces.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether, under the circumstances therein stated, these vessels may claim to be allowed to leave the Sabine River.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Seward does not appear to dispute the law, or the received usage, as to vessels in blockaded ports, namely, that vessels lying in a blockaded port at the time of the commencement of the blockade are allowed to retire without cargo, unless the cargo were taken on board before the blockade became effective; nor does he dispute that on the 11th day of May, 1861, he communicated to Lord Lyons that fifteen days was specified by him as the period within which vessels would be permitted to leave a port after the actual establishment of a blockade (see Inclosure 5, No. 103; letter of Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward).

* No. 469, December 2, 1862; No. 103, February 2, 1863; No. 141, February 10, 1863.

Mr. Seward disputes the fact as to the precise period of the commencement of the effective blockade.

Upon this material point he relies upon the statements of Mr. Gideon Welles, Secretary to the United States' Navy.

The two despatches from that gentleman (3rd January and 5th February, 1863) are not satisfactory on the point.

In the former he asserts that there has always been an effective blockade of the Sabine River; in the latter, that the schooners evaded the blockade by "availing themselves of dark nights, and the impression that our officers appeared to have of the insignificance of the port for some time." This latter admission seems really to mean what Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston asserts (Inclosure 1 in No. 469, October 9, 1862), that there was no effective blockade before the 4th of October last, that is, until after the schooners had entered the port.

I think Lord Lyons should be instructed that, if any evidence can be procured corroborative of the Consul's statement as to the blockade, he should press Mr. Seward again for the release of the schooners.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 101.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 19.)

Temple, March 17, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 2nd October last,* respecting the case of the British schooner "Albert," captured by the United States' cruizer "Harow," for an alleged attempt to run the blockade of a Southern port, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,‡ inclosing, together with other papers, the decree of condemnation pronounced in this case, a decree from which it appears the owners of the "Albert" have determined to appeal.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have again considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that while the appeal is pending, and the effect of the new evidence sought to be introduced before the Appellate Court is unknown, Her Majesty's Government ought not officially to interfere in this matter.

The evidence upon which the Judge proceeded is not before us, and without it we are not in a condition to advise satisfactorily upon the validity of the Judgment which is now under appeal.

Assuming, however, the evidence to warrant the representation of its effect, both as to the "cotton cards" and their real destination, and as to the mutilation of the log-book, contained in the Judgment of the Prize Court (facts which were not disclosed in the statement of this case, on which we formally advised), we should be of opinion that the sentence was well founded.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 237.
† Mr. Stuart, No. 198; to Mr. Stuart, No. 145.
‡ Lord Lyons, Nos. 96 and 133.

1863

No. 102.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 19.)

Temple, March 17, 1863.

CHINA.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Bruce, Her Majesty's Minister in China (No. 182, December 10, 1862), inclosing a copy of a despatch which he had addressed to Mr. Consul Sinclair, on the course to be pursued in cases in which the Chinese authorities and the Consul differ as to the penalty which by Treaty is to be imposed on vessels breaking the Chinese Customs laws. Also on the power of the Custom-house to seize contraband goods on board ship, without a Consular warrant, and on the liability to confiscation by the Chinese of a vessel which enters a Treaty port with a cargo taken in at a place not open by Treaty.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us copies of the Treaty of Tien-tsin and the Convention of Peking, as well as a previous despatch from Mr. Bruce, respecting the case of the "Pearl" (No. 132), and to request that we would take Mr. Bruce's instructions to Consul Sinclair into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the instructions given by Mr. Bruce in his despatch (December 9, 1862) to Consul Sinclair contains a just and proper exposition of the principles which ought to regulate the conduct of Her Majesty's Consuls towards the Chinese authorities in the cases referred to in that despatch.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 103.

The Queen's Proctor to Mr. Layard.—(Received March 18.)

Doctors' Commons, March 18, 1863.

BRAZIL.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, stating that you were directed by Earl Russell to acquaint me that Her Majesty's Government have been engaged in a discussion with the Government of Brazil regarding the case of some officers of Her Majesty's ship "Forte," who were imprisoned and otherwise ill-treated by Brazilian authorities.

That Her Majesty's Government have accepted the proposal of the Brazilian Government that the question in dispute between the two Governments should be referred to the arbitration of His Majesty the King of the Belgians, on the footing proposed by the Brazilian Government, namely, whether, in applying the laws of Brazil to the officers of the "Forte," there has been any offence to the British navy.

That Her Majesty's Government have consented to submit the case to the King of the Belgians for arbitration, and as His Majesty has deigned to accept the task, Earl Russell has directed that the correspondence should be forwarded to me; and you were to request that I would prepare from it a case to be submitted on behalf of Her Majesty's Government for arbitration at Brussels.

In obedience to Earl Russell's directions I have prepared, and have now the honour to transmit the case on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and beg to suggest that the same, if approved, should be returned to me, in order that it may be properly printed for the use of His Majesty the King of the Belgians.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. DYKE.

No. 104.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 20.)

Temple, March 19, 1863.

PERSIA.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of February last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Persia (No. 4), respecting a robbery supposed to have been committed by Mirza John Ibrahim, an employé in the British Legation; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take into consideration the points referred to by Mr. Eastwick, and inform your Lordship what steps should, in our opinion, be taken in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that as no Order in Council relating to Her Majesty's subjects in Persia founded on the 6th and 7th Vict., cap. 94, has yet been issued, it is not competent to the Consul, or the Representative of Her Majesty in Persia, to inflict upon Mirza John Ibrahim any punishment, except that of dismissal from his office.

Care would of course be taken that the cause of his dismissal and degradation was made formally known to the Persian Government, and the apprehended evil of his being employed by that Government thus, as far as possible, averted.

Mirza John Ibrahim might be delivered over by the British to the Persian authorities for trial and punishment, but we do not advise this step to be taken.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 105.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 20.)

Doctors' Commons, March 19, 1863.

MEXICO.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to my letter of the 10th of October last, upon the subject of the blockade of the port of Tampico by the French naval forces, he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint me that your Lordship had instructed Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to bring the alleged inefficient nature of that blockade to the notice of the French Government, and to ascertain their intentions upon that subject; and Mr. Hammond was to transmit to me the answer which has been received to the communication which Her Majesty's Ambassador accordingly made to the French Government, and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

The previous papers were also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I find the following admissions in these papers:—

That the blockade was announced in the "Moniteur" of the 9th of June, as having been established on the 1st of May ("comme ayant été établi le 1 Mai"). That nevertheless it did not really begin till the 15th of July. That it was kept (if at all) by the single ship "Berthollet," from the 15th to the 29th of July. That even then the "Berthollet" was continually off the blockade for some hours, either warning or pursuing other vessels. That on the 29th of July the "Berthollet" went to Vera Cruz. That no French vessel of war was off the coast of Tampico till the 5th of August. That on the 5th of August a ship of war arrived, and remained till the 18th. That on the 18th of August the "Berthollet" returned.

It is admitted that during the interval between the 29th of July and the 5th of August ("c'est-à-dire, pendant les quelques jours où il n'y a pas eu de croiseur") the American ship "Eugenie" entered the port.

These admissions are, according to the authorities which I have had the honour to cite to your Lordship in my former Report, sufficient to show that the blockade has not hitherto been so kept as to be valid according to the rules of international law upon the subject.

It is important to draw attention to the exposition of international law upon this subject given by the latest accredited French writers, who, by authority, adapted the former treatise of Valin to the usage of modern times ("De Pistoye et Duverdy," vol. i, pp. 374, 375). "Aujourd'hui," they say, "qu'on n'admet plus que des blocus effectifs, on ne déclare de bonne prise que les navires saisis lorsqu'ils essayent de franchir la ligne du blocus; et si une circonstance quelconque fait qu'un navire pénètre, malgré les croiseurs, dans les lieux bloqués, on ne peut plus ensuite le capturer pour ce fait; c'était aux croiseurs à faire meilleure garde; s'ils étaient éloignés par suite de l'état de la mer ou par toute autre cause, alors le blocus n'était plus effectif, et il était permis aux neutres d'entrer dans les lieux précédemment bloqués. Cette doctrine, proclamée par la France en 1838, est celle qui est professée dans la guerre actuelle par les Puissances Occidentales."

M. Drouyn de Lhuys asks what injury a lax blockade inflicts upon the complaining merchants. The answer, of course, is, the injury of uncertainty as to their trade and the employment of their capital. Reports reach them, and they turn out to be true, that during a considerable period the blockade of Tampico has ceased. Ships are freighted, and sent in consequence; but when they arrive the blockade has been restorered, and the loss to the merchant, even if his vessel be not seized, is severe.

It is on the consideration of such consequences as these, incident to a lax blockade, that nations by common consent have required on the part of belligerents that a blockade shall be both continuous and effective, in order to warrant the injury inflicted on neutrals by cutting off their ordinary commerce.

It must be admitted, on the other hand, that the French exercise their right of blockade more leniently than the English, inasmuch as they generally, if not invariably, warn the vessels on or near the spot, and do not seize them until the warning has been disregarded.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 106.

The Queen's Advocate to Mr. Hammond.—(Received March 20.)

Doctors' Commons, March 20, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

THE Queen's Advocate presents his compliments to Mr. Hammond, and would be glad to be furnished with the papers laid before him on the 17th of February, upon the subject of "the exportation of articles, contraband of war, for the use of the French army in her war against Mexico from the United States," and upon which the Queen's Advocate wrote his Report dated the 24th February, as these papers would be of service to the Law Officers for reference in cases now before them.

The Queen's Advocate would also be glad if his Report above-mentioned accompanied these papers.

No. 107.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Temple, March 21, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th March instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th instant,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, together with the previous papers,† a further letter, and its inclosures, from Mr. Begbie,* urging a reconsideration of the decision come to by Her Majesty's Government in the case of the "Springbok."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us the draft of an instruction which your Lordship had addressed to Lord Lyons on this case; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with such further observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to alter the advice which we had the honour to offer to your Lordship in our last Report.

Mr. Begbie points out that the vessel has been very nearly condemned by default: Mr. Begbie should be told that the fact reflects great discredit on those who had charge of her interests.

Mr. Begbie might also be apprized that though Her Majesty's Government has officially interfered upon very rare and special occasions to require immediate restitution of a vessel unjustly captured, that by the general law the fact of the unjust seizure is a question to be determined after hearing both sides by the Prize Court of the belligerents, which every neutral State recognizes as competent for this purpose, and which has in England, during all the wars in which England has been belligerent, exercised the same functions as it now exercises in the United States, with respect to the capture of neutral vessels.

During the present war Her Majesty's Government have often been called upon to interfere upon very strong ex parte statements of injury, which subsequent investigation in the Prize Court has proved to be wholly without foundation. The complaint of the delay in the proceedings of the Prize Court might properly form a subject of present remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and if justice should not be done by the Prize Courts in the case of the "Springbok," the proper time for official remonstrance with the Government of the United States will have arrived.

We think the proposed letter to Lord Lyons from your Lordship fit and proper to be sent, but that it would be expedient to add a few lines desiring Lord Lyons to inquire into the justice of the complaints of the delays in the Prize Courts, and if they turn out to be well founded to make the fact of such delays the subject of a remonstrance to the Government of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 108.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 22.)

Temple, March 22, 1863.

RUSSIA.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith three letters from the Russian Ambassador at this Court respecting a vessel expected in the river of which suspicions were entertained that she might be engaged for purposes contrary to law; that these letters were at once forwarded to the Board of Treasury and the Home Department; and to inclose a Report from the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, which has been received from the former of these Departments, stating the result of their inquiries; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether any, and if so what, steps should be taken in the matter.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add, that he was informed by the Chairman of the Board of Customs that the master of the vessel applied for his clearance, but that the deliverance of his clearance was postponed in consequence of the irregularity, under the Customs Law, of the manner in which the muskets were shipped under a false denomination, but that, the goods being

---

* Page 69.

† Consul Archibald, No. 36; Messrs. Barter, February 25; Mr. Begbie, February 27; Messrs. Barter, March 9; Mr. Begbie, March 10; to Mr. Begbie, March 14.

* Mr. Begbie, March 18, 1863.

1863

removed from the ship, the authorities, under ordinary circumstances, would no longer withhold her clearance. That it is therefore of importance that our opinion on the subject should, if possible, be made known to your Lordship in the course of to-day.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to give their sanction to the arrest of the "Ward Jackson" without being in possession of legal evidence sufficient to establish a primâ facie case of a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act in a Court of Law. The passage in the "Globe" newspaper, and the suspicions of Baron Brunnow, however reasonable in themselves, do not constitute such legal evidence. The requisite proof would be, first, that the vessel has been fitted out as a transport (of which we entertain no doubt, and as to which we think the evidence sufficient); secondly (and here arises the difficulty), that the vessel so fitted out was to be employed in the service of some particular foreign State, or people insurgent, or otherwise, assuming to exercise powers of Government. On this head the legal proof is, at present, entirely wanting, as there is no evidence pointing to the particular State for the service of which the vessel is destined.

We assume that the forfeiture of the arms which have been seized under the Customs Act will be enforced, and that intimation of this fact will be given to the Russian Government.

In these circumstances no ground at present appears on which the further detention of the vessel would be strictly justifiable by law. But it is for Her Majesty's Government to consider whether it would not be proper to incur such risks as there may be, of liability in damages on account of a further delay in granting the clearance of the vessel, in order thereby to give an opportunity to Baron Brunnow to produce any evidence as to the purpose for which the vessel is equipped, and as to its true destination, which may be in his possession.

We should recommend, if this course be adopted, that the period of delay should not be extended beyond that which may be strictly necessary for this purpose.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 109.

The Queen's Proctor to Mr. Layard.—(Received March 23.)

Doctors' Commons, March 23, 1863.

Sir,

BRAZIL.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, stating that you were directed by Earl Russell to request that I would have the goodness to take the opinion of Her Majesty's Law Officers on the case to be submitted for the arbitration of the King of the Belgians in the case of the "Forte."

In reply, I beg to state that I have submitted the case for the approval of Her Majesty's Law Officers, and have now the honour to transmit the same, approved of by them.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. DYKE.

No. 110.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Doctors' Commons, March 23, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th March instant, stating that with reference to that part of my Report of the 7th instant* in which I suggested that Lord Lyons should be instructed to call the attention of the United States' Government to the circumstances attending the late interruption of the blockade of the port of Charleston, he was directed to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 181) inclosing an extract from the "National Intelligencer" newspaper containing documents signed by the United States' naval officers which contradict the statements made by the Confederates concerning the dispersion of the blockading squadron off Charleston; and to request that I would take these further papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I may have to offer thereupon; and to add that your Lordship defers instructing Lord Lyons, as suggested in my Report of the 7th instant, until my further Report has been received.

---

* Page 67.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Captain Ross to Lord Lyons (February 7, 1863) must be taken as proving that the blockade at Charleston is now well established; that it appears, moreover, to be most probable that the statements of Her Majesty's Consul as to the interruption of the blockade, on which my former Report was founded, were erroneous, though the language and tone of the United States' Admiral Dupont's despatch is such as to disincline me to place implicit belief in its accuracy; nor do I think that despatch sufficient per se to convict Her Majesty's Consul of so serious an offence as that of stating a deliberate untruth with respect to the interruption of the blockade. But in my opinion Her Majesty's Consul should be required to state his answer to the charge preferred against him by Admiral Dupont and his subordinate naval officers.

In the mean time I have the honour to express my opinion that the state of facts presented by the papers now before me renders it inexpedient to send the instructions suggested in my former Report, founded on the representation of a contrary state of facts, to Lord Lyons.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 111.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.--(Received March 23.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 24th of November last, advising that compensation should be claimed on account of the forcible occupation, by the United States' authorities, of a house belonging to Mr. Thomas Byrne, at New Orleans, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, and with the instructions addressed to Lord Lyons in conformity with my Report,* two despatches, and their inclosures, from Lord Lyons,† the last of which contains the answer of the United States' Government to this claim.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this answer into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this answer into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from Captain McClure's Report to Mr. Watson (inclosed in Mr. Seward's despatch to Lord Lyons), that the house of Mr. Byrne, a British subject, was forcibly seized upon by General Butler. That a portion of the house was used by the Military Commission.

It does not appear, from this Report, or from the other papers before me, impartially considered, that any property of Mr. Byrne was taken away, or any of his provisions consumed.

It appears from the letter of Captain McClure that the American Quartermaster was of opinion that the United States' Government ought to pay rent for the use of the rooms in the house.

I have the honour to advise that Lord Lyons be instructed to request the United States' Government to adopt this suggestion, which seems to me, all the

---

* To Lord Lyons, No. 306, 1862.

† Lord Lyons, No. 559, 1862, and No. 174, 1863.

1863.

circumstances duly considered, equitable. The amount of the rent should be estimated on the basis, not only of the value of the rooms during the period of their occupation, but of the excessive wear and tear of the furniture incident to the peculiar character of the tenancy, so as to leave open no further demand for specific injury to furniture or the like.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 112.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Doctors' Commons, March 23, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 28th of November and the 3rd instant, relative to the case of the steamer "Sunbeam," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 41, February 25), inclosing a copy of a despatch which he had addressed to Lord Lyons on the question whether the point of no warning, under the President's Proclamation of the 19th of April, 1861, had been raised in this case; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this point into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the point arising out of the language of the President's Proclamation has been raised and overruled by the Prize Court in this and, it appears, in other cases, I have no further advice to offer on this matter of the "Sunbeam."

As I have not seen the grounds upon which the objection was overruled, I cannot form any opinion as to their validity.

It might be useful, for various reasons, to obtain a copy of the Judgment in the case in which this point was first deliberately argued by Counsel, and rejected as untenable by the Prize Court; as also to learn whether the Supreme Court has confirmed the decision of the Inferior Court in this respect.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 113.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Temple, March 23, 1863.

My Lord,

RUSSIA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed to state to us that having, nearly simultaneously with the receipt of our Report of yesterday,* received from the Russian Ambassador the further letter and its inclosure, therewith transmitted, respecting the "Ward Jackson," your Lordship requested the Lords of the Treasury to give immediate directions for the detention of the vessel until further orders, and that your Lordship this morning addressed to the Russian Ambassador the letter of which a copy is inclosed, and to request that we would take this correspondence into consideration, together with the previous letters, and report to your Lordship what course should now be taken in this matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letter transmitting a letter from the Treasury respecting the search of the "Ward Jackson."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although the further papers confirm us in the opinion that the "Ward Jackson" ought not, for the present, to receive its clearance from the Customs, yet the affidavit of the Consul does not supply evidence of the destination of the ship, nor does he state the ground of his belief that she is destined for any Russian port or coast in the Baltic.

* Page 81.

His Excellency the Russian Ambassador says that the ostensible destination is Libau, and that the intention is to seize that port by a coup de main.

His Excellency does not state on what authority or evidence he forms this opinion.

We think his Excellency should be apprised that it will still be necessary for him, in order to furnish ground sufficient to warrant Her Majesty's Government in further detaining the vessel, to forward to them any evidence upon which he relies for proof of a destination hostile to the Russian Government, and when that has been done (if his Excellency should be in possession of such evidence) we should be in a situation further to advise Her Majesty's Government thereupon.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—His Excellency should be informed that Her Majesty's Government can only act upon such evidence as will be admissible in an English Court of Justice, which would exclude mere hearsay testimony and common report, such as newspaper paragraphs and the like, and must consist either of facts deposed to by persons themselves cognizant thereof, or speaking of them from admissions made in their presence or in writing by persons concerned in the vessel or her adventure.

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 114.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 26.)

Doctors' Commons, March 24, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the papers, as marked in the margin,* relative to the "Elias Reid," a Confederate schooner, captured, as is asserted, in British waters; and to request that I would take this case into my consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose to me, in his second letter, of the 18th instant, a further despatch from Lord Lyons, and one from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, respecting the case of the "Elias Reid."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, according to the affidavit, notarially certified, of Rougley and Williams, the "Elias Reid" was seized by the United States' steamer "Octorora," while at anchor in British waters. Admiral Milnes writes to Lord Lyons (December 16, 1862):—"This case appears to be so clear a violation of neutral territory that I submit it for your Excellency's consideration," &c. The Commander of the "Octorora," however, it would appear from the letter of Mr. Nibbs Brown (November 15, 1862, Inclosure 2 in Lord Lyons' No. 555) to Mr. Nesbitt, made the capture in bonâ fide ignorance both of the law and of the instructions of his own Government.† It is suggested that the longitude and latitude given by the United States' Commander Collins to Mr. Secretary Welles does not exactly correspond with that in the protest made by the Captain of the "Elias Reid," but that the log of the "Octorora" upon this point will be found to agree exactly with such protest.

According to the map appended to the depositions of one of the witnesses in the Prize Court, the capture appears to have been made in British waters.

* Mr. G. Ashley, February 16, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 555, December 30; No. 556, December 30; No. 564, December 31, 1862; to Lord Lyons, No. 26, January 16, 1863; Colonial Office, January 21, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 44, January 23, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 186, February 24; No. 187, February 25, 1863; Mr. Archibald, No. 39, February 22, 1863.

† Despatch of Vice-Consul Butterfield to Consul Archibald; Inclosure in despatch No. 39, February 23, 1863.

1863

On the whole, it is difficult to arrive at any other conclusion than that the vessel was seized while at anchor in British waters.

The Judge of the Prize Court rightly refused to an alien enemy any persona standi in the Court.

It was not competent to the alien enemy to raise the objection that the seizure was invalid because made in neutral British waters.

It is competent to Her Majesty's Government to raise the objection, and it would have been no great act of courtesy on the part of the United States' Government to have allowed Her Majesty's Government to have raised it by way of diplomatic statement, and out of Court. But the United States' Government have a strict right to say, "The case has been tried in open Court; you should have made your claim there. There is an Appellate Court; you may make it there, and it will receive a judicial determination."

It seems to me proper that the claim—assuming the evidence to be clear in its favour—should be preferred by Her Majesty's Government; and if the United States' Government persist in refusing to listen to it out of Court, I think Lord Lyons should be instructed to cause the claim to be properly urged in the Appellate Court, if the case be carried to that Tribunal.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 115.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 26.)

Doctors' Commons, March 25, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the papers as noted in the margin,* respecting the case of Mr. Thomas W. Bennett, who was lately in New Orleans, and who is anxious to establish a claim for loss of property, consisting of clothing, which he left behind him in Louisiana. Mr. Bennett also complains that Mr. Coppell, the Acting Consul at New Orleans, refused to grant him a certificate that he was a British subject. That among the papers is a despatch from Mr. Coppell, explaining why he refused to file Mr. Bennett's claim, and to grant him the certificate above referred to; that the substance of this explanation was communicated to Mr. Bennett in a letter dated the 17th instant, to which he has now rejoined.

Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that I would take Mr. Bennett's case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. Bennett has made out no case which calls for the interference of Her Majesty's Government; and that Mr. Coppell appears to me to have acted very properly.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 116.

The Queen's Advocate to Mr. Hammond.—(Received March 26.)

Doctors' Commons, March 26, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

THE Queen's Advocate presents his compliments to Mr. Hammond, and with reference to his letter of the 24th instant, instructing the Queen's Advocate to confer with the Attorney and Solicitor-General and Admiralty Advocate, with reference to letters of marque about to be issued by President Lincoln, would also be glad to be empowered to call in the Queen's Proctor and Admiralty Proctor, to aid in the investigation of precedents which are chiefly in their possession.

---

* Mr. Bennett, December 10, 1862; to Mr. Coppell, No. 1, January 2, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 172, February 23, 1863; to Mr. Bennett, March 17, 1863; Mr. Bennett, March 18, 1863.

No. 117.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 27.)

My Lord, Temple, March 27, 1863.

SIAM.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that, with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 22nd April, 1859, upon a despatch from Sir R. Schomburgk, Her Majesty's Consul at Siam, respecting certain local regulations for the port of Bangkok which had been issued and enforced by the British Consul, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that, in conformity with the recommendations contained in that Report, Sir R. Schomburgk was instructed to prepare a revised Code of Regulations for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects being within the kingdom of Siam.

Sir R. Schomburgk accordingly prepared a draft of such Rules and Regulations; and he also submitted for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government a draft of further Rules and Regulations, referring solely to the masters of ships and their crews while in harbour at Bangkok.

That these draft Rules were sent home by Sir R. Schomburgk in a despatch dated the 6th of November, 1860 (No. 42), but he requested that Her Majesty's Government would defer their sanction of them until the King of Siam should have settled certain Rules and Regulations for the government of the inhabitants of Bangkok, which were understood to be then under His Majesty's consideration.

That these last-named Rules and Regulations being, however, now in operation, it appears to your Lordship that it would be desirable that the sanction, or otherwise, of Her Majesty's Government to the Rules and Regulations prepared by Sir R. Schomburgk should now be conveyed to him; and Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Sir R. Schomburgk (No. 40, November 8, 1861), transmitting the "Bangkok Calendar" for 1861, containing the Rules and Regulations issued by the King of Siam; and a letter from the Board of Trade, of the 30th of January, 1861, conveying the opinion of that Board on the Regulations proposed by Sir R. Schomburgk for the guidance of British merchant captains visiting the port of Bangkok; and Mr. Hammond was to add that the Treaty with Siam, the Order of Her Majesty in Council, and the Act of Parliament afterwards passed to confirm the Order in Council, would be found at pages 557, 577, and 979 of the 10th volume of Hertslet's Commercial Treaties.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, inclosing to us the Report of the Law Officers of the 22nd of April, 1859, mentioned and referred to in his former letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the Rules and Regulations submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the Board of Trade in thinking that the 7th and 9th Articles of the second set of Regulations require amendment in those respects which are pointed out by their Lordships.

We also think both sets of Regulations require verbal amendments in the manner noted by us in the margin and the body of the Rules.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 118.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 27.)

My Lord, Temple, March 27, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 180, February 24th), respecting a Bill now before Congress for authorizing the United States' Government to issue letters of marque; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

1863

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th March instant, stating that with reference to the papers transmitted in his letter of the 21st March instant, respecting the Bill recently passed in the United States empowering the President to issue letters of marque, he was directed to state to us that the American Minister in this country, in reply to some observations made by your Lordship, has stated that although the law had passed, the President had not yet issued letters of marque, nor decided upon doing so; and further that privateers would not interfere with neutral commerce, nor with the laws of blockade, but would be employed in seeking and capturing, if possible, such vessels as the "Alabama" and "Oreto." But that your Lordship will nevertheless instruct Lord Lyons, if the President should decide on issuing letters of marque, to ascertain from Mr. Seward whether in any case they will be authorized to interfere with neutral commerce, and if in any case, in what cases and to what extent; but that as it is desirable that no time should be lost in instructing Her Majesty's naval officers as to the course they should pursue in the event of privateers interfering with neutral commerce, he was to request that we would draw up a memorandum on this subject for the information and guidance of Her Majesty's naval officers employed on the American Station.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 24th and 26th March instant, authorizing us to call in the Admiralty Advocate, the Queen's Proctor, and the Admiralty Proctor, to aid in the investigation of precedents bearing on this question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it will be observed that the instructions which are annexed to this Report are confined to ordinary cases such as have arisen in previous wars; if it should be thought necessary to take any measures for the purpose of protecting mail packets from improper molestation by privateers, that subject will require further and careful consideration.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
TRAVERS TWISS.

Inclosure in No. 118.

Instructions.

NO vessel owned by private persons is entitled to cruize and capture ships on the high seas, unless she is furnished with a letter of marque and reprisal, or with a commission of war.

A private vessel, therefore, without such letters of marque or commission, cannot exercise any of the belligerent rights of visit, search, detention, or capture.

Neither the letter of marque and reprisal, nor the commission of war, one of which ought to be on board of every private ship exercising any belligerent right on the high seas, usually contains any express mention of neutral vessels, but only authorizes the commander by name of each private ship to seize and take all ships, vessels, and goods, belonging to the enemy not being within cannon-shot of the shores of a friendly State. But it is competent to a private ship of war, furnished with letters of marque or a commission of war, to capture neutral vessels carrying contraband of war, or violating a blockade.

Any ship belonging to Her Majesty's navy, if it see a British merchant-ship captured by or in tow of a ship wearing a privateer jack of the United States, may send an officer on board to ascertain the fact that such private ship has letters of marque or a commission of war on board, and if that fact be duly verified, must refrain from any further interference.

Such is the general law, for a private ship is not exempt from the obligation of submitting to have its letters of marque or commission of war verified.

If the private ship, which is the captor, have no such letters of marque or commission on board, it will be the duty of any of Her Majesty's ships to cause the said British merchant-ship to be set free, and, if necessary, to use force for the attainment of that object.

It will also be the duty of Her Majesty's ships to ascertain the name of such private ship, and any circumstances which tend to identify her as the wrong-doer, and to make a report thereupon to Her Majesty's Government.

If the letters of marque or commission of war should assume the novel form of being confined to the capture of any ship or class of ships, specifically mentioned or described, such as the "Alabama," "Oreto," or similar vessels in such a case, the seizure of any British merchant-vessels by such private ships of war bearing such limited letters of marque or commission would be unlawful, and it would be the duty of Her Majesty's ships to cause such British merchant-vessels to be immediately set free.

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.
T. T.

No. 119.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 30.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

Temple, March 30, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a further correspondence with Mr. Adams,† respecting the intercepted correspondence which he had laid laid before Her Majesty's Government, as going to show a deliberate attempt to establish within the limits of this kingdom a system of action in direct hostility to the Government of the United States, such further correspondence, consisting of a letter addressed to Mr. Adams on the 9th instant, in conformity with the opinion set forth in our Report of the 2nd instant,‡ and a letter which has been received from Mr. Adams in reply.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this further correspondence into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the further correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Adams does not controvert the principal positions contained in your Lordship's letter, founded upon the Report which we had the honour to make to your Lordship on the 2nd of this month.

Mr. Adams does not deny, first, that it is lawful for Her Majesty's subjects to lend money on securities or otherwise to either belligerent; secondly, that it is also lawful to sell to either belligerent munitions of war.

It was not later than the 20th November last year that, in answer to the remonstrances of Mexico against the alleged organized system in the United States of aiding France in the war, in which the United States were neutral, Mr. Seward replied by this, among other citations (Mr. Webster to Mr. Thompson), "As to advances, loans, or donations of money to the Government of Texas or its citizens, the Mexican Government hardly needs to be informed that there is nothing unlawful in this, so long as Texas is at peace with the United States, and that these are things which no Government undertakes to restrain." (Page 4, Ex. Doc. 37 to Congress.)

Mr. Adams is, of course, perfectly aware that many decisions of tribunals in the United States fully establish that a like exposition of the law as to

---

* Mr. Adams, February 9; Law Officers, March 2.

† To Mr. Adams, March 9; Mr. Adams, March 14.

‡ Page 61.

1863

munitions of war, and the sale of armed vessels, has been always maintained in the United States when they are neutrals.

Mr. Adams does not state that the information which he communicated to your Lordship as to alleged contracts for constructing war steamers, or the proposed establishment of naval officers to superintend them, would be sufficient to found a criminal prosecution in the United States. Mr. Adams must, we think, be aware that it would not suffice for this purpose. There is therefore no reason why he should complain of your Lordship's statement that the information which he has furnished does not suffice for the like purpose in England.

Mr. Adams is not ignorant that agents have been employed, and munitions of war have been purchased, and even Her Majesty's subjects recruited, for the purpose of aiding the United States against the so-called Confederate States; and so far it might be urged by this, as well as by the other belligerent, as it was substantially urged last year by Mexico against the United States, in vague and popular language, that there is evidence "of a deliberate attempt to establish within the limits of this kingdom a system of action in direct hostility to their Government;" but the question really is, has there been any act done in England both contrary to the obligations of neutrality as recognized both by Great Britain and the United States, and capable of being made the subject of a criminal prosecution? We can only repeat our opinion that no such act is specified in the remonstrance of Mr. Adams.

It may, at the same time, be proper that Mr. Adams should be informed that Her Majesty's Government will, in consequence of the statements contained in the intercepted correspondence, give instructions to the Custom-house authorities of the several British ports where ships of war may be constructed to direct their attention to the subject, and to endeavour to discover and obtain legal evidence of any violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, with a view to the strict enforcement of that statute, whenever it can really be shown to be infringed. And Mr. Adams may properly be invited to communicate to Her Majesty's Government, or to the local authorities at the several ports, any evidence of illegal acts which may become known to him from time to time.

We have referred generally to the judicial decisions of the United States. We think it may be useful to refer to two of these decisions, selected out of many on account of their bearing, both upon the general question and upon the special case of the sale of ships of war by the subjects of a neutral to a belligerent State.

The first decision is that of the eminent Judge Story, given, it may be well to observe, in a case in which the recognition of the Spanish-American Republics was directly concerned. After admitting that the capture had been made by an United States' ship, built in the United States, originally owned in the United States, he proceeds to say, "The question as to the original illegal armament and outfit of the 'Independence' may be dismissed in a few words. It is apparent that, though equipped as a vessel of war, she was sent out to Buenos Ayres on a commercial adventure, contraband indeed, but in no shape violating our laws or our national neutrality. If captured by a Spanish ship-of-war during the voyage, she would have been justly condemnable as good prize for being engaged in a traffic prohibited by the laws of nations. But there is nothing in our laws or in the laws of nations that forbids our citizens from sending armed vessels, as well as munitions of war, to foreign ports for sale. It is a commercial adventure which no nation is bound to prohibit, and which only exposes the persons engaged in it to the penalty of confiscation." (5 Curtis' Rep., 373-5.)

This is a case illustrating the law and practice of the United States while neutral in the war between Spain and her Colonies.

The next case (historically the first) illustrates also their law and practice while neutral in the war between Great Britain and France. It is so short that we cite it verbatim and at length*:—"The allegation in this case, as supported by the evidence, was that the privateer which took the British prize in question had been built in New York, with the express view of being employed as a privateer in case the then existing controversy between Great Britain and the United States should terminate in war; that some of her equipments were calculated for war, though they were also frequently used for merchant-ships; that the privateer was sent to Charleston, where she was sold to a French citizen; that she was carried by him to a French island, where she was completely armed and equipped, and furnished with a commission; that she afterwards sailed on a cruize, during which the prize was taken and sent into Charleston.

---

* "It is not a violation of the neutrality laws of the United States to sell to a foreigner a vessel built in this country, though suited to be a privateer, and having some equipments calculated for war, but frequently used by merchant-ships."

"Reed, for the plaintiff, in error, contended that this was an original construction or outfit of a vessel for the purpose of war; and that if it was tolerated as legal, it would be easy, by collusion, to subvert the neutrality of the United States, and involve the country in a war.

"The Court, however, without hearing the opposite Counsel, directed the Decree to be affirmed." (Moodie v. the ship "Alfred:" 5 Curtis's Reports, pp. 234, 235.)

It seems clear, on the principle of these authorities, that, except on the ground of any proved violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere with commercial dealings between British subjects and the Confederate States, whether the subject of those dealings be money, or contraband goods, or even ships adapted for warlike purposes.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 120.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 30, 1863.

United States.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th March instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 18th instant, he was directed to transmit to me a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 221 of the 10th March) inclosing a copy of a further note which has been addressed to his Lordship by Mr. Seward relative to the case of the "Elias Reid;" and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as I have had the honour already to report,* the map appended to the deposition of one of the witnesses appeared to me to indicate that the capture was made in British waters; that neither the master nor the other witness have, as I understand, denied in any part of their evidence that the capture was so made; whether they understood that it was competent to them to state in express terms in answer to the formal interrogatories that the vessel was seized in British waters, may, I think, be very doubtful.

It would rather seem from the last despatch of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons (5th March) that the United States' Government would listen to a statement made out of Court by Lord Lyons upon this subject, and, if so, I think his Lordship should be instructed to bring all the evidence on the subject of the place of the capture of the "Elias Reid" to the notice of Mr. Seward. If, on other hand, the owners of the "Elias Reid" prosecute an appeal to the Superior Court, I think, as I have already had the honour to report, that Her Majesty's Government should intervene, if, as I presume, the forms of the Court allow them to do so.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 121.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 30, 1863.

United States.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a despatch from the Governor of the Bahamas, covering a protest from David Owens Sabiston, master of the British schooner "Harkaway," against the detention of that vessel at Wilmington, in North Carolina: and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

---

* Page 85.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the principle of law involved in the consideration of this case is of very great importance.

There is no doubt that a purchase, founded on the due condemnation of a vessel by a competent Prize Court, confers a title, which, according to the first and most important principles of international law, all States are bound to recognize. The Confederate States would put in jeopardy their title to the rights of belligerents if they refused to be bound by this rule, which has obtained universal sanction.

I have the honour to advise that Her Majesty's Consul, at or near the place of the detention, should be instructed to demand the release of the "Harkaway" to the British owner who produces the title of purchase after a lawful condemnation in a proper Prize Court.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 122.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 30.)

United States.

Doctors' Commons, March 30, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Charleston (No. 24 of the 12th February) inclosing a copy of a letter addressed to him by Brigadier-General Jordan, announcing that it had been officially reported by the commanding officer at Fort Sumter that at the hour of 10·50 on the morning of the 12th of February no vessels of the United States' blockading force were to be seen off the bar of the harbour; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this circumstance into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the circumstance mentioned into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that there is nothing in the report of the commanding officer at Fort Sumter to warrant the inference that the blockade of Charleston is legally interrupted; on the other hand, the report of the Consul seems to me to affirm its continuance.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 123.

The Queen's Proctor to Mr. Layard.—(Received March 31.)

Brazil.

Doctors' Commons, March 30, 1863.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, returning me the case to be submitted for the arbitration of the King of the Belgians in the case of the "Forte," which had been approved by Earl Russell, and requesting that that document might be put into a printed form with as little delay as possible.

In reply I beg to state that I have had the same printed accordingly, and have now the honour to transmit twelve copies thereof.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. DYKE.

No. 124.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 31.)

United States.

Temple, March 31, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch (No. 31 of the 21st February) from Mr. H. Pinckney Walker, an American citizen, who, as British Vice-Consul at Charleston, assumed the charge of Her Majesty's Consulate on the departure of Mr. Consul Bunch, reporting further evasions of the blockade of that port, and of the port of Wilmington in North Carolina; and that he was directed to request that we would take Mr. Walker's despatch into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the statements in the despatch of Mr. H. Pinckney Walker, with respect to the occasional evasion of blockade of the port of Charleston, are not such as to warrant the conclusion that the blockade is not lawfully maintained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 125.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 31.)

United States.

Temple, March 31, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th of January* relative to the inducements held out to the seamen of the captured vessel "Sunbeam" to enter the service of the United States, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 184, February 24, 1863), inclosing copies of a note which he has addressed to, and of the reply which he has received from, Mr. Seward on this subject, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to state that your Lordship, after a further consideration of the communications of the 12th of November from Mr. Seward, is unable to alter the opinion with respect to that communication which your Lordship expressed to Lord Lyons, and which Lord Lyons conveyed to Mr. Seward in his note of the 19th February.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 126.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

China.

Temple, March 31, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Bruce, Her Majesty's Minister in China (No. 176, December 9, 1862), showing, with reference to the confiscation by the Chinese Custom-house, of sixty-three bales of silk, belonging to Messrs. Hanbury

---

* Page 23.

1863

and Co., the course he has pursued in cases of seizure and confiscation of goods, for evasion of duties.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the general course pursued by Mr. Bruce in cases of seizure and confiscation of goods for evasion of duties is right and proper, and that in the individual case of the seizure of the sixty-three bales of silk belonging to Messrs. Hanbury, Mr. Bruce formed a correct opinion upon the evidence, that neither restitution nor compensation can be demanded or required for the confiscation of the silk by the Chinese authorities.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 127.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

Temple, March 31, 1863.

My Lord,

CHINA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Attorney and Advocate-General of the 29th of August last,* addressed to the Clerk of the Council, in which it was suggested that there should be some understanding with Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn as to the conditions under which officers and men were to be engaged for service in the Chinese fleet, he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter (dated 2nd of March instant) from Mr. Lay, inclosing a book, intituled "The Regulations and Instructions for the Government of His Imperial Majesty's Naval Service," and was to request that we would take into our consideration the Agreement made with the officers and men, to be found in the commencement of the book, and to report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this Agreement into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the subject to which reference was made in the former Report was the possible participation of this Anglo-Chinese force, in atrocities perpetrated, in the course of hostilities, by the Chinese against the rebels.

But as the agreement made with the officers and men embodies the observance of all applicable rules of discipline, in force in Her Majesty's navy, and as the force is to be entirely under the command of British officers, the danger of any such participation appears to be guarded against.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 128.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

Temple, March 31, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th March, stating that with reference to the Report of the late Queen's Advocate of the 18th March, 1861, and to the Reports of the Law Officers of the 30th September and the 31st October, 1861,† on the question of the liability of British subjects to perform military service in the United States; to the Report of the Law Officers of the 19th of November last,‡ on the liability of British subjects to the conscription in the Confederate States; and lastly, to the separate Reports of the Attorney and Solicitor-General, and the Queen's

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 210.

† Ibid., 1861, pages 52, 231, and 261.

‡ Ibid., 1862, page 283.

Advocate, of the 31st of January,* on the liability to military service in the United States of British subjects who have exercised the elective franchise; he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 179, February 24th), respecting a Bill now before Congress for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes.

Her Majesty's Minister observes that the exemptions from liability to service are extremely few; that they do not even include clergymen or members of Congress; and that persons of foreign birth who have declared on oath their intention to become citizens of the United States, are expressly declared by the First Article to be liable to military service. Her Majesty's Minister states that applications have been actually made to him by British subjects who are likely to be affected by this Bill, and he requests instructions as to the course which he should take if it becomes law.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to what instructions should be addressed to Lord Lyons thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, for our information, a copy of the instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons on the 12th ultimo (No. 79), with reference to the liability to military service in the United States of British subjects who have received the elective franchise.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion it would be proper that Lord Lyons should receive instructions to the effect that Her Majesty's Government consider that Her Majesty's subjects who have simply declared on oath their intention to become at a future time citizens of the United States, and who have not as yet exercised the right of suffrage or any other political franchise in consequence of such declaration, ought to be allowed a reasonable period after the passing of the Act in question, to exercise their option whether they will leave the United States or continue resident there upon the condition of liability to military service under this Conscription Act. Not having actually renounced their allegiance to their own Sovereign, and not having been admitted to any political franchise in the United States upon the faith of an engagement to do so, they are clearly not bound by a mere prospective declaration, which by itself was incapable of producing, and did not produce, any change in their status or rights. And having been permitted to reside in the United States as foreigners, not liable to compulsory military service, it would now be a breach of faith towards them, and at variance with the comity of nations, to compel them to serve in a war in which their Sovereign is neutral, without at least giving them the opportunity (if they should prefer that alternative) of leaving the country.

We do not think it is possible to admit that the grant of passports to persons so situated will make any difference in the case. It is not the offer of some compensation or equivalent which can justify the Government of the United States in imposing, without fair notice, upon foreigners, who desire to abide by their present allegiance, obligations properly incumbent upon those only who owe a permanent allegiance to the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 129.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

Doctors' Commons, March 31, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 23rd March instant, and its inclosure, from Messrs. Cox and Baker, the owners of the brigantine "Magicienne" and her cargo, requesting that Her Majesty's Government will address to the United

---

* Pages 37 and 39.

1863

States' Government a representation respecting the seizure of that vessel by the United States' cruizer "Onward," and will claim ample compensation for the damages they have thereby sustained.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit a despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Consul at New York on this case, and was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That as far as I can form an opinion on the papers before me, the capture of this vessel appears to have been an entirely unjustifiable act on the part of the United States' captor.

I think that unless other circumstances appear, Lord Lyons should be instructed to demand the immediate release of the vessel.

Her destination is that of her accustomed trade; her cargo is not contraband; her papers are regular; she is not attempting to break any blockade.

She is entitled, as I am at present advised, to be released, with the costs and damages incident to her unlawful detention.

Lord Lyons might not improperly urge upon the United States' Government that the seizure of a neutral vessel in such strong circumstances of primâ facie innocence is really not compensated by costs and damages awarded in a Prize Court; and that the habit of United States' captors of seizing vessels on the chance that something may possibly be discovered ex post facto which will prevent their condemnation in damages, renders the practical fulfilment of the obligations of a neutral State to respect the abstract rights of the belligerent a task of daily increasing difficulty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—I had written the above Report before the receipt of Mr. Hammond's second letter (dated the 30th instant), containing further papers in this case; and I have thought it best to add, by way of postscript, my Report on the additional papers.

They appear to me to strengthen the justice of the demand for the compensation for the illegal seizure, for which it is clear there was never any plausible excuse.

With respect to the mails seized on board this vessel, and the taking away of the seamen of the "Magicienne," I think on both subjects instructions should be sent to Lord Lyons.

Probably his Lordship would be able to obtain from the United States' Government an amicable arrangement upon the former point, to the effect that mails of a bonâ fide character may be immediately forwarded to their destination, while the lawfulness of the capture of the merchant-ship which carried them is still undetermined.

The concession, however, must, I think, be a matter of grace on the part of the United States' Government, as the strict jus belli would warrant them in detaining and examining the letters.

As to the taking away of the seamen: according to the usual practice, three of the crew are examined on interrogatories, when a ship is captured. I do not understand why the rest of the crew were taken away, and, as appears to have been the case, sent to Boston, while the ship and three men were sent to Key West.

I think Lord Lyons should be instructed to refer to this fact as one of the many hardships incident to this most unjust seizure; as also to the consumption of the provisions and stores of the "Magicienne" by the "Onward's" crew.

The justice of the case calls for speedy compensation from the United States' Government.

P.S. (second.)—The Report of the United States' District Attorney (dated Key West, February 28, 1863), contained in Mr. Hammond's letter of this date, will, I presume, induce the United States' Government to grant without delay the compensation demanded.

R. J. P.

April 1, 1863.

No. 130.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

Temple, March 31, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th of October last,* respecting the case of Mr. Shaver, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the instruction addressed to Mr. Stuart,† in conformity with our Report, directing him to inform the United States' Government that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the claim of Mr. Shaver for redress and compensation was fully established, and the despatches, as marked in the margin,‡ which have been received from Lord Lyons in reply.

Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and more particularly the note of Mr. Seward of the 7th ultimo (inclosed in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 142 of the 10th ultimo), in which he maintains the position hitherto assumed by the United States' Government in the case of Mr. Shaver, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to modify our former opinion as to the injustice of the incarceration of Mr. Shaver, and as to his claim for compensation.

It is admitted by Mr. Seward that he is a British subject, and we retain our opinion that his legal domicil at the time of his arrest was in Canada.

It is alleged that he was resident in the United States, and being reasonably suspected of treasonable practices was properly imprisoned. That the suspicions were ill-founded may, we think, be assumed from the fact and circumstances of his release.

But upon what basis did they originally rest?

We can find nothing worthy of the name in the despatch of Mr. Seward (February 7th) to Lord Lyons.

No Court of Justice would rely upon the evidence of Thompson for the reasons stated in our last Report.

It is urged that the occupation, in itself lawful, of Mr. Shaver, was such as, if he had been so-minded, would have enabled him to be guilty of treason; but surely the conclusion that he was guilty of treason is very distant from this premises.

The deposition stated to have been made by Noyes does not (even if accepted as true) show that Mr. Shaver ever entertained, or professed to entertain, the intention of visiting any part of the Confederate States without a proper pass from the United States' authorities. Mr. Seward, indeed, infers that he was preparing to do so "without the consent of the United States' authorities." But in the deposition itself, as stated by him, we have failed to discover any foundation for such a surmise. The other deposition, said to have been made by Albert Davis, is open to the gravest suspicion; he was himself, or (on his own showing) professed to be, an active agent of the Southern Confederacy; and the language which he puts into the mouth of Shaver is incredible, and bears upon it the stamp of a fabrication to suit the wishes of those who examined him: at all events, his uncorroborated evidence is not to be relied upon.

Mr. Shaver has had no opportunity of confronting either of these persons; it does not appear that their statements constituted the original ground of his arrest; and full copies of their depositions are not even now given.

Then in what way are the statements of Davis corroborated?

It is said that Shaver had trunks; of their contents (apart from what Shaver himself says, that they contained railway tickets) there is no evidence whatever: that these trunks were heavy when going south, and light when coming north; from this averment the conclusion is drawn that they must have contained treasonable correspondence.

The affidavits upon which this statement, such as it is, is made, are lost.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 251.

† To Mr. Stuart, No. 163, October 23, 1862.

‡ Lord Lyons, No. 5; No. 3; Private, January 3, 1863; No. 19, January 7, 1863; Nos. 142 and 143, February 10, 1863.

1863

It is clear that no conviction could have been obtained in any Court of Justice upon such evidence as this.

It seems to us also clear that it was wholly insufficient to justify his arrest and imprisonment.

We are still of opinion that Mr. Shaver is entitled to compensation at the hands of the United States' Government; and that if such compensation should still be refused, the claim should be kept alive by proper means on behalf of Her Majesty's Government; reserving to them (if it should not be thought expedient to press for immediate satisfaction now) the right to do so at any future period.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 131.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 1, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th March ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. David Hawkes Broderick, dated the 26th March ultimo, requesting that Her Majesty's Government will instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Washington to make certain inquiries of the American Government with regard to a property in which Mr. Broderick is interested, and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether it is a matter in which Her Majesty's Government should interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there appears to me no adequate reason why Her Majesty's Government should interfere in this matter. Mr. Broderick must take the same steps as any other individual to bring his private claims, in the proper manner, before the proper Court in the United States. It might be suggested that probably Mr. Broderick would do well to place himself again in communication with the United States' Consul in London; but that Her Majesty's Government must decline referring a matter of this description to Lord Lyons.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 132.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

My Lord, Temple, April 1, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th March, stating that we are already acquainted with the questions which have arisen in regard to trade with Matamoros, more especially in the case of the "Labuan."

Mr. Hammond was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us letters from parties interested as owners either of the vessel or of the cargo,* relating to the capture of the British vessel "Peterhoff" off the Island of St. Thomas on her voyage from this couuntry to the Mexican port of Matamoros.

Mr. Hammond was also to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Gourley,† requesting to be informed in regard to the right of British vessels to trade with Matamoros, and a letter from "Lloyds" raising generally the question of the assumption of the United States' cruizers to interfere with and capture British vessels, specifying among those captured the "Peterhoff," "Springbok," and "Magicienne" (the last two of which cases we have had already before us), on their voyages to neutral ports.

That this question is a very important one, and deserves the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government; and your Lordship requested, that in considering the specific case of the "Peterhoff," we would also consider the points raised in the other letters inclosed, and report to your Lordship at our earliest convenience what course Her Majesty's Government should pursue for the protection of British commerce, and for obtaining redress, if it should be improperly interfered with.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter dated the 27th ultimo, transmitting to us a further letter from Mr. Spence, inclosing documents, respecting the capture of the "Peterhoff."

Also of a further letter from Mr. Hammond dated the 28th ultimo, transmitting a further letter from Mr. Spence respecting the case of the "Peterhoff," inclosing a Liverpool newspaper containing a Report respecting the decision of the Judge of the Admiralty Court at Key West, in the case of the "Adela."

Also of Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, transmitting to us a further letter from Mr. Spence respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken all these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that it would be proper for your Lordship to reply to the letters of the persons complaining of the detention and capture of these vessels as follows:—

That the Government of the United States has clearly no right to seize British vessels, bonâ fide bound from this country, or from any other British possession, to the ports of Vera Cruz and Matamoros, or either of them, or vice versâ, unless such vessels attempt to touch at or have an intermediate or contingent destination to some blockaded port or place, or are carriers of contraband of war destined for the Confederate States; and that, in any admitted case of such unlawful capture, Her Majesty's Government would feel it their duty promptly to interfere, with a view to obtain the immediate restitution of the ship and cargo, with full compensation, and without the delay of proceedings in a Prize Court.

That Her Majesty's Government, however, cannot, without violating the rules of international law, claim for British vessels navigating between Great Britain and these places any general exemption from the belligerent right of visitation by the cruizers of the United States, nor can they proceed upon any general assumption that such vessels may not so act as to render their capture lawful and justifiable. Nothing is more common than for those who contemplate a breach of blockade, or the carriage of contraband, to disguise their purpose by a simulated destination and by deceptive papers; and the situation of the ports on the coast of Mexico, with reference to the Confederate States, is such as to make it not only possible, but (in many case) probable, that an ostensible Mexican destination would be resorted to as a cover for objects which would really justify capture. It has already happened, in many cases, that British vessels have been seized while engaged in voyages apparently lawful, which have have been afterwards proved in the Prize Courts to have been really guilty of endeavouring to break the blockade, or of carrying contraband to the Confederates.

It is the right of the belligerent to capture all vessels reasonably suspected of either of these transgressions of international law; and whenever any such cause of capture is alleged, the case cannot be withdrawn from the consideration of the Prize Court of the captor. After the case has undergone investigation, it is the duty of the Prize Court to restore any such prizes unlawfully made, with costs and damages; and the proper time for the interference of Her Majesty's Government is (in general), when the Prize Court shall have refused redress for a capture, which the evidence shows to have been unjustifiable.

That Her Majesty's Government cannot, upon ex parte statements, deny the belligerents in this war the exercise of those rights which in all wars in which Great Britain has been concerned she has claimed to exercise herself.

That before forming any opinion as to the Judgment stated to have been given in the case of the "Adela," it will be necessary for Her Majesty's Government to be furnished with a correct report of that Judgment; it being impossible to rely on the general representation of its effect, contained in a newspaper

---

* Mr. Harding, March 26; Mr. Spence, March 26.

† Mr. Gourley, March 26.

1863

paragraph founded on private letters,—especially as none of the other Judgments of the United States' Prize Courts which have been reported to Her Majesty's Government during the present war evince any manifest disregard of the established principles of law.

That in the particular case of the "Peterhoff," Her Majesty's Government, having taken into consideration the papers transmitted by her owners, and being satisfied that those documents disclose no primâ facie ground of capture, and that there is every reason to believe the voyage to have been lawful and bonâ fide, and the seizure of the vessel wholly unjustifiable, will instruct Lord Lyons to make an immediate representation of the circumstances of the case to the Government of Washington; and if no legal ground of capture should be alleged, then to press for the release of the vessel with compensation, and without the delay of proceedings in the Prize Court. But if any legal ground of capture should be alleged, this case, like all others, must unavoidably follow the ordinary course.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—The papers since transmitted to us in Mr. Hammond's second letter of the 31st ultimo do not appear to call for any further expression of opinion; but that as regards the "Adela" we are still without any authentic report of the Judgment. We think it would be important to possess such a report for various reasons; and we should be glad if your Lordship would give instructions that it should be obtained and sent to this country.

April 1, 1863.

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 133.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received April 2.)

Russia.

Temple, April 2, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our letter of the 26th of January last,* respecting the liability to stamp duty in this country of certain bonds of the Russian loan of the 1st of May last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further note, dated the 5th March ultimo, from Baron Brunnow, the Russian Minister at this Court, stating, in reply to a request that he would inform your Lordship of the date of the signature of the bonds in question, that he was unable to give this information, as the bonds were stamped and not signed, but that they were inscribed in the Great Book of the Public Debt on the $\frac{\text{19th April}}{\text{1st May}}$, 1862; and to request that we would take this paper into our consideration, together with the former correspondence on this subject, inclosed therewith, and that we would inform your Lordship what answer should, in our opinion, be returned to Baron Brunnow.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the reason assigned by Baron Brunnow for its being "impossible to indicate the date of the signature of the bonds," viz., "because the signature (being that of a Director of the Commission d'Amortissement) had been impressed on the bonds by means of a stamp," does not seem to us to be very satisfactory. We should have supposed that some record would be preserved in the office of the Russian Government entrusted with the duty of stamping and issuing these bonds of the dates at which they were stamped; and as Baron Brunnow appears to make a distinction between stamping and signing, and does not say expressly that the date of stamping cannot be ascertained, we should advise that his Excellency should be requested to inform Her Majesty's Government whether they are to understand that no means exist of ascertaining when the stamp, in lieu of the signature, was affixed to the bonds, as this would be (for the purpose in view) the date of signature. And also whether the Russian Government are to be understood as representing that, according to the ordinary course of the office from which the bonds were issued, the stamp, in lieu of signature, would be impressed upon them before the debts thereby secured were inscribed in the Great Book of the Public Debt at St. Petersburgh (which was done, as his Excellency states, on the 1st of May).

In the event of no satisfactory further information being elicited by these inquiries, the practical point for Her Majesty's Government to consider will be, whether they ought to take advantage of the change in the onus probandi which, according to our former opinion, may have been produced by the actual payment of the duty to the Stamp Office. On this point we observe that Baron Brunnow refers to the payment as made, sous protêt; and if the payment was made on the faith that it should not prejudice the question, of course no advantage can be taken of it. This renders it material to ascertain when the communication referred to in the following passage of the letter of the Board of Inland Revenue of the 11th of December last took place, "Messrs. Rothschild having intimated the possibility of their raising the question before a Court of Law, or of applying to your Lordships, we gave them an assurance that, in the event of a decision adverse to our views, the amount of the stamp duty should be repaid to them." We assumed that this took place after the payment; but if it was before, then we think that the case should be dealt with as if the burden now lay upon Her Majesty's Government to establish, affirmatively, the liability of the bonds to duty, which, we think, they would fail to do unless they could produce some evidence from which it ought reasonably to be inferred, as a conclusion of fact, that they were actually signed after the 3rd of June, 1862.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.

---

[*] Page 33.

No. 134.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 2.)

United States.

Temple, April 2, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, as marked in the margin* respecting the arrest at New York and the imprisonment in Fort Lafayette of Mr. Thomas Potts, the Supercargo and Master of the "Hiawatha," a vessel which was captured for breach of blockade shortly after the breaking out of the war in the United States, and formed the subject of the Report of Her Majesty's late Advocate-General of the 31st of October, 1861,† and of his previous Reports therein referred to.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the case of Mr. Potts into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo respecting this case, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Potts, which had been forwarded to your Lordship by Mr. Horsfall, M.P., and was to request that we would take the same into consideration, together with the other papers before sent to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there can be no doubt that Mr. Potts was imprisoned in the first instance without due process of law by the Marshal, and that he ought to have been duly proceeded against either in a Criminal or Civil Court of Justice.

It is, moreover, difficult to understand how the offence of Mr. Potts could have been justly regarded as a military offence, subjecting him to arbitrary imprisonment by order of the Secretary of War.

Mr. Potts had certainly a right to make his defence in a Court of Law against the charges upon the imputation of which he was, without any opportunity of exercising this right, imprisoned for several months.

---

[*] Colonial Office, February 23, 1863; to Colonial Office, March 12, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 127, March 12, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 189, March 1, 1863.

[†] See Reports for 1861, page 262.

1863

His treatment, also, while in prison (if his own account of it can be relied upon), and the obstacles interposed to his communicating by letter with Her Majesty's Diplomatic Agents in the United States, might, if his case had been meritorious in other respects, have furnished just ground for remonstrance.

The question, however, remains, whether the evidence before us, including that of Mr. Potts himself, does not show such gross misconduct on the part of that person as to disentitle him to any official interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We are of opinion that the evidence does disclose such a case. Mr. Potts has clearly been guilty (to put his offence at the lowest) of a shameful fraud and breach of faith, by taking advantage (as he did, even on his own admission) of an indulgence afforded to him by the liberalty of the United States' Marshal, while the case of the "Hiawatha" was under adjudication, to ship off part of the cargo of that vessel to Liverpool.

The consequences of this unjustifiable act have probably been very prejudicial to the interests of others of Her Majesty's subjects in the United States; and Mr. Potts has been disingenuous and untruthful in his statements on the subject to Mr. Gordon and Lord Lyons.

We observe that Mr. Potts now represents his imprisonment as originally due to his arrest by the United States' Marshal, "upon a charge which he himself withdrew." We find, however, in the papers no trace of any withdrawal of the original charge (i. e., the charge of a fraudulent abstraction of part of the cargo of the "Hiawatha," while the case was before the Prize Court); and as that charge was manifestly well-founded, it seems to us impossible that it should have been withdrawn by the United States' Marshal. And there seems no reason to doubt that, although Mr. Potts was only detained for fifteen days, in the first instance, on the Marshal's authority, his subsequent imprisonment, under the order of the United States' Secretary for War, was still due to the same cause.

It is probable that the value of the property fraudulently abstracted by Mr. Potts may have been equal to any claim for compensation which might otherwise have been substantiated on his behalf; and also that his imprisonment, though arbitrary, and without any process of law, was not longer nor more severe than that which might have been legally inflicted upon him in a United States' Court of Justice.

On the whole, we do not advise your Lordship to instruct Lord Lyons to demand compensation from the Government of the United States for the imprisonment of Mr. Potts.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 135.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 4.)

My Lord, Temple, April 4, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Adams, dated the 30th March ultimo, inclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. Dudley, the United States' Consul at Liverpool, together with a number of depositions taken before the Collector at Liverpool, going to show that a steamer called the "Alexandra," is being fitted out at that port for the purpose of carrying on war against the United States.

Mr. Adams also submitted for your Lordship's consideration another note from Mr. Dudley, transmitting copies of certain papers which Mr. Adams stated appear to prove quite conclusively the relation of certain persons in Liverpool, whose names appear therein, to the insurgent authorities of the United States.

Mr. Hammond also stated that your Lordship had lost no time in transmitting copies of the papers to the Treasury and the Home Office, with the request that the authorities at Liverpool might be instructed to adopt whatever steps can legally be taken in view of the circumstances thus brought to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take Mr. Adams' letter and its inclosures into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Adams' letter and its accompanying papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we regard this case as fairly raising an important question as to the true construction of the 7th section of the Foreign Enlistment Act, which we think it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government, on this opportunity (under all the circumstances of the case) to bring to trial.

The Solicitor of the Board of Customs has reported his opinion that "there does not appear to be any evidence to show that the 'Alexandra' is 'equipped, fitted out, or armed,' within the meaning of the Act." There is, however, in the deposition of John De Costa sufficient proof, if believed, of admissions by Mr. Miller, jun., one of the builders of the ship, and of statements made in his presence by Captain Tessier, that the "Alexandra" is being built "for the Southern Confederacy;" and that she is "being fitted up as a gun-boat, and is intended for and will be employed as such, in the service of the Confederate States."

The words of the Act are—"If any person shall equip, furnish, fit out, or arm, or attempt or endeavour to equip, furnish, fit out, or arm, or procure to be equipped, furnished, fitted out, or armed, or shall knowingly aid or assist, or be concerned in the equipping, furnishing, fitting out, or arming, of any ship or vessel, with intent or in order that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of any foreign Prince," &c., the penalties of the Act shall be incurred.

It is to be observed, that what is prohibited is the "fitting out," with the particular intent, and that no specific mode of fitting out is pointed at. The intent constitutes the gist of the offence; and any fitting out, with the illegal intent, would appear to be illegal.

Then the question is, whether the evidence above referred to is not, in itself (if credited), enough to show a "fitting out," with the prohibited intent? We are not aware of any decision upon the construction of this section of the statute which can rule that question; and it seems to us to be one which Her Majesty's Government ought not to assume in the negative without a trial, when the intent (as in this case) is shown by sufficient primâ facie evidence.

Independently of this view, there remains a further question, whether the character of the construction and fitting up of the "Alexandra," as described in the depositions of O. R. Mumford and others, is not within the fair meaning of the words of the statute, supposing that any particular kind of fitting out ought to be proved. This also appears to us to be a question which, when the intent (as in this case) sufficiently appears, ought not to be assumed in the negative by Her Majesty's Government without a trial. On this point there is also an absence of English judicial authority; but we infer from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in "The United States v. Quincy" (6 Peter's Supreme Court Cases, pp. 448, 449, 450, 465, 466), that a similar question would probably be resolved by that Court in the affirmative, if it were to arise upon the construction of the corresponding statute of the United States.

It is clear that, within the meaning of the Act, there may be a "fitting out," without "arming;" and properly, each expression "equipment," "furnishing," "fitting out," "arming," ought to be construed as capable of a distinct meaning.

Upon these grounds, we advise Her Majesty's Government to act upon the representations made to them, and the evidence furnished by Mr. Adams; and to direct the "Alexandra" to be seized under the Foreign Enlistment Act.

At the same time that we advise the adoption of this course, we must observe that no slight responsibility will be thereby incurred on the part of Her Majesty's Government; with whom the further conduct of the case, both as regards its legal bearings, and the evidence necessary, unless satisfactorily answered, to secure a judgment of forfeiture, will exclusively rest. The seizure will have to be promptly followed by the filing of an information, at the suit of the Attorney-General, in the Court of Exchequer. In that proceeding it will be necessary to allege the material facts of fitting out, &c., with the intent to cruize and make war against the United States' Government and people. Such facts, it may be expected, will be put in issue by persons claiming to be interested in the ship, as owners or otherwise; and the burden of establishing these facts by legal evidence (as contradistinguished from rumour and hearsay) will rest on the Crown. Such being the case, we think that the case for the Crown ought to be strengthened by all the evidence, in corroboration of that on which our present advice is founded, which can be obtained; and that no time should be lost in instructing some competent person on the spot, as the agent of the Government, to ascertain, by diligent and searching inquiry, which of the matters of fact (besides the conversations or admissions to which we have already referred) are capable of being satisfactorily established. Many of these, it appears to us, must come under this description.

We refer, particularly, to the building of the "Oreto" by Miller and Sons, and of the "Alabama" by Messrs. Laird, at Liverpool and Birkenhead; the departure of each of those vessels, without an avowed belligerent destination; the employment of each of them, under the Confederate flag, in the conduct of hostilities against the United States; that Captain Bullock is an officer in the Confederate service, and has acted as such, and superintended the building of those vessels, and that the same Captain Bullock has interfered in the way of superintendence or otherwise in the building of the "Alexandra;" that Captain Tessier commanded the "Bahama," which took out the Captain (Semmes) and part of the crew of the "Alabama," the same Captain Tessier (as is sworn to distinctly) having interfered and given orders with reference to the construction of the "Alexandra."

The great object, it will be understood, of the proofs, thus particularized, will be to connect the "Alexandra" with the Confederate service, through persons shown, by facts, to have acted on former occasions as the Agents of the Confederate Government, and shown also to have interfered in the construction of the "Alexandra." Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm, and Co. are described by the United States' Consul as being agents for the Confederate States; and it is also alleged that those persons supply means for the building of the "Alexandra."

These facts, if proved, would, of course, have a most important bearing upon the case for the Crown; and, in the absenee of proof of the former fact of agency, the proved interference of Mr. Welsman in the building of the "Alexandra," and the list of the persons present at the launch, are of little or no moment. Efforts should, therefore, be made to establish these matters by legal proof, such as Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm, and Co. having acted as such agents with reference to former vessels or otherwise, or having held themselves out, publicly, as being clothed with the character of agents, and the like.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 136.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 5.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 5, 1863.

TURKEY.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th of March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to our Report of the 12th December last, the draft of an Order in Council regulating the exercise of jurisdiction over native Indian subjects in the Ottoman dominions. That this draft has been privately submitted to the India Office, and that we should find in the margin of it the observations which it has elicited, written in red ink. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose an explanatory private letter from Mr. Merivale, the Under-Secretary of State in the India Office; and to request that we would take this draft into consideration, with reference to the Capitulations between Great Britain and Turkey, the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, and the Order in Council of January 9, 1863, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the manner in which it should be definitively framed, so as to meet, as far as possible, the views of the India Office, as expressed in their previous letters and in that of Mr. Merivale. The former papers were also inclosed.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the draft of this Order in Council is proper as it now stands, with the exception of the last paragraph but two, which relates to the trial of criminal offences committed by native Indians in Turkey. We are disposed to agree with the view taken by the India Office on this subject, and to think it expedient that native Indians who have not chosen to register themselves should not be exempt from the criminal jurisdiction of the Turkish authorities. We think that no British subject, accused of a criminal offence, should be sent for trial to Bombay without a full and careful statement of the case from the proper Consular authority. But we also think that the duty of making such a statement should form the subject of a circular addressed to the Consular authorities, accompanying the Order in Council, and not of a clause in the Order itself.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 137.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

My Lord, Temple, April 6, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd ultimo,† respecting the case of the steamer "Gibraltar," or "Sumter," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, the draft of a letter which was addressed to Mr. Adams on the 9th ultimo, stating that in the present state of their information on the subject Her Majesty's Government were unable to assume that that vessel had not been legally and bonâ fide sold to a British owner for commercial purposes, and a letter dated the 14th March ultimo, which has been received from Mr. Adams in reply, remonstrating against this decision.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this further correspondence into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this further correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is very difficult to understand how Mr. Adams can have supposed that, in the passage in the work referred to, he has found any support for the propositions which he maintains, namely, that Her Majesty's Government are bound to consider both that the "Sumter" has been illegally sold, and that she has been sold for the purpose of being used in carrying on hostilities against the United States.

If Mr. Adams had considered that the passage referred to applies to the law administered by the Prize Court of a belligerent, and if Mr. Adams had cited the whole section, he would have escaped the error into which he has fallen.

The whole section is as follows:—

"In respect to the transfer of enemies' ships during war, it is certain that purchases of them by neutrals are not in general illegal; but such purchases are liable to great suspicion, and if good proof be not given of their validity by a bill of sale, and payment of a reasonable consideration, it will materially impair the

---

* To Sir H. Bulwer, No. 376; to Law Officers, September 3; Law Officers, September 22; to India Office, October 3; India Office, October 29; to Sir H. Bulwer, No. 475; India Office, November 9; to Law Officers, November 11; Law Officers, December 12; to India Office, December 18, 1862; India Office, February 11, 1863.

† Page 64.

1863

validity of the neutral claim; but if the purchase be made by an agent, his letters of procuration must be produced and proved; and if after such transfer the ship be employed habitually in the enemy's trade, or under the management of a hostile proprietor, the sale will be deemed merely colourable and collusive. But the right of purchase by neutrals extends only to merchant-ships of enemies, for the purchase of ships of war belonging to enemies is held to be invalid, and a sale of a merchant-ship made by an enemy to a neutral during war must be an absolute unconditional sale. Anything tending to continue the interest of the enemy in the ship vitiates a contract of this description altogether."—("Phillimore's Commentaries," vol. iii, sec. 486, pp. 607 and 608.)

Every proposition in this extract is founded on one of the Judgments (referred to in the notes) of Lord Stowell, while sitting as a Judge of the Prize Court when Great Britain was a belligerent.

The substance of the section is that a belligerent has a right to scrutinize vigilantly the transfer of an enemy's merchant-ship during war to a neutral; but that such transfer is not, if bonâ fide made, illegal; that a belligerent has a right to consider the sale or transfer of an enemy's ship of war to a neutral as absolutely illegal.

The latter of these propositions may possibly require some qualification; for Lord Stowell, in the Judgment on which it is founded, did not lay down so general a doctrine, but confined himself to the case of a sale to a neutral of an enemy's ship of war, while "rendered incapable of acting as a ship of war by the arms of the other belligerent, and driven into a neutral port for shelter."

But, be this as it may, from neither of these propositions has Her Majesty's Government in the present case expressed any dissent.

Her Majesty's Government have not said that it will not be competent to the Prize Court of the United States to come to the conclusion, upon proper evidence, and after a fair hearing, that the transfer of the "Sumter" was (as against the United States) either illegal, because it was not bonâ fide sold as a merchant-ship, or on grounds such as those on which Lord Stowell decided the case of the "Minerva"* already referred to. But the sale may be perfectly good by the laws of England, so as to give the English purchaser a valid title while within Her Majesty's dominions (assuming it to be a real, and not a fictitious transaction, as between the parties thereto), although it may possibly be one which, in the event of a subsequent capture on the high seas, might not be recognized as lawful according to the code of Prize Law administered in the Prize Court of the United States.

Her Majesty's Government have said that in the present state of their "information on the subject, they are unable to assnme that the ship lately called the 'Sumter' has not been legally and bonâ fide sold to a British owner for commercial purposes;" a proposition not only not at variance, but in perfect harmony with the passage in the work cited, or rather with the Judgments of Lord Stowell on which that passage is founded, so far as the passage is applicable to the case at all.

For the word "legally" in this passnge has reference to the ordinary law, as administered in the Civil Courts of Gibraltar and of England in time of peace; while, on the other hand, the term "unlawful," as used in the book cited by Mr. Adams, has reference to the law of prize, as administered in the Prize Court of a belligerent Power. No neutral Power ever undertakes to administer prize law in favour of either belligerent. The only question relative to the "Sumter" or "Gibraltar" is whether, Great Britain being neutral, Her Majesty's Proclamation be, or be not applicable to that vessel while in a British port.

It is only applicable to a belligerent's ship of war. There is no evidence that this vessel is now a belligerent's ship of war; but, on the contrary, strong primâ facie evidence that she has been sold for peaceful and commercial purposes to a British and neutral subject, and that, although formerly a ship of war, she has, in truth, entirely changed her character, and become, in every sense material for the present purpose, a merchant-ship.

Mr. Adams also says, "I have reason to believe that during the whole of the late war with Russia, Her Majesty's Government steadily refused to recognize the transfer of any vessels of that nation in neutral ports."

This is another error into which Mr. Adams has fallen. The Judge of the Prize Court during that war decided (as we mentioned in our Report of the 1st of January, 1863) "that the sale of a single ship from a belligerent to a neutral was lawful;" adding, "It matters not, generally speaking, where the ship was lying at the period of such a sale, provided she was not in transitu, nor lying in a blockaded port." ("The Baltica," Spink's Prize Cases, p. 271.)

---

* 6 Robinson, 399.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 138.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 6, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th March ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 211, March 6), inclosing a copy taken from a newspaper of an Act of Congress relating to habeas corpus, and regulating "judicial proceedings in certain cases," and to request that I would take this Act into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon, more especially with reference to the manner in which it may operate upon British subjects in the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That assuming the language of this statute to be correctly reported in the inclosed newspaper, the first section of this Statute confers upon the President the power of suspending the writ of habeas corpus with respect to all persons in the United States. This section includes, therefore, within its provisions not only natural subjects but foreigners commorant in the country. The second section provides for the release of "all persons citizens of States in which the administration of the laws has continued unimpaired in the Federal Courts." It is by no means certain how far the category of "citizens" in this Statute might be construed to extend. But the word "persons" is used in the subsequent portions of the section; and the release from imprisonment is to be granted to "no persons" who do not take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

It is therefore, I fear, at least doubtful whether the United States' Courts of Justice would at any time so construe the words of this Act as to limit them to naturalized or natural-born citizens of the United States; and it is impossible not to apprehend that at the present time, upon such a question, the minds of judges will be, consciously or unconsciously, swayed by political influences. Nor is it quite clear that if they did construe the Act as Mr. Seward anticipates, that decision would be respected by the military authorities. It seems to me, therefore, that Lord Lyons was well-founded in his remonstrance to Mr. Seward, and that the answer of Mr. Seward is far from satisfactory, inasmuch as it is clear that if the words objected to were not intended to apply to the case of foreigners, and if, nevertheless, the words were either such as possibly to render necessary (as Mr. Seward admits) hereafter a judicial decision respecting them, or such as to require an extraordinary exertion of the executive in favour of foreigners, the insertion of an explanatory clause was a precaution so simple, a remedy so certain, that the refusal to introduce it while there was an opportunity to do so is not easy to understand.

It appears to me desirable that the remonstrances and objections of Lord Lyons, and the answer and promises of Mr. Seward, should be embodied in a written memorandum, acknowledged by both parties to be a fair representation of what took place upon the occasion.

The necessity hereafter of a reference to this conversation between Lord Lyons and Mr. Seward is but too probable, and the inconvenience of relying upon oral statements at a period of any distance from the time when they were first made is, in such a matter, obvious and considerable.

I would humbly suggest that Lord Lyons should be instructed to apprise Mr. Seward that Her Majesty's Government participate in the apprehension expressed by his Lordship as to the ambiguity incident to the language of the second section of the Act, and as to the possible embarrassment which may hereafter ensue from it.

1863

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 139.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 11.)

Temple, April 10, 1863.

My Lord,

PERSIA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th November, 1862, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 23rd of June last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tabreez (No. 174), containing observations upon the subject of Consular jurisdiction in Persia, and pointing out how far the provisions of the Levant Order in Council might be made applicable to Persia.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship directed him to observe that, considering how few British subjects appear, from Mr. Abbott's Report, to be resident in Persia, it seemed doubtful whether it was worth while to give authority to Her Majesty's Consuls in that country to carry out the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act; but he was to request that we would take this question into our consideration, in conjunction with what is stated by Mr. Abbott, and favour your Lordship with our Report thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th February, 1863, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Persia (No. 7), relating to the question of establishing British Consular jurisdiction in Persia, and also a Vice-Admiralty Court at Bushire; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, along with the papers referred to us in his letter of the 25th of last November.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, although the number of Her Majesty's subjects in the dominions of the King of Persia is comparatively small, we are of opinion that cases might arise both with respect to the relation between Great Britain and Persia, and the due administration of justice generally, which ought not to be practically incapable of being adjudicated upon; and, therefore, that it would be expedient to invest Her Majesty's Consuls in Persia with the same kind of jurisdiction, mutatis mutandis, over British subjects, which is exercised by Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan.

We have therefore prepared a draft Order in Council, applicable to Persia, based upon the Japan Order in Council, dated the 23rd January, 1860, and to which we have appended our initials. We have omitted from the draft the Regulations in the Japan Order numbered 1, 28, 32, and 33 respectively, as being inapplicable; and we have inserted two regulations in the Persian draft Order, which are not to be found in the Japan Order, and which are numbered in the draft Persian Order 13 and 28 respectively. The utility of these two latter regulations will probably be thought to be self-evident. In framing the draft Order we have assumed that there are in Persia, as in Japan, several Consuls; and that one of them is "Consul-General." We have also substituted the British Minister in Persia as an appellate tribunal for the Court at Hong Kong, provided for that purpose in the Japanese Order, and Constantinople in lieu of Hong Kong, for various purposes of imprisonment and the like.

We would suggest that, before submitting the Order in Council for Her Majesty's consideration, it would be prudent to send the draft, as settled by us, to the Consul-General in Persia, inviting him to make such observations on the various clauses, and their adaptation, or otherwise, to the actual requirements, as his knowledge and experience may suggest.

We have thought that Her Majesty's Government would not be prepared, even if existing Treaties would permit it, to establish a Consular Court, with all the necessary officers and appliances, in Persia, as has been done, under peculiar circumstances, at Constantinople; and "Slave Trade" Regulations, in particular, ought, it seems to us, to be kept distinct from ordinary criminal and civil jurisdiction. We have, therefore, not provided, in the draft Order in Council, for the establishment of a "Court," notwithstanding the suggestion to that effect contained in Mr. Eastwick's despatch of the 18th of December, 1862.

It will be perceived that our draft Order, in providing for pecuniary penalties, and the like, assumes that dollars are a current, or known, denomination of money in Persia. Care must, of course, be taken that there is no inaccuracy in this respect.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 140.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 11.)

My Lord, Temple, April 10, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that your Lordship had addressed a letter to Mr. Adams, in reply to his letter of the 14th ultimo, respecting the intercepted correspondence, in conformity with the observations contained in our Report of the 30th ultimo,* and that your Lordship, however, desired Mr. Hammond to refer for our consideration and observations the inclosed memorandum suggested by a perusal of our Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That in your Lordship's memorandum it is stated "that the principle contained in the British and American laws and practice is this: a neutral may furnish all the implements of war, ships, cannon, powder, waggons, &c., &c., to be used by the belligerent, and to be sold as articles of commerce; but the neutral must not carry on war itself." With this statement we have the honour to express our entire concurrence.

The allegation with respect to the equipment of the vessel is that she was fitted from a British port, by which we understand that the materials for the armament, which she received in foreign waters, were conveyed to her from a British port.

This by itself is clearly not a carrying on of war by British subjects, and we will therefore pass on to the next allegation, namely, as to the manning of the vessel. It is said that the crew consisted of British sailors, and that, with the exception of perhaps two officers, she was altogether a British ship of war.

As to this allegation, it is scarcely necessary to observe that if she were really proved to be acting as a British ship of war, or privateer, in which British subjects were carrying on war of their own authority against the United States, she would clearly violate the principle above laid down.

In that case it would be both the duty and the right of Her Majesty's Government to employ force upon the high seas to capture the ship carrying on such lawful warfare in violation of Her Majesty's neutrality.

The question, however, is whether the facts as to the crew and ownership of the vessel warrant any such conclusion.

We understand that, in point of fact, she has been sailing ever since she received her armament under the Confederate flag, as a Confederate vessel of war, and under the command of a Confederate captain, and that as long as she carried the British flag she was not engaged in actual operations of war.

In these circumstances we cannot discover any ground for presuming that she is not now, as she purports to be, the property of the Confederate States, and navigated as one of their ships of war. The mere fact of the crew, with the exception of two officers, being British subjects (if the fact be so, of which we have no evidence), cannot possibly constitute the ship a British ship of war,

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 160*.

* Page 89.

1863

although, by so acting, the persons composing the crew would be violating the Foreign Enlistment Act.

In the American case of the "Independencia," referred to in our Report, the captain and the greater part of the crew were American citizens, who left Baltimore with a ship ready equipped as a vessel of war, and entered at Buenos Ayres into the belligerent service of that State in pursuance of an intention proved to have been formed before she left Baltimore. Nevertheless, Judge Story held that she had not violated the law of nations or the neutrality of the United States.

We do not think that the circumstances of the engagement of the crew having been made at a British port, or the combination of that fact with the fact that the equipments were also supplied from a British port, can make any difference in the application of the principle.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 141.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 13.)

Doctors' Commons, April 13, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith, a letter dated the 4th April instant from Mr. James Wetherell, relative to goods which have been shipped by him for Matamoros on board the "Sea Queen," together with the draft of answer which your Lordship proposes to return to him; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship as to whether the proposed answer is suitable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the answer of your Lordship to Mr. Wetherell is quite proper to be sent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 142.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 14.)

Doctors' Commons, April 13, 1863.

My Lord,

SPAIN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th April instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 29th of April, 1861, respecting the question as to the validity, under existing circumstances, of marriages performed by civil contract in St. Domingo, he was directed to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul at St. Domingo (No. 16, 15th March, 1862), containing the further information on this subject requested in my Report, and also a despatch from Mr. Hood (No. 3, 16th February), inclosing copies of his correspondence with the Wesleyan missionary at Puerto Plata on this question; and to request that I would take these papers, together with those previously sent to my predecessor, into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should take, and as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Hood in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with the opinion expressed by my predecessor in office that the Decree of General Santana, whatever be its legal effect, does not violate the rights of British subjects secured to them by Treaty. The competency of General Santana to issue such a Decree appears to be very doubtful, to say the least; but this is, after all, a grave question of the Constitutional law of St. Domingo, or of that law and the law of Spain taken together, which can only be determined by the proper authority of the State to which St. Domingo is subject, which I understand now to be the Kingdom of Spain.

I humbly advise Her Majesty's Government to pursue the following course: to instruct Her Majesty's Representative at the Court of Spain to represent to the proper Minister of that Court the distress and uncertainty created by the Decree of General Santana; to request to know what law on the subject of the marriage of foreigners, not Roman Catholics, now prevails at St. Domingo—whether the old law which permitted the civil contract, or General Santana's Decree; and what the effect of the Decree of the Queen of Spain of the 6th October, 1861, upon the old law or upon the Decree of Santana, may be.

Her Majesty's Representative should also be instructed to press upon the proper authorities the injury which the sudden change of the law, if such should be the case, has inflicted upon Her Majesty's subjects at St. Domingo, and the absence of any reasonable necessity for such an alteration.

When Her Majesty's Representative at the Court of Spain has reported to Her Majesty's Government the result of these inquiries and communications, Her Majesty's Government will, perhaps, be in possession of materials sufficient to furnish an answer to the despatch of Mr. Consul Hood, to which I cannot otherwise see clearly my way.

I presume that no communication with the Spanish Ambassador here would prevent the necessity of referring eventually to the authorities at Madrid.

Mr. Consul Hood is quite correct is saying that marriages under the Consular Act are not necessarily valid without the limits of Her Majesty's dominions. It would, therefore, be desirable that the civil contract should be valid by the lex loci of Domingo, but this validity cannot be insisted upon as a right, nor even originally as a matter of international comity, though the abolition of such a privilege, subsequently to its establishment by the law, does justify earnest remonstrance on the part of those States whose subjects are thereby affected.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 143.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 14.)

Doctors' Commons, April 13, 1863.

My Lord,

ECUADOR.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Ecuador (No. 5), on the subject of a claim preferred against the Government of that Republic by Mrs. Abitbol, and also the other papers respecting this claim; and to request that I would take the matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship what course Her Majesty's Government should pursue respecting it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I assume that the despatch (No. 5 of February 20, 1863) from Mr. Fagan correctly represents the nature and character of the debt to Mr. Abensur (from whom I understand that Mrs. Abitbol derives her claim), and I am of opinion that the three Independent States into which the original Republic of Columbia has been subdivided are liable for the repayment of the loan originally contracted on the public faith of this individual Republic for the services of the State.

This would be a correct inference, from the general principles of public law applicable to such a case.

In the present instance this inference is strengthened by a formal recognition of it on the part of the Joint Commission of Bogotá (referred to in the despatch of Mr. Fagan), which established the proportions in which each of the three subdivisions of the original Republic of Columbia should contribute to the discharge of the public debt. I think a portion of the sum due to Mr. Abensur should be claimed, relatively to these proportions, from each of these three States; and at all events the Republic of Ecuador cannot fairly be made responsible for more than its own quota, so calculated.

1863

With respect to the time fixed by the Republic of Ecuador for the conversion of Columbian into Equatorian bonds, and the fact that the period so fixed has elapsed, I am of opinion that such lapse does not constitute a bar to the person claiming through Mr. Abensur, and that it is not competent to the Republic of Ecuador by any such limitation to defeat the just claim of a public creditor.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 144.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 14.)

Temple, April 14, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, respecting the question of the liability of British subjects to perform military service in the Confederate States, and stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 218, March 10, 1863), inclosing Reports received from Her Majesty's Consulates at Richmond and Mobile, respecting the ill-usage to which British subjects are exposed, and the means which are adopted to force them into the ranks of the Confederate army.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the measures which should be adopted with a view of remedying the state of things therein set forth.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, transmitting to us further papers relative to this matter, for our consideration.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Benjamin does not appear (in his letter to Mr. Moore, February 1863) to controvert the position of law which we had the honour to state in our former Report on this subject; or that the neutral foreigner had a right to exercise his option whether he would leave the belligerent country, or enlist in its military service, if he had entered the country when no such obligation was imposed on him by law.

The Act, however, of the Legislature of Mississippi is certainly at variance, in the letter at least, with that position of law, and on that account furnishes matter of just complaint to the Government of the foreigner.

Mr. Benjamin's objection to the non-diplomatic character of the Consul is, however harsh in the circumstances, legally sound; and the refusal to allow foreigners to pass the military line into the territory of the belligerent may be quite justified by the exigencies of the war. But the abstract proposition of law enunciated by Judge Meredith, that the soldier acquires a civil domicil in the country in whose service he is enlisted, however true in its relation to the affairs of civil life, is pressed far beyond its due and reasonable limits when urged as a reason for compelling a foreigner to serve in a war against a State with which his own country is at peace. Such a proposition confounds two distinct things, recognised as distinct by all jurists, the doctrine of allegiance and the fact of domicil.

There can of course be no doubt that the representations of Consul Moore, with respect to the cruel treatment of British subjects, call for the interference of Her Majesty's Government; but in the present state of affairs, in the absence of any Diplomatic Representative of Her Majesty in the Confederate States, or of any accredited Representative of the Confederate States at this Court, we have great difficulty in suggesting any channel through which that interference can be effectually exerted.

It is, of course, a matter for the grave consideration of Her Majesty's Government whether any, and what communication should be opened upon the subject with the unaccredited Agent of the Confederate States in this country.

In the meanwhile, we can only suggest that any difficulty which may exist as to Mr. Consul Moore's authority to interpose for the protection of British interests in the State of Mississippi, or elsewhere where it may be desirable to employ his agency, may be removed (as far as practicable) by express instructions from Her Majesty's Government, giving him such authority; and that he should be directed to follow, as far as possible, the instructions contained in the last despatch to him from Lord Lyons, and according to the best discretion he can exercise, to continue to interfere on behalf of British subjects. He might also be instructed to draw up and forward to Mr. Benjamin a formal statement of the grievances upon these persons, and a strong protest upon the principles of international law against their continuance.

We must observe, however, that the case of British subjects who have voluntarily served in the Confederate armies, is not one entitling them, as of right, to the protection of Her Majesty's Government from any inconvenient consequences which may result to them from such voluntary service; which was, itself, a breach of the neutrality enjoined by Her Majesty's Proclamation.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—The further papers which accompany the letter of Mr. Hammond of the 7th instant* do not appear to us to call for any alteration of the Report which we had already drawn. The language of the certificate of exemption in Nelson's case is very reprehensible, and the whole proceeding extremely harsh; and if any proper opportunity should present itself, would justify the interference of Her Majesty's Consul on behalf of the person so treated.

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 145.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 14.)

Temple, April 14, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 20th March ultimo, from Mr. Samuel Maples, a Notary and Commissioner of Chancery at Nottingham, inclosing a correspondence with the United States' Minister at this Court respecting an undue advantage which, if your Lordship understands the matter correctly, Mr. Maples contends has been given to Mr. Rawson over other Notaries at Nottingham, by the fact of his having been appointed United States' Consular Agent in that town; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason for your Lordship's intervention in this matter. It is a question which chiefly relates to the due construction of an American Statute; and we can perceive no grounds, either in fact or law, why your Lordship should interfere with the Consular arrangements of the United States

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 236, March 13, 1863.

* Lord Lyons, No. 256, March 24, 1863.

1863

in this country, as to the choice of their Agents or Commissioners for taking affidavits.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 146.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 14, 1863.

HONDURAS.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the Report of the Commission appointed to adjudicate on certain land-claims preferred by British subjects against the Government of Honduras; and also a letter, dated the 6th April instant, from Mr. Frederick Upton, whose claims have been rejected by the Commission, asking for a copy of the Report; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether there is any objection to acceding to Mr. Upton's request.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have perused the Report of the Commission, and I see no objection to acceding to the request of Mr. Upton that he may have a copy of that part of it which relates to the Judgment given against his claim.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 147.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 14, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 4th of February,* and to previous communications on the case of the "Bermuda," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the former papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 247, March 16), from which it appears that the vessel has been condemned by the United States' Prize Court; that notice of appeal has been given; but that the ship has, nevertheless, been taken possession of by the United States' Government.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to make thereupon.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to his former letter respecting the case of the "Bermuda," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 246, March 16), inclosing copies of two Acts of Congress recently passed relative to the disposal of vessels and goods captured and condemned as prize of war, and which seem to be at variance with the instructions the draft of which Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit,—which were addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in November last, founded on my Report of the 15th of that month;† and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these several papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the papers before me raise two distinct questions:—

1. The conduct of the United States' authorities with respect to the "Bermuda;"

---

* Page 45.

† See Reports for 1862, page 281.

2. The character of the new Prize Act, and its bearing upon neutral States.

With respect to the first question I have to observe, that the United States' Government appears to have paid into Court a sum which I presume represents the appraised value of the "Bermuda," and that sum, I also presume, will abide the event of the Judgment which may be given by the Court of Appeal.

In the meanwhile the United States' Government has possessed itself of the vessel; and this is a proceeding so much in accordance with our own law and practice in similar cases (as referred to in my Report of the 15th of November, 1862), that it affords no just ground of complaint on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

With reference to the second question, namely, the Prize Acts recently passed by Congress (or rather to the first Prize Act, for the second has only an incidental bearing on the question, and a strictly municipal character), I have the honour to express my opinion that the first section is in accordance with the usual practice in such cases, enabling the Court to sell when the vessel is likely to become injured, when the costs of keeping it would be disproportioned to its value, or when all the parties interested agree to the sale.

The second section does furnish ground for remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government, especially after the communication made by Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward, to which I understand Mr. Seward has as yet made no real answer. (See letter of Lord Lyons to Mr. Acting Consul Crump, March 7, 1863.)

I had the honour to point out in my former Report (hereinbefore referred to) that the true doctrine on the subject of sale before condemnation was, that the interests of the vessel required it; and the words, "any other sufficient cause," in our last Prize Act (recited in that Report), taken with the context, evidently refer to those interests.

It is manifest, upon principles of natural justice, that the sale of the vessel of a neutral owner before any sentence of condemnation has been passed upon it—before the owner has been found guilty of any offence against the belligerent, is an act which cannot be fairly justified by reference to necessities of the belligerent, or necessities other than those incident to the state of the neutral vessel itself. The jurisdiction of the Prize Court, the obligation of the neutral to submit both to it and to the right of capture, is founded upon the doctrine that he will be fairly tried, not by the captor who seizes him, but by an impartial Judge, who tries both parties. But if a neutral vessel be sold for the good of the captor or the captor's State, before trial, this obligation of the belligerent and this corresponding right of the neutral are much impaired, because compensation in money, however fairly assessed on the abstract value of the property, may afford no practical protection to an innocent owner, in the particular circumstances of his case, from considerable loss.

I think, therefore, that Lord Lyons should be instructed to express the dissatisfaction of Her Majesty's Government at the extent to which this clause derogates from the usual rights of neutral States, to express their hope that it will not be put in practice, and at the same time to express his regret that such a clause should have been passed after his communication upon the subject, so late as the 3rd of January last, without any notice (except a mere formal one) being taken of his communication or any mention whatever made to him of the measure which was about to be proposed by the United States' Government. And if Lord Lyons should find, as I believe he will, that this power of appropriating the vessel before condemnation be a novel power, not conferred by former United States' Prize Acts, his remonstrance will be much strengthened.

It would also be proper for him to point out what an encouragement such a clause may afford to making seizures, known at the time when they are made to be unwarrantable by law, because the seized vessels may now in every case minister to the necessities of the belligerent, and the seizor is not likely to be severely rebuked by his Government for conduct which, however unjustifiable and intolerable to the neutral, has had so patriotic an object; nor is it to be wholly laid out of consideration that the knowledge that the vessel has been already appropriated by his Government to satisfy urgent necessities, presents to the Judge of the Prize Court some temptation, especially in the time of high excitement generated by a civil war, to pass a sentence which the act of his Government appears to have anticipated.

It is true that the last English Prize Act enabled (as I pointed out in my Report of the 15th of November) the Judge to deliver up the captured vessel to the claimant, on his giving good security to the captor. This would often prove a great mitigation of the hardships incident to the neutral in time of war.

1863

It would have been only reasonable and fair in the United States' Government, especially after the communication of Lord Lyons, to have inserted a similar clause in their Statute.

I cannot, however, say that the absence of such a clause, however unfriendly and harsh to neutral States, is so contrary to strict international usage and law on the subject as to warrant any formal remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 148.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 15.)

Doctors' Commons, April 14, 1863.

My Lord,

SWITZERLAND.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch and its inclosures received from Her Majesty's Minister at Berne (No. 37), respecting the claim put forward by two brothers named Fournier, resident at Geneva, to exemption from compulsory military service, for which it appears that the Swiss authorities hold them liable, on the ground that their father is a naturalized Genevese citizen.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That by the Vth Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and Switzerland (September 6, 1855), it is provided that "the subjects or citizens of either of the two Contracting Parties in the territories of the other shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatever, whether in the army, navy, or national guard, or militia."

The young Messrs. Fournier are English subjects, born in England of an English father. So far, therefore, they are clearly subjects of Great Britain, and within the exemption of the Treaty.

Their father has, however, subsequently to their birth, become a Genevese citizen, and the question arises as to whether the sons have not thereby, while resident in Geneva, lost their privilege of exemption from service in the Militia.

I am not informed at what time the father became a naturalized Genevese, but it appears from the despatch of Admiral Harris (April 4, 1863, No. 37), that these sons are both of full age. They had done no act to forfeit their national character, which is English. Each of them is sui juris; and I am of opinion that it is competent to them to claim the exemption of the Treaty in their favour, and I have the honour humbly so to advise your Lordship.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 149.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 16.)

Temple, April 15, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* respecting the case of James Carlin,

---

* Mr. C. Turner, M.P., September 8, 1862; Mr. Stuart, No. 296, October 16, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 27, January 13; No. 28, January 13; No. 111, February 4; No. 190, March 1; No. 209, March 6, 1863.

a British subject, who was on board the British steamer "Memphis," as a passenger, when that ship was captured on the 31st of July last by the United States' gun-boat "Magnolia." That it appears that on the arrival of the "Memphis" at New York, James Carlin was detained, and afterwards imprisoned in Fort Lafayette, whence he has only lately been discharged, and that he now claims compensation from the United States' Government at the rate of about 140*l*. per diem during the period of five months that he was kept in prison.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon, more especially with reference to the propriety of supporting Mr. Carlin's claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that Mr. James Carlin is entitled to pecuniary compensation for an imprisonment of five months, founded originally upon a slender presumption of his being a citizen of the United States, and continued long after even that presumption had been removed.

The reasonable inference is that there was never any serious intention of instituting a criminal prosecution against him, and that the suggestion of such intention was a mere pretext for his detention, really desired upon other and legally inadmissible grounds.

The papers do not supply the means of determining the measure or rate of compensation which it may be proper to demand. Mr. Carlin's own estimate appears to be very extravagant, and is not likely to be listened to by the Government of the United States.

He should be content to put forward, through Lord Lyons, a moderate demand for the loss of profits of employment during the time of his imprisonment, to which should be made a reasonable addition on account of the personal annoyance, the loss of personal liberty, and the plain injustice of the sentence under which he suffered imprisonment.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 150.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 16.)

Doctors' Commons, April 15, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, therewith, two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at Porto Rico (Nos. 13 and 18, February 24 and March 14, 1863), relative to the case of the British steamer "Aries," which vessel is stated to have run the blockade of Charleston, and inclosing the correspondence which has taken place on the subject between the United States' Consul at Porto Rico and Her Majesty's Consul; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the nature of the instruction which should be issued to Her Majesty's Consul on this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Consul Cowper should be instructed that he expressed very correctly the law upon the subject of the alleged offences of the "Aries," when he apprised the United States' Consul that the maintenance of the blockade was the duty of the United States' navy; and he should be further instructed to decline altogether to interfere in the manner requested by the United States' Consul. He may not improperly say that if the "Aries" be captured while endeavouring to enter or leave a duly blockaded port, and the case alleged be established against her, she will probably suffer the penalty of condemnation in the Prize Court.

He may further add, that the United States' Consul is incorrect in his statement of the English municipal law, but that if he were correct the conduct of the "Aries," if she be captured, is one for the exclusive consideration of the Prize Court, which, according to international law, can only exercise jurisdiction in the territory and under the authority of the belligerent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 151.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 16.)

UNITED STATES.

Doctors' Commons, April 15, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, therewith, two letters, one from Messrs. Joyce and Co., dated the 31st March ultimo, who are loading the ship "Danubio" for Matamoros, and the other from Messrs. Wade and Robson, dated the 2nd April instant, who are loading the ship "Camelford" for Nassau, together with drafts of the answers which your Lordship proposes to return to them; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether the proposed answers are suitable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion the letters which your Lordship proposes to send are proper and suitable for their purpose. The only doubt which has presented itself to my mind is whether such a letter as that of Messrs. Wade and Robson deserves any answer at all.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 152.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 15.)

PERU.

Doctors' Commons, April 15, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a translation of a letter, dated the 11th April instant, from the Peruvian Minister at this Court, requesting to know the grounds on which a Peruvian soldier named Manuel Oliva, has been tried in this country for an act which took place during the recent mutiny of Peruvian soldiers on board the hulk "Venus;" and that I should find among the accompanying papers an account of the manner in which the "Venus" was handed over to the crew of the Peruvian frigate "Arica," for their temporary accommodation while their vessel was being docked; and to request that I would take the application of the Peruvian Minister into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer that should be returned to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this application into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise your Lordship to answer the letter of the Peruvian Minister to the following effect, namely, that the offence for which Manuel Oliva has been committed to prison, and for which he is to be tried, is of a criminal character, and therefore an offence against the public peace and order of the realm; that the offence was committed on board one of Her Majesty's ships, and also in a British port; that it is in the same category as an offence committed within any part of Her Majesty's territory; that upon these grounds, according to the Municipal Law of England, which in this matter coincides with the Law of Nations, the offender is amenable to the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Courts of Justice in this country.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 153.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 17.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, April 16, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us, together with the papers to which it refers, the accompanying draft which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Adams in reply to certain statements with regard to the sale of the "Sumter" at Gibraltar to a British owner, which are contained in the letter from Mr. Adams of the 14th ultimo; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether the proposed answer is a proper one.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the proposed answer, with certain additions which we have had the honour to make in the margin, is proper to be sent.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 154.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 17.)

SPAIN.

Doctors' Commons, April 16, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch with its inclosures from the Acting British Consul-General at Havana (No. 5), relative to the sentence pronounced by the Royal Audiencia or Supreme Court at Havana, against Mr. Thomas Couch Stephens, Head Captain of the Consolidated Mining Company at Cobre, in consequence of two Englishmen and eighteen Chinamen having lost their lives by the breaking of the cable in one of the shafts while some of the miners were in the act of descending into the mine.

That a case somewhat similar to the present one occurred at the Spanish port of Huelva in 1862, in consequence of the accidental death of a Spanish soldier on board the British vessel "Ann Catherine;" and with reference to my Report thereupon, which, with the papers relating to the case,* were, with Mr. Hammond's letter, inclosed, he (Mr. Hammond) was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the steps which it will be right and proper to take on the present occasion.

Mr. Hammond was also to add that the answer of the Spanish Government to the representation which Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid was instructed to make in the case of the "Ann Catherine" has not yet been received.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That it is much to be regretted that Mr. Stephens did not cross-examine the witnesses referred to in Mr. Beattie's despatch, who are said, with apparent probability, to have been unworthy of credit in either of the Inferior or Superior Courts.

I think that in any answer which may be sent to Her Majesty's Consul at Havana, this regret should be expressed; and, further, that Mr. Beattie (Acting Consul at St. Jago de Cuba) should be informed that he is quite wrong in supposing that the mode of procedure, or the evidence allowed by English criminal law, was applicable to the case of Mr. Stephens.

It is clear, however, that the Inferior Court, with the amplest means of investigating into the whole circumstances of the case, and after maturely weighing them, both acquitted Mr. Stephens and absolved him from all payment of costs; it is manifest, therefore, that they placed no reliance upon those particular witnesses who were not cross-examined, and Mr. Stephens might very

---

* Sir J. Crampton, No. 390, 1862; Queen's Advocate, December 27, 1862; to Sir J. Crampton, No. 2, 1863; Sir J. Crampton, No. 2, 1863.

1863

naturally expect that such a sentence would not be disturbed by any other tribunal.

I am not sure whether I am right in supposing that Mr. Stephens did not appear before the Superior Court. It does not appear that he was summoned before it.

The sentence of that Court appears to me extremely unjust; first, in finding Mr. Stephens criminally responsible at all in the circumstances; and, secondly, in the infliction of the enormous pecuniary fine, which is wholly disproportioned to the only evidence of any value which seems to have been before that Court, that of Mr. Castro, the Mining Engineer of the Spanish Government; he says "that the Director of the works of the Consolidated Company's mines, although not to be made directly responsible for the accident, because the cable that was broken in the Richard's shaft fulfilled all the conditions of safety by its dimensions, form, and quality, and had not been too excessively long in use, he still has committed an imprudence in not changing it after one year's wear."

It can scarcely be denied that after this evidence, to find Mr. Stephens criminally responsible and to subject him to a ruinous fine was a grievous miscarriage of justice.

It appears that as the sentence limits the term of imprisonment to two years, the injured person is deprived of his right of appeal to Madrid, and that his only hope of escaping the effects of such an injustice is an application for the pardon ("indulto") of the Queen of Spain.

I humbly advise your Lordship that it would be proper to instruct Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid to support, as strongly as he may be able, such an application to the Crown of Spain.

Her Majesty's Representative at that Court will find valid grounds for his application in the following, among other points of the case, the favourable sentence of the Court which first inquired into the case, and which had from its position ample means of investigating the whole truth in the Report of Mr. Castro, to which I have referred, and in the preposterous and ruinous amount of the fine which has been inflicted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 155.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 17.)

Temple, April 16, 1863.

My Lord,

PERU.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 4th of November last,* upon an application of the Peruvian Minister at this Court, that effect might be given in this country to certain legal citations in connection with a law suit pending at Lima, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter, dated the 24th of March, from M. Sanz, saying what was done in a similar case in 1861.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case again into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether the papers now sent to us† induce us to alter the opinion we gave on M. Sanz's previous application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the documents now sent to us confirm the opinion which we have had the honour to express in our former Report. By these documents it appears that Sir C. Cresswell declined, from want of jurisdiction, to issue the citation prayed in the case of Juan José Concha, and that in consequence a Notary Public was employed in England by the parties who had failed in procuring the intervention of the Court.

This course is perfectly open to the parties for whom M. Sanz requests the intervention of the Foreign Office.

Probably if they employ a Notary Public or Solicitor here they will attain the object which they seek; and as in this case no direction has been given by the Peruvian Court that application should be made to any particular English Court or Judge (the address being to "one of the Judges of London," and there being no Judge of London who has any jurisdiction to act in the matter), no preliminary step can be taken (as in the case of the application to Sir Cresswell Cresswell) for the purpose of having its failure authenticated by a judicial act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 268.

† M. Sanz, October 14, 1862; to M. Sanz, November 8, 1862; Law Officers, November 4, 1862.

No. 156.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 18.)

Temple, April 17, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith a letter, dated the 16th April instant, from the Admiralty, inclosing a despatch from Rear-Admiral Milne, who requests instructions in regard to four vessels holding British registers, but occasionally sailing as Confederate vessels, and under different names from those inserted in the British register. That the Board of Admiralty have already consulted the Queen's Advocate and the Admiralty Advocate in this matter, but that your Lordship thinks it desirable that the whole of the Law Officers should consider the question in conjunction with the Admiralty Advocate, and with Mr. Farrer, of the Board of Trade, who may be able to offer any explanation which the Law Officers may desire upon the construction put by that Department on the clauses of the Merchant Shipping Act bearing on the subject; and to request we would take this matter into our immediate consideration, so that we may report upon it early on Saturday, on which day there is an opportunity of sending instructions to Admiral Milne.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the 52nd Section of the Merchant Shipping Act (17 and 18 Vic., cap. 104) does not apply to the four vessels in question, inasmuch as the British certificates of registry were legally granted to those vessels, and the section does not apply to any foreign certificate of registry.

We are also of opinion that, as it appears from the papers before us that the four vessels in question have changed their nationality, and, as we must assume, have become the property of Confederate citizens, their case falls under the first and not the second branch of the 103rd Section of the Merchant Shipping Act. It does not appear that, under these circumstances, they have since used the British flag, or assumed the British national character, for any other purpose than that of escaping capture by an enemy, or by a foreign ship-of-war in exercise of some belligerent rights.

We are therefore of opinion that it will not be proper for the naval officers under Admiral Milne's command to interfere with these ships on the ground of their having incurred any forfeitures or penalties under the Merchant Shipping Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
TRAVERS TWISS.

No. 157.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 18.)

Temple, April 18, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 31st March ultimo, from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of the Windward Islands, forwarding copies of correspondence which had taken place between his Excellency and Rear-Admiral Wilkes respecting a complaint made by the latter that undue partiality had been shown by the Governor to the Confederate vessel "Oreto," and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether there has been any breach of Her Majesty's Regulations.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose a previous letter (March 23, 1863) from the Colonial Office on the same subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that his Excellency the Governor of the Windward Islands does not appear to have been guilty of showing any undue partiality to the "Oreto," or to have committed any literal breach of Her Majesty's Regulations. We would take the liberty of observing, further, that his Excellency owes no account to Admiral Wilkes of his conduct in the matter of his discharge of his duties towards Her Majesty; and that the very offensive tone and language of that officer's letter ought to apprize his Excellency of the inexpediency of long personal interviews and explanations with him. It is manifest that, upon this as upon other occasions, these interviews and explanations are made the pretext for writing subsequent letters of this description, intended to be used hereafter very disingenuously, as proof of charges made at the time of the favour shown by Her Majesty's officers to the Confederate States.

We feel ourselves called upon, while giving to Governor Walker full credit for honest and impartial conduct, to add that, in our opinion, the letter and spirit of Her Majesty's Regulations (quoted in Rear-Admiral Wilkes' despatch of the 6th March, 1863) have not been adhered to with sufficient strictness in either of the cases mentioned,—that of the "San Jacinto" or that of the "Oreto." The limits, of the supply of coal in particular, prescribed by that regulation ought to observed, both as to the quantity of coal to be supplied in the first instance, and as to the interval of time which, in the absence of "special permission" (a permission not contemplated, except under "special" circumstances, of a kind different, in our opinion, from those which occurred in the two cases in question), ought to elapse between two successive supplies of coal from British ports.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 158.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 21.)

Temple, April 21, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Bennett and Wake, who are about to dispatch a ship for Matamoros, together with the draft of an answer which your Lordship proposes to return to them; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether the proposed answer is suitable.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's second letter of the same day's date, stating that, with reference to his former letter, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Spence, requesting that steps may be taken for the protection of the British ship "Sea Queen" on her voyage to Matamoros; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and acquaint your Lordship with the answer which we think it would be advisable to return to Mr. Spence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed letter is proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—We think it would be proper to send a similar letter to Mr. Spence.
W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 159.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 21.)

Temple, April 21, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Consul Archibald (No. 54, March 24), respecting a vessel called the "Georgiana," which is stated to be equipping at Nassau for the service of the Confederate Government; that we should see from the correspondence which passed respecting the vessel in question, when she was about to sail from Liverpool, and which Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, that the attention of Her Majesty's Government was called to the suspicious nature of this vessel by Mr. Adams previously to her departure from this country, but that sufficient cause was not shown for her detention.

And Mr. Hammond was now to request that we would take the case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, as to the course which should be adopted with regard to the alleged equipment of the "Georgiana" for warlike purposes at Nassau.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That neither the statements in Mr. Consul Archibald's letter, nor the extracts of newspapers which he incloses in it, furnish us with any sufficient materials for advising your Lordship to take any particular course of action with respect to the matter complained of in them.

To build ships in British ports, and sell them to either belligerent, as an article of commerce, is not, as we have already had the honour to observe, an act which infringes the rules of international law; nor is it, without more, sufficient to constitute a violation of any British law

If, subsequent to their construction and sale here, they have in some foreign port been equipped for war, that is not a matter with which Her Majesty's Government can in any way interfere.

The "Georgiana" was not shown, and does not appear to have been fitted out or equipped in such a manner or with such an intent as to justify her seizure when she left Liverpool. It does not now appear that she has guns fitted for belligerent purposes, or that she has received any at Nassau: it is at present all conjecture on the part of the Consul.

We cannot assume that the authorities at Nassau will permit the law to be broken there.

As to the allegation that Confederate cruizers are sheltered and assisted at Nassau and Jamaica, we have no evidence that they are not treated in these places upon precisely the same footing as Federal cruizers.

1863

As to the averment that there is connivance in these ports at expeditions of merchant-vessels destined to break the blockade, we are unable to understand exactly the nature of the offence imputed.

The neutral State lies under no obligation, and often, as in this case, has no power, to prevent merchant-vessels from sailing to blockaded ports: it is not her duty, but the duty of the belligerent, to preserve the blockade, and to capture vessels endeavouring to violate it.

It would be proper to give instructions to watch the construction of the "South Carolina" in the Clyde, and the proceedings of Captain Davison with respect to her. But at present we are not in a condition to offer further advice.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 160.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 21.)

Temple, April 21, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 2nd and 30th March last,* on the subject of the intercepted correspondence, which Mr. Adams states goes to show a deliberate attempt to establish within the limits of the United Kingdom a system of action in direct hostility to the Government of the United States, he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further letter, dated the 6th April instant, which has been received from Mr. Adams in reply to one founded on our Report of the 30th ultimo, which your Lordship addressed to him on the 2nd instant; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers (together with the former ones) into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Adams would appear to be properly answered by an acknowledgment of its having been received, and by a simple statement that your Lordship, while entirely assenting to the principles laid down in the authorities to which he refers, is still unable to perceive their application to any facts which have occurred in this country within the cognizance of Her Majesty's Government; no evidence having, as yet, been furnished to the Government of any abuse of Her Majesty's territory, "for the conduct of the war directly from her ports," as distinguished from mercantile dealings in shipping, or other articles, contraband of war; which acts ought not, in our opinion, to be confounded with warlike adventures or operations, the character of which Mr. Adams seeks to ascribe to them. We conceive that any transaction between a belligerent and a neutral which would have been of a commercial nature if it had taken place within the territory of the belligerent, is still of a commercial nature when it takes place within the territory of the neutral. Nor can we perceive how the character of such a transaction is capable of being affected by the circumstance that the ports of the belligerent Power concerned therein may, at the time, be rendered difficult of access by means of a blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Pages 61 and 89.

No. 161.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 23.)

Temple, April 22, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter (dated the 13th April), and its inclosures, from Mr. William T. Grazebrook, of Liverpool, calling your Lordship's attention to the seizure of his vessel, the "Dolphin," by the United States' steamer "Wachusetts," off the Island of St. Thomas, and requesting that steps may be taken to obtain her immediate release with compensation; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing a copy of a Report on this case which has been made by Commander Williams, the Mail Agent on board the contract steamer "Atrato;" and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the right of the belligerent cruizer to take men out of the neutral ship, as appears to have been done in this case.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th April instant, transmitting a letter dated the 15th April, from the General Post Office, inclosing a Report addressed to the Postmaster-General by the Mail Agent on board the "Atrato," respecting this case, and a further letter dated the 15th of April from Mr. Grazewood, inclosing attested copies of protests made before the British Consul at St. Thomas and a Notary Public at Liverpool; and also a correspondence respecting the proceedings of the United States' cruizer "Tuscarora" in the case of the British merchant steamer "Thistle," which formed the subject of the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 6th January last,* and to call our attention to the notes which passed between Lord Lyons and Mr. Seward in regard to the manner in which the Commander of the "Tuscarora" had exercised the belligerent right of visit in that case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as we can form any opinion upon the papers submitted to us the "Dolphin" appears to have been improperly seized; and we think that Lord Lyons may be instructed to represent the case to the United States' Government with a view to obtain the release of the vessel, unless some valid ground for taking her before a Prize Court be assigned. It is possible, however, that there may be circumstances of which your Lordship, and perhaps the owner, has not been informed, in the conduct of the master, which may, notwithstanding the papers on board, have justified the detention of the vessel. But, if we correctly understand the statement of Commander Williams, the United States' steamer "Wachusetts" was guilty of a grave offence against neutral rights in using a neutral port as a place wherefrom to capture vessels of another neutral State as they passed the limits of three miles from the shore of that port.

This is a very gross abuse (as we have before had occasion to observe) of the power of the belligerent, and identical with that committed by the "Tuscarora," and since, as we collect from these papers, apologized for by the United States' Government.

Moreover, the taking out sixteen of the crew of the "Dolphin," and treating them as prisoners of war, is an additional injury inflicted upon neutral rights. Such a course could only be justified by a well-founded apprehension on the part of the belligerent that the crew of the captured vessel were about to overpower their captor and to escape with their vessel. There appears to exist no such justification in the present case, all the circumstances of which, taken together, constitute a strong primâ facie case of unwarrantable conduct on the part of the captor.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 7.

1863

No. 162.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 23.)

Temple, April 22, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, therewith, a letter from Mr. Harding, one of the parties interested in the steamer "Peterhoff," inclosing a copy of a letter, exhibited in Lloyds' Room, from Mr. Adams to the Federal Admiral Dupont, being in the nature of a safe-conduct for a vessel proceeding to Matamoros, and inclosing also other papers respecting the case of the "Peterhoff."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to send with the above-mentioned papers those which we have already had before us in the case of the "Peterhoff," together with the instructions given to Lord Lyons, and the communications made to various parties founded on our Report of the 1st instant,* together with some further despatches received from Lord Lyons and Mr. Consul Archibald; and to request that we would take the statements in Mr. Harding's letter and its inclosure, together with those contained in other papers then sent us, into our early consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations and suggestions which might occur to us on the matter to which they relate.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th April instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 18th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch which had been that day received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 291), inclosing copies of further correspondence respecting the case of the "Peterhoff," as well as two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (Nos. 68 and 69) on the same subject, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased, in a note of the 21st April instant, to state that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 57, March 30th) to be added to the papers which were inclosed in his letter of the 18th instant relative to the case of the "Peterhoff."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further papers now submitted to us tend to confirm the opinion which we had the honour to express in our former Report, that the circumstances of this case justify Lord Lyons in applying for the immediate release of the captured vessel, with proper compensation. If, as is probable, the case be nevertheless submitted to the adjudication of the Prize Court, it should be carefully watched in its progress before that tribunal; as upon the present evidence the mere restitution of the vessel without proper costs and damages would be a matter for the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

The extract from the letter of Mr. Adams to Admiral Dupont appears to us to raise a question of a very grave and important character. It is, as far as we are aware, an entirely novel proceeding on the part of an Ambassador accredited to Her Majesty to hold interviews with Her Majesty's subjects, to examine their commercial speculations, and to grant certificates of their lawfulness addressed to the Commanders of the navy of the country which he represents. The practice appears to us to be not only without precedent but to be open to the most grave objections on principle.

In the first place such a practice has a manifest tendency to lower the respect due to the Ambassadorial office, the duties of which Mr. Adams has so ably discharged in this country. The relations of the Ambassador of a foreign State are with the Government and not with the private subjects of the State to which he is accredited.

Separate communications and special arrangements between the United States' Ambassador and certain merchants of Great Britain are wholly inconsistent with the impartiality which ought to characterize all official intercourse which may be necessary between the Representative of a foreign State and the individual subjects of the Court in which he is called upon to exercise the functions incident to his high office.

---

* Page 98.

He becomes the patron or partisan of a particular firm of merchants; other merchants, either from a consciousness of the integrity of their conduct, or from unwillingness or inability to approach the Ambassador, or from other causes (into which we need not more particularly enter) suffer, in consequence of the favour shown to their competitors, great damage, both as to obtaining insurances in this country and also as to the risk they incur of an unjust capture, because they have not the certificate of the Ambassador. This observation leads us to the next consideration. The position of Ambassador of a belligerent granting certificates or safe-conducts to certain merchants of a neutral State tends to disturb in the most serious manner the legal relations between the belligerent and the neutral.

It is the right of the belligerent to visit the neutral vessel on the high seas, and if the result of this visitation be that the ship presents from her papers, or her cargo, or her condition, real bonâ fide grounds for suspecting that she is engaged in traffic prohibited by international law to a neutral vessel (which is the meaning of the expression "reasonably suspected," used in our former Report on the case of the "Peterhoff"), then to proceed from visitation to capture, and to take the vessel into a belligerent port, in order that she may undergo her trial in the Prize Court. It is the corresponding duty of the neutral ship to submit to this visitation and capture, because she has herself presented just and fair grounds of suspicion that she has so conducted herself as to have forfeited her neutral character. But if the grounds upon which this right of capture is allowed, do not exist; if it is not pretended (or cannot without manifest dishonesty be pretended) that upon visitation the ship herself has furnished a legal justification for seizure, the act of capture becomes a severe oppression and injustice, and a gross violation of neutral rights, even though the Prize Court condemn the captor in costs and damages; but if this be not done, it becomes an intolerable injustice. If the seizure be made upon the ground not of the state of the vessel herself but upon evidence derived, as lawyers say, aliunde—for instance on the ground that the name of the vessel is on a list of suspected vessels, or is not on a list of favoured vessels, or not armed with a certificate furnished by the Ambassador at the Court of the neutral—if the seizure be so justified, then those principles of international law, which found equally the right of the belligerent and the obligation of the neutral, are set at nought, and the only consequence must be that neutrality will become impossible.

No independent nation will remain neutral in order that she may suffer, without retaliation or compensation, all the privations of war.

We cannot conclude this Report without expressing our serious apprehension (founded upon late occurrences) that Admiral Wilkes is now acting towards British vessels on this system, although the pretension to do so was last year disclaimed by the United States' Government; and it is our duty to say that it is a system against which, if it should be avowed or proved, British subjects have a right to be protected.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 163.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 23.)

Temple, April 22, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Bennet and Wake, calling your Lordship's attention to the fact of merchant-vessels being allowed to clear from New York to the port of Matamoros; and to request that we would take this fact into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, with reference to its bearing upon the case of the "Peterhoff," and of any other vessels which may be under engagement to proceed from this country to Matamoros.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear that British vessels are refused clearances from New York to Matamoros, or that these United States' vessels would not be seized and detained if suspected of an illegal destination to a blockaded port. The mere fact of the advertisement of the United States' vessels about to run from New York to Matamoros, unless it can be shown that British vessels are not allowed so to advertise, does not, of course, furnish ground for any remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Such a fact, however, coupled with a manifest unjust seizure of innocent British vessels, and the non-seizure of United States' vessels bound to the same port, and carrying on the same commerce, may fairly be made use of in any remonstrances addressed by Her Majesty's Government to that of the United States, upon cases where the seizure is admitted, or proved, to be unjustifiable. At the same time, it is to be observed that the United States' Government cannot be supposed to claim the right to stop the trade between this country and Matamoros, in the case of vessels having no other destination; and, therefore, the fact that they treat such a trading as legal at New York is irrelevant to any question which recent captures may raise.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 164.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 23.)

Temple, April 23, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letters of the 21st April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter of the same date, from Messrs. Gregory and Champion, calling your Lordship's attention to the detention and imprisonment at New York of Mr. Elsworth and Mr. Redgate (members of the firm of Messrs. Galbraith, Redgate and Co., of London and Glasgow), who were passengers for Matamoros on board the British steamer "Peterhoff," and Messrs. Gregory and Champion requested that directions might be given for obtaining from the United States' Government some compensation for the losses sustained by Mr. Elsworth and Mr. Redgate through the wrongful acts of that Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, in requesting us to take this claim into our consideration, and to favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience with our opinion thereupon, he was to refer us specially to the explanation made by Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons, which we would find among the "Peterhoff" papers then before us, that the persons who were taken out of the "Peterhoff" and were detained at New York, were so detained, in order that they might give the necessary evidence before the Prize Court.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the detention of Mr. Elsworth and Mr. Redgate appears to us, as far as we can judge from the statements before us, to warrant Her Majesty's Government in requesting Lord Lyons to make a special representation to the United States' Government of the damage which the detention, apparently unjustifiable, of these gentlemen, has inflicted upon the firm of Messrs. Galbraith and Co., as well as the injury inflicted upon Mr. Redgate by his imprisonment at New York.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 165.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 24.)

Temple, April 24, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 4th instant, from the United States' Minister at this Court, inclosing a copy of an affidavit which has been voluntarily made by J. Clarence Randolph Yonge, the late paymaster of the Confederate vessel "Alabama," giving an account of the circumstances attending the building, fitting out, and proceedings of that vessel until the termination of his connection with her; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether any of the persons mentioned in Yonge's statement can be prosecuted under the Foreign Enlistment Act.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the evidence of Yonge, considered in connection with that of Passmore in the "Alabama" case, as originally transmitted by Mr. Adams to your Lordship, tends strongly to show that Captains Bullock and Butcher have been actively concerued not only in superintending the construction of vessels of war at Liverpool, but also in inducing Her Majesty's subjects to serve in the navy of the Confederate States.

We do not, howevor, think that the evidence of Yonge is sufficiently precise as to acts done within the dominions of Her Majesty to make it safe to rely upon that evidence for a conviction of these persons, if prosecuted under the Act; but the evidence is important as in aid of the prosecution pending in the case of the "Alexandra;" and we think the subject is one to which the attention of Her Majesty's Government ought to be directed, with a view to prevent so serious a violation of the laws and neutrality of this realm as is involved in the enlistment by the agents of the Confederate States of Her Majesty's subjects in this country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 166.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

Doctors' Commons, April 24, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant stating that, with reference to my Report of the 2nd ultimo,* respecting the case of Captain Sherwin, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the draft of the instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons founded thereupon (No. 124, March 7th), a letter from his Lordship dated the 24th March ultimo, stating his reasons for doubting the expediency of his addressing to Mr. Seward a note entirely in the sense of that instruction.

Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that I would take Lord Lyons' letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the points to which Lord Lyons calls attention.

The previous papers were also inclosed for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the instructions already sent to Lord Lyons are, with an exception presently to be mentioned, proper and sufficient.

First, I think the remonstrance as to the alleged ground of imprisonment properly expressed.

Whether the United States' Government, originally or subsequently, declared that the ground of his arrest was a charge of high treason does not appear to me to affect at all the nature of the remonstrance which should be addressed to them.

---

* Page 60.

1863

Captain Sherwin was arbitrarily arrested for aiding the "rebels;" he was then transferred from military to civil custody, and (see Mr. Seward's letter, January 17, 1863,) eventually discharged, because the Attorney for the United States, "after a deliberate investigation of the case, determined that at present he cannot probably be successfully prosecuted for treason against the United States."

I am unable to discriminate the original charge of aiding the "rebels" from the subsequent expansion of it into the charge of "high treason." At all events, the whole imprisonment, military and civil, proceeded upon grounds found to be legally untenable, and which were therefore abandoned.

Secondly, I state there that the charge preferred by Mr. Seward on the 17th of January was vague, and that the vagueness was not cured by the preceding note of the 11th of November, in which it was stated that cargo purchased ostensibly for a lawful trade "was believed" to have an unlawful destination.

As to the third point, it appears that the remonstrance which Lord Lyons was instructed to make was, for the sufficient reason which his Lordship states, never delivered. That portion of the instruction would therefore, of course, be modified by Lord Lyons.

As to the fourth point, if no further peculiar circumstances have arisen which in the opinion of Lord Lyons warrant these arbitrary proceedings, then the contingency which that portion of the instructions was adapted to meet does not apply, and no embarrassment can arise from it to Lord Lyons.

As to the fifth point, I am clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot reasonably dispute the authority of the United States' Government to suspend, impartially as to all persons, the Habeas Corpus Act, and therefore no objection to the instruction arises upon this ground.

Upon the whole I am of opinion that Lord Lyons should be requested to act upon the original instructions, with the exception of that part which relates to the continuance of the imprisonment after the remonstrance of Her Majesty's Government.

Lastly, it is to be observed that of course Lord Lyons will not be tied to a verbal adhesion to the terms of the instructions, and will use some discretion in the mode and form of pressing upon the United States the particular points of them.

Substantially, with the exception mentioned they appear to me adequate and proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 167.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

Temple, April 24, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Baltimore (No. 8, 30th of March) relative to questionable transfers which are being made of vessels from the American to the British flag; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in the matter of the transfer of vessels from the United States' to British owners.

Vessels so transferred incur the risk of capture by Confederate cruizers; and both the reality and the lawfulness of such transfers may be questions raised hereafter in the Prize Courts of the Confederate States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 168.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

Temple, April 24, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us, with reference to our Report of the 12th of November last,[*] respecting the course which it would be proper to pursue with regard to the prisoner accused of the murder at Gibraltar of the principal officer of the "Sumter" steamer, that a copy of our Report was sent on the following day to the War Office, who were at the same time informed of the grounds upon which Her Majesty's Government were of opinion that the "Sumter" was entitled to be regarded as a man-of-war.

That it was afterwards thought advisable to ascertain from the Confederate Government what course it was desired should be pursued with regard to the prisoner, and accordingly, on the 30th of December last, Her Majesty's Consul at Richmond was instructed to ascertain in what manner that Government would wish the case to be dealt with.

That Mr. Consul Moore's despatch conveying the answer of the Confederate Secretary of State was received in due course at the Foreign Office, and was communicated to the War Office, by whom it was forwarded in copy to the Governor of Gibraltar.

That we should observe from the papers sent therewith[†] that Mr. Benjamin, the Confederate Secretary of State, has stated that a Confederate ship of war will be instructed to proceed to Gibraltar and bring away the prisoner, but offers the alternative of his being transported in a British ship of war to the Southern States, in order that he may be tried by the Confederate tribunals.

That the Governor of Gibraltar, however, regards this as a strong, if not an illegal measure, and he requests that he may be furnished with express and specific instructions as to whether he should, irrespectively of any legal opinion, deliver the prisoner over, as proposed by Mr. Benjamin.

Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that we would take this case again into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to the Governor of Gibraltar.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are afraid that neither of the two courses suggested by the Confederate Secretary is free from difficulty and embarrassment; but that on the whole we are of opinion that it would be most expedient to send the prisoner on board one of Her Majesty's ships of war to a port of the Confederate States, in order that he may undergo his trial for murder.

The right of the belligerent to prevent the entrance of neutral vessels of commerce into a blockaded port does not extend to ships of war belonging to a neutral State.

The neutral Government has a right to hold communication with the belligerent whose port is blockaded; and the reason of the belligerent right of blockade does not apply to a neutral ship of war, which is bound, of course, to carry no merchandize or relief to the blockaded port. The abstract right of the neutral ship of war to enter the port, however wise it may be to abstain from the exercise of it, cannot be questioned.

We believe, moreover, that during this war the right of a neutral ship of

---

[*] See Reports for 1862, page 275.

[†] War Office, November 3; Admiralty, November 4; to War Office, November 13; War Office, December 6 and December 18; to War Office, December 30; to Consul Moore, No. 13; Consul Moore, No. 14; to War Office, March 24; War Office, April 11.

1863

war to pass through the blockading lines has not been questioned, and that it has not been waived or controlled by a contrary usage; and if so, the ship which conveys the prisoner should abstain from any communication with any United States' ship, as to the cause of her visit to the blockaded port.

If we are wrong in this belief, and if the invariable usage has been during this war for the neutral ship of war to communicate with the blockading force previously to entering the blockaded port, then the captain of the conveying ship must apprize the proper officer of the blockading force that he is conveying a prisoner charged with having committed murder while on board a Confederate ship of war in one of Her Majesty's ports; but all further and more detailed communication should be avoided, as likely to raise irritating questions in connection with the particular vessel the "Sumter," on board of which the crime is alleged to have been committed.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 169.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

Doctors' Commons, April 25, 1863.

My Lord,

SIAM.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me, with reference to my Report of the 9th September last* respecting the proceeding of Sir R. Schomburgk, Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok, in regard to the British barque "Canada," together with the previous papers, and with the correspondence which has since passed between the Foreign Office, the Board of Trade, and Sir R. Schomburgk, in relation to this case, a letter dated the 18th April instant, from Messrs. Clarkson, Son, and Cooper, requesting that your Lordship will instruct Her Majesty's Consul to remit to the Registrar of the High Court of Admiralty the proceeds arising from the sale of the "Canada;" and to request that I would take this case into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Clarkson, Son, and Cooper, and as to any further proceedings which should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think there is no necessity for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in this matter. Messrs. Clarkson, Son, and Cooper should institute a suit in the High Court of Admiralty on behalf of the mortgagee, against the proceeds of the ship in the hands of the Consul.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 170.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

Temple, April 25, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th April instant, stating that he was directed to call our attention to the passages in Mr. Seward's letter to the Secretary of the United States' Navy, dated August 8, 1862, in which Mr. Seward lays down rules for dealing with mail-bags found on board captured vessels; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether the course pointed out by Mr. Seward is justified by the law of nations.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to give any other answer than the following to your Lordship's letter:—

The practice of sending Government mails by commercial vessels is of comparatively modern date, and gives rise to questions to the solution of which it is difficult to apply with perfect precision the principles of international law as expounded in books of authority, or as hitherto established in practice. We think that in these circumstances no general and positive rule applicable to mail-bags sealed with Her Majesty's seals can be laid down as certainly established by international law. But we think that, having regard to the comity due from one friendly State to another, and to the credit which ought to be given to the seal of the neutral Sovereign, mail-bags so authenticated addressed to a neutral destination, and not open to any reasonable suspicion of having been tampered with, ought not to be opened by any belligerent Power, but ought, in the case of the capture of the vessel conveying them, to be forwarded to their proper destination.

We think that in such cases Her Majesty's Government should not be parties to any understanding that the mail-bags shall be opened, except at their proper destination; and we think that Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake that at any time the seal of private letters in these mail-bags having a neutral address should be broken for the purpose of ascertaining their contents.

With respect to bags addressed to persons resident in either of the belligerent States the case is different. As to these, we think that the instructions given by Mr. Seward in his letter of the 8th of August, 1862, to Mr. Welles, concedes as much as Her Majesty's Government can reasonably require. It would therefore follow that, in our opinion, some discretion must be left in such cases to Her Majesty's Consuls or officers to whom the bags may be delivered, to open them and to determine, as far as possible from the addresses of the letters, whether any of them are of such a character that the existence of them ought to be communicated to the Secretary of State at Washington; leaving him to require, if he thinks fit, that such letters themselves should be sent to him.

It is possible, also, that in bags having a neutral destination, there might be found on their being opened, packets or letters addressed to persons in the belligerent States of a character similar to those of which we have last spoken. As to these it is impossible to avoid questions of considerable difficulty, but we doubt whether it could be safely laid down that the stipulation of the United States' Government for the transmission to it, in the circumstances supposed, of such letters is unreasonable or contrary to the principles of international law.

If, however, Her Majesty's Government should think it necessary to insist upon the position that all bags bearing Her Majesty's seal, with a neutral destination, are to be deemed inviolable, whatever may be the ulterior destination of any of the letters which they contain, we are not aware of any authority which can be said directly to militate against that position, but we regard the assertion of such a claim as a matter of policy rather than of law.

Mr. Seward's letter to Mr. Welles proceeds upon a principle which is clearly right so far as it provides for the delivery of mail-bags, with the seals unbroken, to Her Majesty's Agents. With respect to the terms on which, according to that letter, such delivery is to be made, we are not sure whether they are intended in a sense consistent or inconsistent with the opinion which we have expressed as to the course proper to be pursued by Her Majesty's Government. And we think it desirable that an understanding should be arrived at on this subject before Her Majesty's Agents in the United States are instructed to act according to the tenor of that letter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 219.

1863

No. 171.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, April 27, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st April instant, stating that, with reference to his letters of the 14th and 15th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter, dated the 21st April instant, from Mr. Grazebrook, respecting the case of his vessel the "Dolphin;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the other papers in the case then before us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that our Report might likewise be directed to the case of the "Adler," so that your Lordship might be enabled to return an answer to Mr. Grazebrook on that particular point.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken into our consideration the letter of Mr. Hammond of the 21st instant, inclosing a letter from Mr. Grazebrook, both received since our Report was written. With respect to the "Dolphin," we have nothing to add to our Report upon that subject which we have had the honour to make.

With respect to the "Adler," we think an answer should be sent to Mr. Grazebrook to the effect that Her Majesty's Government can make no promise of affording any special protection to that vessel; that they will not fail to protect, according to the principles of international law, and in the proper manner, the vessels of all Her Majesty's subjects engaged in a lawful trade, and observing the obligations of neutrality.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 172.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

UNITED STATES.

Doctors' Commons, April 27, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 19th March ultimo, from Mr. Wylie, of the firm of Messrs. Crow, Wylie, and Co., addressed to Mr. Horsfall (by whom it was communicated to your Lordship), relative to Mr. Wylie's endeavours to place in security certain timber owned by him at Pensacola; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this letter into consideration, together with the inclosed correspondence* which took place last year between the Foreign Office, Lord Lyons, and Messrs. Crow, Wylie, and Co., on the same subject, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to any further steps which it would be desirable should be taken with the view of rescuing Messrs. Crow, Wylie, and Co.'s property.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in this case the timber in question appears to have been purchased some months before the war broke out, the greater part of it to have been sold in England, the ships destined to convey it to have appeared off the port soon after the blockade had begun, and it does not seem to be doubted that this property belongs bonâ fide to one of Her Majesty's subjects.

It would, therefore, be in accordance with established usage to permit the export of this timber, and I do not see clearly upon what definite grounds this permission is refused.

---

* Messrs. Crow and Wylie, May 7, 1862; to Lord Lyons, No. 205, May 9, 1862; to Messrs. Crow and Wylie, May 9, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 373, May 27, 1862; to Messrs. Crow and Wylie, June 20, 1862; Mr. Stuart, No. 155, August 15; No. 168, August 19, 1852; to Messrs. Crow and Wylie, September 15, 1862; Lord Lyons, No. 521, December 17, 1862.

I presume it will be alleged that the military exigencies of the United States render the refusal for the present necessary.

Such a general answer, however, would be very unsatisfactory, and the United States' Government may fairly be required to state some particular reasons why the subject of a neutral and friendly State should not be allowed to take away property purchased before the beginning both of the war and the blockade, and unconnected with the enemy of the United States.

Having regard to what has already been done by Lord Lyons, I can only advise that he should be instructed not to allow the matter to sleep, but using his discretion as to the time to press the claim of Messrs. Crow to remove their timber, again upon the United States' Government, pointing out that it is difficult to understand upon what legitimate grounds the claim is rejected.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 173.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

UNITED STATES.

Doctors' Commons, April 27, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 7th ultimo,* respecting the validity of the blockade of Galveston and Charleston, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston (No. 6 of the 29th of January, 1863), inclosing a proclamation issued by General Magruder, announcing that the ports of Sabine Pass, Lavaca, and Valasco, have ceased to be blockaded, and also one issued by the Commander of the United States' steamer "Brooklyn," declaring the whole coast of Texas to be still under blockade; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether it would be advisable for Her Majesty's Government to take any notice of these proclamations.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am opinion that it would not at present be advisable that Her Majesty's Government should take any official notice in this country of the proclamations referred to.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 174.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

UNITED STATES.

Doctors' Commons, April 27, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 24th March ultimo, from Mr. J. W. Franklin, alias Charles Lewis, claiming redress on account of his forcible abduction from British territory on the 19th April, 1861, and the imprisonment he subsequently underwent in consequence of his having been convicted in an American Court on a charge of larceny.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to me a despatch (No. 47 of the 6th July, 1862), and its inclosures, which were received some months ago from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, respecting this case; and was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Page 67.

1863

That, in my opinion, Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere in this matter.

It is certain that this man committed the larceny for which he is undergoing imprisonment.

It is doubtful whether he was forcibly or voluntarily brought within the jurisdiction of the United States' Court which passed sentence upon him.

The evidence mentioned in Mr. Consul Murray's despatch does not amount to adequate legal proof of compulsory abduction from a British territory.

At all events the objection to the jurisdiction ought to have been, and might have been urged at the time of the trial.

It was never urged, but the defence was an averment of innocence, subsequently, it should seem, retracted.

The man was not inops consilii, but fairly protected by an advocate, who appears to have quite disharged his duty towards his client.

I see no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 175.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

Doctors' Commons, April 27, 1863.

United States.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 10th of October last,* respecting the imprisonment of Mr. Francis Carroll, he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 281, April 7th), inclosing copies of his further correspondence respecting this case.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to state that I should observe that after considerable delay, Mr. Carroll has been released from confinement, and that he now seeks to obtain an indemnity from the United States' Government.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Mr. Carroll's claim to receive an indemnity should be supported by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the original imprisonment of this person appears to have been caused by the extreme violence of his language (though perhaps maliciously reported by his enemies) against the United States' Government, at a time when the necessities of the State had rendered necessary the general suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act.

Her Majesty's Government requested the United States' authorities to release him. They offered to do so, if he would find a guarantee for his good conduct, or leave the country.

Her Majesty's Government accepted the offer as reasonable, and as containing as large a concession as, in the circumstances, they could reasonably desire.

Mr. Carroll declined to avail himself of either alternative.

This imprisonment was therefore continued, and finally he is released upon terms which he considers more favourable to himself.

Looking at all the circumstances of the case, I do not advise your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government ought to support Mr. Carroll's claim for an indemnity against the United States' Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 248.

No. 176.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

Temple, April 27, 1863.

United States.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures received from Lord Lyons (No. 276, March 31) respecting the case of the British barque "Springbok," whose capture while on a voyage from this country to Nassau formed the subject of our Reports of the 13th and 21st ultimo.*

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed the previous papers and the drafts of the two instructions (Nos. 134 and 150) which have been already addressed to Lord Lyons respecting the "Springbok," and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the papers now received from Washington into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any further instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Lord Lyons appears to have taken all the steps which could properly be taken in this case, and that we do not think any further instructions should be at present sent to his Lordship. The owners of the "Springbok" will of course take the necessary steps to establish the innocence of that vessel before the Prize Court, and apply under the advice of their Counsel for costs and damages.

As to the alleged stealing of the seamen's clothes, we presume this is a matter for which, if the statement be true, redress will not be withheld.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 177.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 30.)

Doctors' Commons, April 30, 1863.

United States.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 78, April 14th), reporting the capture of the British vessel "Granite City" by the United States' ship of war "Tioga," and stating that the "Granite City" had been brought to New York, and, while waiting for the action of the Prize Court, taken by orders from Washington, for the service of the United States' Government; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Lord Lyons should be instructed to address a formal remonstrance to the United States' Government against the appropriation by that Government of this vessel before any sentence of condemnation has been passed upon her.

It will be seen by the answer to that remonstrance whether the United States' Government have any valid reason to allege in justification of this act.

I think that in the case of the "Bermuda" (submitted to me January 28, 1863), it appeared from the opinion of Mr. Carlisle that the sale of a captured vessel, even after condemnation in the first Prize Court, pending an appeal, was contrary to the practice of the United States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Pages 69 and 80.

1863

No. 178.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 30.)

Doctors' Commons, April 30, 1863.

My Lord,

ITALY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Naples (No. 28, April 22), requesting instructions respecting a marriage which an English gentleman, named Townley, wishes to contract with an Italian lady of the Protestant religion. That a case similar to the present occurred in France in 1858; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose therewith, together with the correspondence, an instruction which was addressed by the Earl of Malmesbury to Lord Cowley upon the subject, which instruction was founded upon a Report from Her Majesty's Advocate-General (Sir John Harding).

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and at my earliest convenience report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which it may be right and proper to return to Mr. Consul-General Bonham.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with the opinion of my predecessor in office with respect to marriages of British subjects with foreigners in countries which permit a valid marriage to be contracted before proper authorities, whatever may be the religious faith of the contracting parties. I think, with him, that in such countries the marriage according to the lex loci should precede the marriage under the British Consular Act. But in the present case the lex loci does not sanction a marriage between a Roman Catholic and a member of the English Church; and I do not think that the Consul will do wrong in allowing the provisions of 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68, to be put in force in behalf of these persons, both of whom desire to be so married, and both of whom are of full age, and who have complied with the requisitions of the 1st and 2nd sections of the above-cited Statute.

At the same time I think that the Consul should formally apprize the Italian lady that though the marrige will be holden valid throughout Her Majesty's dominions, it will, at present at least, be treated as invalid by Italian authorities in Italy, and probably in some other Continental States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 179.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 30.)

Doctors' Commons, April 30, 1863.

My Lord,

SWEDEN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th of April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Stockholm (Nos. 44, 45, 49, and 59), relative to the arrival of the steam-vessel "Ward Jackson" in the port of Malmö, and to the embargo laid upon her by the Swedish Government, and with reference to the intimation contained in Mr. Jerningham's No. 59 of the 17th instant, that the owners of the vessel had applied to the British Vice-Consul at Malmö for assistance to obtain her release, Mr. Hammond was to request that I would inform your Lordship whether, in my opinion, Her Majesty's Government would, if formally applied to, be justified in making any application to the Swedish Government on behalf of the owners of the "Ward Jackson."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That taking into consideration all the circumstances of this case, I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in making any application to the Swedish Government on behalf of the owners of the "Ward Jackson."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 180.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

Temple, April 30, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous correspondence which has passed on the subject, a letter dated the 15th April instant, from the United States' Minister at this Court, inclosing copies of depositions which have been made by two British subjects, who appear to have been solicited to take service on board the "Japan" or "Virginia," the vessel which recently left the Clyde with the supposed intention of acting hostilely against the United States. That Mr. Adams likewise incloses lists of the officers and men who left Liverpool to join this vessel, and of those who refused to take service on board of her; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to any steps which Her Majesty's Government can properly and legally take in the matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st April instant, transmitting a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Brest respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, it is not competent to Her Majesty's Government at present to take any steps in the matter to which Mr. Adams' despatch of the 15th April refers.

So far as relates to British seamen who have accepted the proposal made to them in French waters to engage in the belligerent service of the Confederate States, we think that they have offended against the second section of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and will be liable to be proceeded against for a misdemeanour, if they should be found within British jurisdiction; the first part of that section (which applies to the persons entering into such engagements) being in the form of an absolute prohibition, applicable generally to British subjects, without reference to the place where the act prohibited may be done. But inasmuch as these seamen are not, at present, within British jurisdiction, no steps can now be taken for their prosecution.

With respect to the seamen who have returned to this country, it seems clear that their conduct has been laudable and not criminal. They were induced by false and fraudulent representations to enter into engagements at Liverpool for a perfectly lawful voyage, and afterwards when apprised of the deception which had been practised upon them, and invited to enter an engagement of a different character, they refused to do so.

With respect to Captain Hitchcock and any other persons who may have been instrumental in inducing the crew of the "Japan" to take service in her before her departure from this country, it is clear that (howsoever censurable their conduct may have been) they did nothing contrary to the Foreign Enlistment Act; for it was not until the ship was in French waters that any proposal appears to have been made to any of the men to enter into the belligerent service of the Confederate Government, and the latter part of the first section of the Foreign Enlistment Act (which applies to the case of persons "hiring, retaining, engaging, or procuring" others to enter into the belligerent service of a foreign State) is expressly limited to acts done within the territorial jurisdiction of the British Crown.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1863

No. 181.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

Temple, April 30, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th April instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th of February last, he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 252, March 23), respecting the imprisonment of Captain Laurent, and that we should see from this despatch that Lord Lyons has suggested that evidence should be procured from England in order to prove that Captain Laurent is a British subject by birth; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the propriety of taking this step, and also with any observations we may have to offer on the case generally.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into conssderation, and have the honour to report—

That we think your Lordship might properly cause evidence as to Captain Laurent's British birth to be procured, and, being authenticated as Lord Lyons suggests, to be transmitted to New York. Some statement or statements should be made in the statutable declarations to be sent out, identifying the person whose baptismal register is verified, as the individual of the same name on whose behalf the interference of Lord Lyons takes place.

It would appear from the letter of Captain Laurent (No. 12) that this gentleman's aunts, Miss Martha and Susan Mundy, are resident at Oxford; they, as well as Mr. Slatter the publisher, might be applied to and desired to procure a proper baptismal certificate, which is probably to be procured in the parish of St. Giles in that city.

It is desirable to procure this testimony in order to obtain the release of Captain Laurent from imprisonment, but if there be any record of his being forbidden to fly the United States' flag at Havana in June 1861, by the United States' Consul, and on the ground alleged, that evidence ought of itself to suffice to prove the injustice of detaining him longer on the ground of his being a citizen of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 182.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 2.)

Doctors' Commons, April 30, 1863.

My Lord,

BRAZIL.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 17th of November and 8th of December, 1862* (which Mr. Layard returned to me), he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 24th of April, ultimo, from Mr. Reed calling attention to a protest laid by Messrs. Bieber, against the seizure by the Brazilian authorities of property at Pernambuco, in connection with the bankruptcy of Messrs. Rostron and Co.; and that your Lordship apprehends that the Brazilian Government should be called upon to apply in this case the decision at which they ultimately arrived in the instance of the property at Bahia, but that there remains the question whether damage has not been done to the general creditors by the forced and illegal sale of the property; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take this subject into consideration, and that I would report to your Lordship my opinion on the above-mentioned points, in time to enable your Lordship to furnish instructions on the subject to Mr. Eliot by the mail of the 8th of May.

---

* See Reports for 1862, pages 282 and 305.

The previous papers connected with the case were returned for my information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I entirely agree in the opinion of your Lordship that the Brazilian Government should be required to apply to this case at Pernambuco the principles of the decision which after remonstrance from your Lordship they have arrived at with respect to the illegal sequestration of property at Bahia.

I infer from the letter of the Marquis of Abrantes to Mr. Christie (25th of February, 1863), that this request of Her Majesty's Government will be assented to by the Brazilian Government.

With regard to the question of damage inflicted by a forced sale of the assets of the estate, referred to in the letter of Mr. Layard, it does not appear that the sale has as yet actually taken place; nor does Mr. Reed at present request, on behalf of his client, compensation upon this ground.

It would, therefore, I think, be sufficient if your Lordship apprised Her Majesty's Representative at Rio de Janeiro that this is a question which Her Majesty's Government may be hereafter compelled to consider.

I have &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 183.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 2.)

Temple, May 1, 1863.

My Lord,

GREAT BRITAIN.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st March last, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty, and a correspondence with the Colonial Office,* on a question asked by Vice-Admiral Milne as to the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of Great Britain over the Bahama Banks; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, with reference to our Reports of the 31st of October and 3rd of December last, on a similar question with regard to the reefs at Bermuda, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Vice-Admiral Milne.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not easy, even with the aid of the charts which have been furnished us, to answer precisely the questions raised by Admiral Milne and his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

In other words, though we have no doubt as to the general principles of the law which govern these questions, the application of them requires, to a certain extent at least, a practical knowledge of that locality, which we do not possess.

In answering these questions, moreover, we assume: 1st. That the Great Banks referred to have not been heretofore claimed, or in any sense occupied, as British territory. 2ndly. That (if in any part capable of being occupied and inhabited, which we do not suppose to be the case) they are uninhabited in fact.

Upon these assumptions we are of opinion that, as a general rule, British jurisdiction would not extend beyond the distance of three miles from an inhabited island or cay. This general proposition, however, must be subject to exceptions. For instance: any part of the Great Banks which may be inclosed within inhabited cays, though beyond the distance of three miles from each cay, might be considered within British jurisdiction. Any part of the Great Banks capable of sustaining a fort, which, if built, would command the entrance or threaten the security of an inhabited cay, might also be considered to be within British jurisdiction. In fact, having regard to the peculiar formation and position of these cays, we incline to adopt the expressions of Sir Frederic

---

* Admiralty, January 29, 1863; to Colonial Office, February 27 and March 18, 1863.

Rogers in his letter to Mr. Hammond, that "the conditions of contiguity and dependence must be considered separately in each case or group of cases."

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 184.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 4.)

My Lord,

Temple, May 1, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 22nd April ultimo, and its inclosures, from Mr. Robert Bowden, requesting Her Majesty's Government to claim for him from the United States' Government a compensation of 10,000*l.*, on account of his capture on board the "Peterhoff," and his subsequent ill-treatment by the United States' authorities, and to request that we would take Mr. Bowden's case into our consideration and favour Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to adopt Mr. Bowden's own estimate of the compensation which he claims, wholly unsupported as it is by any evidence. The claim for 10,000*l.* appears to us at present very extravagant. But at all events Mr. Bowden must set forth in a proper manner and form, accompanied by the necessary evidence, the exact pecuniary loss which he has sustained, and which he vaguely describes in his letter of the 22nd ultimo, as "the loss of profitable results to myself in the business in which I was engaged."

When the actual amount of positive loss has been ascertained, it will be for Her Majesty's Government to consider whether any, and if any what, addition should be made to the compensation (whatever that may be) proper to be claimed upon this ground, from consideration of the personal ill-treatment which Mr. Bowden alleges that he has suffered.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 185.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 5.)

My Lord,

Temple, May 4, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo,* stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th ultimo, reporting that the proposed reply respecting the sale of the "Sumter," with certain additions to it which we had made in the margin, was proper to be sent, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a note from Mr. Adams, dated the 22nd April, by way of rejoinder to that reply, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any further which should be made to Mr. Adams.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think your Lordship should reply to Mr. Adams to the effect that your Lordship has not stated any intention on the part of Her Majesty's Government to deviate in the case of the "Sumter" from any acknowledged principles of international law, or from the exposition of those principles hitherto given in Courts administering that law. But that, on the contrary, it is the firm intention of Her Majesty's Government, both in the case of the "Sumter" and in every other case, to abide by those principles which they have hitherto most scrupulously maintained during the whole course of the present war.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 119.

No. 186.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 7.)

My Lord,

Temple, May 6, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith, with reference to our Report of the 25th ultimo,* two further despatches received from Lord Lyons respecting the case of the "Peterhoff" (Nos. 321 and 322). That it appears from those despatches that the Government of the United States will not restore the vessel without trial, but that they have ordered the proceedings to be pushed forward without delay. And that it further appears that the mails on board the "Peterhoff" are forthwith to be forwarded to their destination, and that, pending an attempt which is about to be made by the Government of the United States to come to some general understanding on the subject with Her Majesty's Government, the mails of friendly Powers, on board captured vessels, will be forwarded in like manner.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether, under these circumstances, any further instructions should be sent to Lord Lyons than to watch the proceedings in the case of the "Peterhoff," and report the result. The previous papers were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that in the present circumstances Lord Lyons should be instructed to watch the proceedings in the case of the "Peterhoff," and to report the result, but that no further instructions should at present be sent to his Lordship in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 187.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 7.)

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, May 7, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that with reference to the Law Officers' Reports of the 22nd and 27th ultimo,† respecting the case of the "Dolphin," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a letter, dated the 29th April ultimo, from Mr. Grazebrook, in which, among other things, he calls attention to the fact that the "Dolphin," with a prize crew on board, had called at Havana; and Mr. Grazebrook contends that this is in itself a ground for her release, inasmuch as, he states, two prizes of the Confederate steamer "Sumter," with prize crews on board, having been driven by stress of weather into Cienfuegos, in Cuba, was claimed by the American authorities, "and restored on the ground that Spain was neutral, and that prizes were not to be taken into neutral ports."

Mr. Hammond also transmitted to me as bearing upon this question, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General in Cuba, dated the 17th of July,

---

* Page 132.

† Pages 125 and 134.

1863

1861 (No. 28), reporting the arrival at Cienfuegos of a number of prizes from the Confederate cruizer "Sumter," and a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid, of the 20th of June (No. 104) of that year, inclosing, in original and translation, a Royal Decree which had appeared in the "Madrid Gazette," announcing the neutrality of Spain in the contest between the Federals and the Confederates, and specifying the conditions upon which prizes were allowed to be taken into Spanish ports.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take Mr. Grazebrook's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a despatch from the Acting Consul-General in Cuba (No. 10), reporting the arrival of the "Dolphin" at Havana.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken Mr. Grazebrook's letter, &c., into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise that an answer should be sent to Mr. Grazebrook to this effect:—that he has been misinformed as to the legal consequences which are supposed to follow from the fact that the "Dolphin" touched at Havana, a neutral port, on her way to Key West, a belligerent port.

If the prizes made by the Confederate steamer "Sumter" were ever restored by Spanish authorities to the Federal owners, the circumstances must have been materially different from those which attended, according to Mr. Grazebrook's statement, the touching of the "Dolphin" at Havana. That as to that part of his letter which relates to injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon the captain and engineer, they are matters which may be properly inquired into at Key West, where the "Dolphin" appears now to be; and that Her Majesty's Government will send proper instructions to Her Majesty's Consul at Key West, relative to the investigation of these complaints.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 188.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 7.)

Doctors' Commons, May 7, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th May instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 2nd February last,* respecting the case of the "Telegraph," he was directed to return to me the previous papers, and a correspondence between Lord Lyons and Mr. Seward,† respecting the demand for compensation which I recommended should be claimed from the United States' Government on account of the detention of the "Telegraph," and the ill-treatment of the sailor W. Fisher; and to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon the reasons assigned by Mr. Seward for declining to give compensation in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the apology offered by Mr. Seward for the act of the captor, in compelling the papers of the "Telegraph" to be taken on board his ship, is satisfactory. The admission that such an act is illegal may, if the present war should continue, be of great importance. The American recognition of this principle of international law has not, during former wars, been always very certain or explicit.

I regret to say that, with regard to the other subjects of complaint, namely, the seizure of the vessel, and the placing the British seaman in irons, the answer of Mr. Seward appears to me unsatisfactory.

I am not quite certain whether Mr. Seward intends to found his defence of the captor, and his refusal to pay compensation, upon the ground that the "Telegraph" committed a breach of municipal or of international law. His letter seems to me designedly ambiguous in this respect. I must assume, however, that it has reference, as the demand had, to the law of nations. It is to be remembered, in the first place, that it is not competent to the belligerent to enforce fiscal or municipal regulations upon the neutral, by the exercise of the strictly belligerent right of visitation, search, or detention.

Mr. Seward justifies the seizure of this vessel by saying, "It seems to me that the United States could not accede to the demands of Her Majesty's Government in this case, without admitting that they have no right to forbid and prevent vessels under a neutral or friendly flag, even in a time of blockade and civil war, from landing, when and where they please, upon the American shores, for the purpose of rendering aid and assistance to insurgents, and to detain for examination vessels which infringe its established military and naval regulations."

I am at a loss to understand how this reasoning, be it ill or well founded, is to be applied to the particular case of the "Telegraph." That vessel has not even been accused of having rendered aid or assistance to insurgents; nor is it a question whether the United States have a right to forbid the subjects of friendly States from visiting their shores; but it is a question whether the severe rights of visitation, search, and detention which interfere with the general liberty of commerce, and which are conceded by neutral States to belligerents only, are not to be exercised according to acknowledged principles and precedents of the law of nations, and not according to the private military and naval regulations of the particular belligerent State.

In this case the captor, according to Mr. Seward, asserted "that it was illegal for the 'Telegraph' to deviate from her outward-bound voyage, and to enter the (Florida) Keys." Mr. Seward cannot mean to say that a neutral ship is not at liberty to deviate from her outward-bound voyage, if by so deviating she does not interfere with the belligerent rights of blockade. Such a doctrine would be, indeed, alarming to all neutral States. But there is no suggestion in this case that the "Telegraph" intended to break the blockade, that her cargo was suspicious, or her papers irregular. Moreover, when taken back to Key West, it turns out that her clearance was regular, and her conduct perfectly and in every respect innocent.

It would be indecent to suppose that the United States' Prize Courts would not have administered justice in this case, and, applying the recognized principles of maritime international law to the circumstances of it, have dismissed the "Telegraph" with her costs and damages.

With respect to placing a British sailor in irons for three days and three nights, the defence is that, while smarting under the provocation of the seizure of his ship, since admitted to have been perfectly innocent, the man swore, on board his own ship, when ordered to obey some directions of the captor, and that his own captain said he could not prevent him from doing so; whereupon he was taken out of his own ship and placed in irons on board the captor's ship for three days and three nights. It is said that it was apprehended that the man would do some act of violence, but no attempt to commit any act of the kind is alleged.

It is not pretended that any rescue was apprehended, and the belligerent has no right to expect that neutral States will allow their subjects to be treated with ignominy and a severity not far removed from cruelty, upon such slender grounds as these.

The answer of Mr. Seward, therefore, does not appear to me to be satisfactory, either as to the seizure of the ship or the treatment of the sailor.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 189.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 8.)

Temple, May 7, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an instruction which, in conformity with our Report of the 14th of April last,* your Lordship proposes to address to Her

---

* Page 41. † Lord Lyons, Nos. 222 and 325.

* Page 112.

1863

Majesty's Consul at Richmond respecting the ill-usage to which he states that British subjects are exposed under the Conscription Act of the Confederate States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that in requesting us to take this draft instruction into our consideration, he was directed by your Lordship to call our special attention to the concluding words of it, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the instruction is right and proper to be sent.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to add, by way of postscript, that he inclosed a further despatch and its inclosure which had just been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington on this subject (No. 302).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter is proper to be sent.

We also think that the proposed heading or preface to any protest it may be necessary to put forth, is correct.

With regard to the further despatch and inclosure from Washington, we have to observe that, in the present state of things, it would appear to us expedient that unaccredited Consular Agents should be sent to the Southern States in which there is no Consul. It would of course, so far as the protection of Her Majesty's subjects is concerned, be yet more desirable that accredited Consuls should (if possible) be sent to those States. But this appointment, as well as the question respecting the reception of Mr. Mason in this country, involves, or may involve, considerations of policy as to the relations of this country towards the Confederate States, which will no doubt present themselves to your Lordship's mind.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 190.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 8, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th of May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 22nd of April ultimo, from Mr. Worley, respecting the trade in British vessels at Nassau; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Worley.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise that a letter to the following effect be sent to Mr. Worley:—

That the war at present existing between the Federal and Confederate States in America does not render unlawful any traffic at any time lawful between Great Britain and any British Colony or Possession.

That the Federal and Confederate States are entitled to exercise the rights of belligerents, and that Great Britain and all other neutral States are under an obligation to recognize those rights, however severely they may press for a time upon their commerce.

That no belligerent right is more indisputable than that of visiting neutral vessels upon the high seas; and if this visitation should furnish legal grounds of suspicion that a vessel is about to attempt to break a lawfully-constituted blockade, or to carry contraband to the enemy, the belligerent may lawfully detain and send her to the Prize Court for adjudication.

That if this right should be in a few instances vexatiously or inconsiderately exercised, Her Majesty's Government would expect that the Prize Court, which is bound to administer justice according to recognized principles and precedents of international law, would, as far as possible, give redress to the owners of the vessel by condemning the captor in costs and damages.

Perhaps your Lordship, having regard to the number and nature of these applications, and the probable publicity which will be given to your Lordship's reply, might think it expedient to add upon this subject the following paragraphs:—

If vessels belonging to Her Majesty's subjects, bonâ fide engaged in a lawful trade between different ports of Her Majesty's dominions or elsewhere, were habitually and designedly seized by the cruizers of the belligerent, upon suspicion not alleged to be founded upon legal grounds, Her Majesty's Government would of course take, with promptitude, the proper measures to vindicate the honour of the Crown, and the rights and liberties of Her Majesty's subjects.

Her Majesty's Government, however, cannot, with reference to the application of Mr. Worley, and to others of a like character, leave out of their consideration the fact that, unhappily, several British vessels, with apparently lawful papers, and destinations for the British Bahamas, have been found, upon a searching investigation, to have been really destined, and often with cargoes of contraband, for the closely-adjoining ports of America, blockaded by the belligerent fleet, and to have been, in consequence, both lawfully detained and lawfully condemned.

It is obvious that this fact has, not altogether unreasonably, operated injuriously to the owners of vessels which were both ostensibly and really destined to the British Bahamas.

That Her Majesty's Government must altogether decline to instruct Her Majesty's Officers of Customs to grant any certificates of the kind required. Such a course would, for obvious reasons, be inexpedient and improper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 191.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 8, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the papers as marked in the margin,[*] respecting the arrest and continued imprisonment by the United States' authorities of Dr. W. B. Booth, a British subject resident at New Orleans; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the parole to do nothing inimical to the United States, which General Banks requires Dr. Booth to give, does not appear to me, in the circumstances, unreasonable, or in any way to conflict with that gentleman's allegiance to Her Majesty.

The course which Lord Lyons and Mr. Consul Coppell have pursued in the matter appears to me to be proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 192.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 9.)

My Lord, Temple, May 8, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th April ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 6th and 26th September last,[†] upon the case of the British steamer "Adela," captured by the United States' cruizer "Quaker City," off Abaco, he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter dated the 16th April ultimo, from Mr. Forwood, inclosing a certified copy of the sentence of condemnation pronounced upon the "Adela," in the [*] Mr. Lindsay, March 20; to Lord Lyons, No. 142; Lord Lyons, Nos. 173, 255, and 306.

[†] See Reports for 1862, pages 216 and 229.

Prize Court at Key West, together with a statement of the case, at the end of which Mr. Forwood urges Her Majesty's Government to adopt steps for obtaining the restitution of the "Adela," without requiring any further proceedings to be taken in the United States' Courts; and to request that we would take this case again into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 18th and 28th of April ultimo, transmitting an instruction to be sent to Lord Lyons (No. 174), and a further letter, dated the 27th April ultimo, from Mr. Forwood, respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the extract in the statement (page 2) from the Report of the United States' Commander Fraily, to the United States' Secretary of the Navy, seems to require a strong remonstrance on the part of Lord Lyons to the United States' Government.

According to the unquestionable evidence furnished by that extract, this British neutral ship was seized upon a suspicion not founded upon the state of the vessel herself or her papers at the time of capture, but upon statements made, by those who had never seen the vessel, to the captor. Such conduct is a plain and grave violation of the rights of neutrals, and an act of oppression on the part of the belligerent to which no independent State can submit.

The Law of Nations requires that the neutral shall submit to the visitation and search of the belligerent, and authorizes the belligerent (subject to the penalty of costs and damages for an improper seizure), to take the vessel, found upon visitation and search to bear strong primâ facie marks of unlawful trading, into port for adjudication; but the Law of Nations does not give the belligerent the arbitrary right of seizing any neutral he pleases upon hearsay evidence, or upon evidence not derived from or connected with the actual state and condition of the vessel; nor does it impose upon the neutral any obligation to submit to such seizure.

If it be true that, under such circumstances, the Judge condemned the vessel without assigning any ground for so doing, merely observing that "in any case there would be an appeal," we think that this also furnishes a further ground of complaint. We can scarcely conceive this to be an accurate Report, though the passing formal sentence of condemnation without reasons, which is all that appears in this case, is a very unusual and unsatisfactory course for the Judge of a Prize Court to adopt. But at present we have not before us the evidence upon which the Judge proceeded, and in the absence of such evidence we cannot presume that he was guilty of the flagrant injustice of throwing the burden of disproof upon the captured ship, instead of requiring the captor to prove his case against the ship. Such a proceeding would be at variance with one of the most valuable principles of prize law, and would destroy the principal safeguard of the neutral in his attempt to obtain justice in a foreign Court.

An appeal, however, has been asserted, and is about to be prosecuted to a superior tribunal, and we think that Her Majesty's Government should wait for the decision of that tribunal before it gives any further instructions in this matter; especially as it would seem that the order for the appraisement and sale of the ship in the meantime was made by the consent of both the parties before the Court.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 193.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 9.)

Doctors' Commons, May 9, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Charleston (No. 58, April 15), inclosing papers respecting a claim against the United States' Government put forward by Mr. Alexander Nicol, a British subject resident at Kingston, North Carolina, on account of the wasteful and wanton destruction of his property by the United States' soldiery; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this appears to me be a case which Lord Lyons might be instructed to bring to the attention of the United States' Government, and to ask from the justice of that Government compensation for the injury most wantonly inflicted upon a British subject.

It is distinguished in principle from those cases in which neutral property has suffered in common with the property of native subjects from a general bombardment of a town, or from the regular march of troops, or from any of the inevitable incidents of war. It seems to have been a deliberate act of private plunder resulting from, or encouraged by, lax discipline, and to have been recognized as such by the Federal Provost Marshal, and it is an act for which the strictly neutral and inoffensive conduct of Mr. Nicol afforded not the slightest pretext.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 195.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 12.)

Temple, May 11, 1863.

My Lord,

FRANCE.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th of March last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* concerning a claim put forward by the Director of the postal service of the "Messageries Impériales" to certain harbour accommodation at the Island of Mauritius.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive that this claim is founded upon the Postal Convention between this country and France, of which a copy was therewith inclosed; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the validity of the claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the claim of the Director of the Postal Service of the Messageries Impériales to harbour accommodation and other privileges at the Island of Mauritius cannot be sustained by reference to the Postal Convention of September 24, 1856, between Great Britain and France. We agree with the opinion expressed in the letter of Mr. F. Hill to Sir Frederick Rogers, dated January 26, 1863, viz., that the privileges of that Convention are confined to mail-packets and other vessels conveying mails between England and France.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 196.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 12.)

Doctors' Commons, May 11, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th May instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 31st March ultimo,† upon the case of the British steamer "Magicienne," he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 6th May instant, from Messrs. Lowndes, Bate, and Co., inclosing a statement of the claim of the owners of that vessel; and to request that I would take this statement into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon. The previous papers and the instruction to Lord Lyons in this case were also inclosed,* and Mr. Hammond was pleased to transmit for my perusal the despatches, noted in the margin,† which have been received from Lord Lyons respecting the case of the "Magicienne" since the date of my former Report.

---

* Colonial Office, January 21, January 31, and March 11, 1863.

† Page 95.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have thought it right to confer with the Registrar of the Admiralty as to the scale and principle upon which compensation was made to neutrals during the Russian war by our Government when neutral vessels were released, and the captors condemned in costs and damages; and I find that they proceeded in ascertaining the amount of damage occasioned by detention upon much the same principles as those which guided them in the award of damages in civil cases in which the detention had been occasioned by a collision. I will apply this doctrine to the demand made by the owners of the "Magicienne."

The main principle upon which damages have been awarded to neutrals in this country has been to reject all problematical losses, and to accept only such as are proved to have actually taken place in consequence of the detention.

The application of this principle is fatal to the first item of demand made by the owners of the "Magicienne," and in accordance with it the 500*l.* claimed for damages for the seizure which was pronounced by the Court at Key West to be illegal would be struck out.

The first subject of inquiry in these cases is the tonnage of the vessel: the "Magicienne" appears from the protest to have been 229 tons.

The next question is the nature of the cargo, which, in this case, consisted of gunny-bags and Manchester goods, as is stated in the letter of the owners of the 23rd of March last.

The next question is the number of the crew, which appears to have been a captain, a mate, five sailors, and two apprentices.

I find that upon a vessel of this tonnage, cargo, and crew, the demurrage (under which which term would be included the wages of the men, their provisions, and the loss of interest to the owners) would be at about the rate of 3*l.* 10*s.* per diem, which for 46 days, would amount to 161*l.*; add 65*l.* for stores consumed by prize-crew, would make 161*l.* + 65*l.* = 226*l.*, instead of 460*l.* + 65*l.* = 525*l.*

As to the damage done to the ship's sails, this must, of course, be proved to amount, as alleged, to 45*l.*

The next item as to the expense of getting a new crew is, in principle, allowable, inasmuch as six of the men were sent to Boston, and three only were taken to Key West, where the vessel was released. The amount of this expense in procuring a new crew must also be a matter of proof.

The legal expenses (under the head of payment to Mr. Gerard) are also, in principle, allowable, and probably, though they do not seem excessive, would have to be taxed by the Registrar of the Prize Court.

As to the remaining, and largest, item, viz., "estimated loss upon homeward freight from Matamoros by the ship not being out in time, whereby she would lose 1*d.* per lb. on a cotton cargo, 800*l.*,"—this item is also, in principle, allowable; but proof must be given both that the cotton was ready for the owners at Matamoros, and as to the price of it at the time when the vessel was seized, and also as to whether or not cotton could have been procured at Matamoros after the vessel had been released, and at what price, and the amount of damage would be awarded with reference to these facts.

It seems to me that it will be expedient to determine whether in this, and in subsequent cases, the demand is to be referred by the United States' Government to the Registrars of their Prize Courts, assisted by merchants, or whether such claims are to be settled in this country in some manner agreed upon between Her Majesty's Government and the Minister for the United States. Of course, this is a matter as to which the decision must mainly rest with the United States' Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Messrs. Cox and Baker, March 23; Consul Archibald, Nos. 47 and 49; to Lord Lyons, No. 172.

† Lord Lyons, Nos. 273, 274, 290, and 343.

No. 197.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 12.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, May 11, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion upon the following point:—Whether British subjects serving as sailors on board any Federal or Confederate man-of-war in a British harbour can be prosecuted under the Foreign Enlistment Act?

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, British subjects serving on board any Federal or Confederate man-of-war act in direct violation of the 2nd section of the Foreign Enlistment Act (59 Geo. III, cap. 69), which prohibits in express terms the serving on board ships of war in the service of foreign States, &c., &c. Such persons cannot be taken out of the ships of war in which they are serving; but being found on shore in British ports they may be apprehended under a Magistrate's warrant duly obtained, and committed for trial at the assizes or sessions, as prescribed by the 4th section of Act. The offence is a misdemeanour, punishable, on conviction, with fine and imprisonment (section 2).

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 198.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 12.)

BRAZIL.

Temple, May 12, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the Brazilian Minister in this country, setting forth certain demands which his Government make on Her Majesty's Government on account of the measures in the shape of reprisals which Her Majesty's Government were lately compelled to take owing to the course pursued by the Brazilian Government in the cases of the "Prince of Wales" and the "Forte."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Her Majesty's Government have determined to refuse these demands as not justified by what has occurred, and to transmit to us the draft of the reply which your Lordship proposed to address to M. Moreira's note, and, at the same time, to request that we would take this draft into our consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion whether the answer proposed to be returned would be sufficient, or whether it would be desirable that your Lordship should enter more into argument on the merits of the case.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to add that your Lordship apprehended that no real injury had been done to the vessels detained, and Her Majesty's Government could not give damages and make excuses without confessing to a wrong which had not been committed.

Mr. Hammond also inclosed the correspondence regarding the cases of the "Prince of Wales" and "Forte," in case we should have occasion to refer to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have taken the draft of the reply which your Lordship proposes to address to M. Moreira's note into our consideration, and, subject to the two alterations which we have made and submit for your Lordship's consideration, we think the answer proposed to be returned will be sufficient.

1863

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 199.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 13.)

My Lord, Temple, May 12, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 25th of February last* upon the case of the "Labuan," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, two despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 272 and 316 of the 17th April), inclosing copies of his further correspondence with Mr. Seward respecting this case; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer upon Mr. Seward's note of the 9th ultimo, justifying the course pursued by the United States' Government in respect of the claim for damages.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 332 of the 21st April), relating to the case of the "Labuan," and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the papers on the same case forwarded to us on the 2nd instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the present state of circumstances we think it reasonable that the award of the Prize Court as to costs and damages should be awaited before any further steps are taken by Lord Lyons in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 200.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 13.)

My Lord, Temple, May 12, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th ultimo,† respecting the prisoner in confinement at Gibraltar on the charge of having murdered the senior officer of the Confederate war-steamer "Sumter," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers as marked in the margin,‡ from which we should perceive that it has been determined to send the prisoner to Bermuda, on board Her Majesty's ship "Shannon," and to detain him there pending an arrangement which Lord Lyons has been instructed to make with the United States' Government for his being landed from one of Her Majesty's ships at a Confederate port; that as it may be expected that the prisoner will be detained for some little time at Bermuda, the Admiralty have suggested that, instead of the prisoner being confined for an indefinite time on board Her Majesty's ship "Shannon," the Governor of Bermuda should be instructed to take the prisoner into his custody, pending the reference to the United States' Government; but that before requesting the Duke of Newcastle to issue instructions to the Governor of Bermuda to that effect, your Lordship wished to be advised whether the Governor would have any right to detain the prisoner.

Mr. Hammond was consequently to request that we would take this point into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the point submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion it will not be safe or expedient to land the prisoner at Bermuda, although merely for the purpose of detention, and of being forwarded on convenient opportunity to some port of the Confederates, to be there given up to the authorities for trial.

The circumstances as to the custody of the accused man are necessarily singular and exceptional, and we think that the Governor would not, in strict law, have any right to detain him as a prisoner; and therefore that it would be improper to expose either the Governor or the gaoler at Bermuda to the risk of having the technical legality of the British custody decided against him, and the prisoner possibly discharged on application to the tribunals there. There is, of course, little or no risk of any such question being raised, so long as the prisoner remains a close prisoner on board of a man-of-war; and the dictates of common justice require that, if possible, he should be detained and handed over to the Confederate Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 201.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 13, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 337), inclosing papers relative to a claim against the United States' Government, on account of unjust imprisonment and consequent loss of health and property, put forward by Richard Ranger, a British subject at New Orleans, and to request that I would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from these papers that Richard Ranger was imprisoned for thirty-one days upon the verbal order of the Provost Marshal at New Orleans; that no definite or distinct charge was ever brought against him; that he was finally released in a manner which must be considered as equivalent to an admission that he was an innocent man and never ought to have been imprisoned.

Mr. Coppell's letter to him on the 19th of December was not judicious in the existing state of circumstances at New Orleans, but it furnished no justification for the imprisonment.

That imprisonment was no doubt injurious to Ranger's health, and to his means of gaining a livelihood.

As far as I can form an opinion upon the papers before me, I think that Ranger is entitled to moderate compensation for the unjust imprisonment and the injuries incident to it. I have not sufficient materials for forming a judgment as to the exact amount of compensation which should be demanded.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 58.

† Page 131.

‡ To Admiralty, April 29; Admiralty, May 1; to Admiralty, May 1; to War Office, May 1; Admiralty, May 2; to Lord Lyons, No. 236, May 2; Admiralty, Private, May 2; to Consul Moore, No. 5, May 2, 1863.

No. 202.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 15.)

Doctors Cammons, May 14, 1863.

My Lord,

PORTUGAL. I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 7th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon (No. 7 of the 23rd January) asking your Lordship's opinion on points in connection with the so-called "industrial tax" levied in Portugal on native and foreign merchants; and to request that I would take this case into consideration with reference to the Ist Article of the Treaty with Portugal of the 3rd of July, 1842, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Sir Arthur Magenis' despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon has rightly complained to the Portuguese Government of the excess of the "industrial tax" above the stipulated 20 per cent., provided always that the English version of the Treaty be, as it appears to have been, recognized as binding upon the Portuguese Government. I say this because I find on examining the Portuguese version of the Article which is explanatory of the Ist Article (6 Hertslet, 624), that the copulative "and" stands in the Portuguese where the disjunctive "or" stands in the English Treaty; "será de 20 por cento a renda das suas casas, lojes, e (not ou) armazems," while "shall be 20 per cent. on the rent of their houses, shops, or warehouses" is the English version. The difference may possibly be material in this case; but I assume at present that it has not been considered so. I think also that Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon is well founded in his objection to the additional tax imposed, on the ground that these firms carry on the agencies of Insurance Companies. The Treaty imposed a tax on British subjects, from which it recites that "they have hitherto enjoyed special exemption;" it must be construed, therefore, strictly as against the Portuguese Government; and I find no mention in the Treaty of any category under which these agencies can be holden to be taxable. I should here observe that I do not clearly collect from the despatch of Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon whether the Tribunal of the Treasury has or has not refused to hear the appeal of the British merchants; if the latter be the case. it has clearly violated the provisions of the Ist Article of the Treaty.

As to the question put by Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon as to "whether, when the firms consist of more than one merchant, the house-rents of the several partners should form the total on which the tax is to be levied?" I think this question should be answered in the affirmative, and that the practice which has hitherto prevailed on this point is right.

I have, &c.
(Sinned) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 203.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 15.)

Doctors' Commons, May 14, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES. I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th May instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 6th ultimo,* he was directed to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 350), inclosing a copy of a Memorandum in which is recorded his conversation with Mr. Seward respecting the late Act of Congress relating to habeas corpus; and also a further despatch from Lord Lyons on the same subject (No. 361); and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I observe that Mr. Seward does not rely upon, or at least does not cite, any legal authority for his position, that if the proviso in the Act be in conflict with Treaties, the Courts of Law "will regard the Treaties as the supreme law of the land," and I cannot but entertain grave doubts as to the accuracy of this statement. In the statement which accompanies the Memorandum, it is said that the conversations between Lord Lyons and Mr. Seward "are believed to be correctly set forth;" a form of expression which is looser than might have been desired.

---

* Page 107.

Mr. Seward has informed Lord Lyons that the Memorandum has the sanction of the President. It would be expedient, I think, that this fact should form a part of the written record of the proceeding. Mr. Seward would probably not object to write a formal letter to this effect. It does not occur to me that any other precautionary measure can now be taken.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 204.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 15, 1863.

BRAZIL. I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th May instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 23rd of January last,* he was directed to transmit to me therewith a further letter from Mr. Vereker, Her Majesty's Consul for Rio Grande do Sul, inclosing a Memorandum giving full details on the case of the British ship "Canrobert," on the conduct of the Brazilian authorities in laying an embargo on his property, and on his own proceedings in connection with the case; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observation I may have to make thereon.

The previous papers in this case were annexed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a perusal of the voluminous report of Mr. Vereker does not induce me to advise your Lordship to make any alteration in the despatch upon this subject to Mr. Eliot.

It is clear to me that Mr. Vereker suffered himself both to become too much of a partisan in these proceedings, and to mix injudiciously and improperly the functions of an advocate with those appertaining to his judicial office as Consul.

The Brazilian Court of Commerce appears to me to have rightly holden him to be personally responsible for the administration of these funds. At the same time I see no reason to doubt that the intentions of Mr. Vereker were good, and, perhaps, in his zeal to discharge the duties of his office he unwittingly overstepped the proper limits of it. There are also in these papers traces of considerable personal irritability, incident probably to a weakened state of health, which may have contributed to this error.

I would humbly suggest that he might be apprised that while Her Majesty's Government saw no reason to doubt the integrity of his motives, or his zeal to discharge the duties of his office, he appeared to have brought himself into unnecessary conflict with the Brazilian Courts of Law, and to have taken too personal and individual a part in these proceedings.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 205.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 18.)

My Lord, Temple, May 15, 1863.

UNITED STATES. WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th May instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 6th instant* upon the case of the "Peterhoff," he was directed to transmit to us, for our information, a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 342), from which we should learn what has further passed respecting this case, and that the mails on board that vessel have been delivered to Her Majesty's Consul at New York, to be forwarded to their destination.

---

* Page 27.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the decision respecting the mail-bags is satisfactory, and should be accepted without comment by Her Majesty's Government; and that the abstract right to send the "Peterhoff" to be tried before the Prize Court cannot be gainsayed.

We would suggest that it might be desirable for Her Majesty's Government to be in possession of an authentic copy of the Judgment on the subject of the mail-bags, for reference on any future occasions.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 206.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 18.)

My Lord, Temple, May 15, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us, for our information, the draft of an instruction which, in conformity with our Report of the 6th instant* was addressed to Lord Lyons on the 9th instant (No. 226), directing him to watch the case of the "Peterhoff," and to report the result to Her Majesty's Government; and at the same time to transmit a confidential despatch just received from Lord Lyons (No. 357, April 27), in which he states the nature of certain information which the United States' Government are said to have obtained respecting the "Peterhoff," likely to lead to her condemnation; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it would be right to send for Mr. Spence, the owner of the "Peterhoff," and to communicate to him confidentially the information thus reported by Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not advise your Lordship to make any confidential communication, in consequence of the despatch from Lord Lyons to the owner of the "Peterhoff."

It appears to us that such a course might hereafter be productive of embarrassment to Her Majesty's Government in this as well as in other cases of a similar kind.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 207.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 18.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 17, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 9th May instant, and its inclosure, from Messrs. Saton and Co., stating the circumstances under which they have been defrauded by Messrs. Souza, Riezenberger, and Co., of Bahia, in connection with the case of a barque called the "Maria," which there is good reason to believe was scuttled and sunk off the Azores, and requesting that Her Majesty's Minister at Washington or Her Majesty's Consul at New York may be instructed to aid them in the measures which they are taking to bring to justice Mr. Riezenberger, who has absconded from Bahia, and is now in the United States; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether, under the circumstances stated in the inclosed letter, Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in instructing Lord Lyons or Consul Archibald to give assistance, and if so to what extent, for the prosecution of Mr. Riezenberger.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion Her Majesty's Government might give instructions to Lord Lyons to support generally Mr. Peter Herman Berndis, in any legal endeavour made by that gentleman to bring Riezenberger to justice; but the manner in which, and the limits within which, such support is to be given, should be left entirely to the discretion of Lord Lyons, who would, of course, take counsel upon the subject with the legal adviser of the Legation.

Questions of great difficulty will probably arise out of the case.

The answer, therefore, to Messrs. Saton should be to the effect that Lord Lyons will be desired by Her Majesty's Government to assist, if he finds upon full consideration of the circumstances that he can properly do so, Mr. Berndis in his endeavour to bring Mr. Riezenberger to justice.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 208.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 20.)

My Lord, Temple, May 20, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th May instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 2nd ultimo,* he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further letter dated the 22nd April ultimo, from Mr. Potts, urging his claim for compensation on account of his imprisonment by the United States' Government, and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether we see any reason to alter the opinion we have expressed with regard to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to alter the opinion which we had the honour to express in our former Report. Mr. Potts states, by way of defence for his breach of faith in fraudulently shipping the cargo for England, that the order of the United States' Marshal empowered him "to remove the cargo to whatever place he might think fit." This is an untrue representation. The order gave him permission to store at whatever place he thought fit, and provided that the storeage should be paid by him, and an inventory kept of the bales and packages delivered to him.

To pretend that under this order he had permission "to remove" the cargo to England is dishonest. It is quite clear that he had no such permission, and he must have been, and we think the evidence shows that he was, perfectly aware that he had not.

Upon the general question we must refer to our former Report, to which we adhere.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 143.

* Page 101.

1863

No. 209.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 21.)

Temple, May 20, 1863.

My Lord,

China.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th May instant, stating that with reference to our letters of the 11th of November and 9th of December last,* relative to the measures to be taken for preventing the Chinese insurgents from being supplied with arms and ammunition by British subjects, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter dated the 24th April ultimo, from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Acting Governor of Hong Kong, together with a copy of a Proclamation issued by him, prohibiting the exportation of military stores from Hong Kong.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the Duke of Newcastle requested to be informed whether the Acting Governor should be allowed to grant permits for the exportation of arms on receiving proof that the applicants were duly authorized on behalf of the Imperial Government of China, and it was added that his Grace proposed to approve the omission in the Proclamation of the prohibition to export "provisions or any sort of victual which may be used as food."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that we would take the Acting Governor's Proclamation into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion upon it generally, as well as upon the points to which attention was specially called in the Colonial Office letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Acting Governor should be allowed to grant permits for the exportation of arms to applicants proved to be authorized on behalf of the Imperial Government, and that the omission of the prohibition "to export provision or any sort of victual which may be used as food" appears to us to be expedient.

The Proclamation appears to us generally to be proper, and calculated, as far as the circumstances will allow, to attain its object.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 210.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 22.)

Doctors' Commons, May 20, 1863.

My Lord,

France.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letters from Baron Gros, the French Ambassador at this Court,† complaining of the proceedings of the Governor of Lagos, and claiming compensation from Her Majesty's Government for losses alleged to have been sustained by French subjects, arising out of the destruction of the town of Epé by an armed party acting under the orders of the Governor of Lagos.

Mr. Layard was also to transmit to me the papers, as marked in the margin,‡ which have been received from the Governor of Lagos (who reports to this Department in his capacity as Consul for the Bight of Benin), and from the Colonial Office and Admiralty, from which I should learn the circumstances which have given rise to the French Ambassador's representations; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon the French claims now brought forward, and generally as to the claims of neutrals in cases of bombardment.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the claim of the French Ambassador is not well founded. It appears to me to be sustained neither by reference to the facts of the particular case, nor by reference to the general law applicable to facts of this description.

Not by reference to the particular facts of the case,—for the inference which I draw, from all the statements before me, is that, in the first place, the necessity for the attack upon Epé was mainly created by the intrigues of French traders at that place with Possoo; in the next place, that a fair opportunity was given to them to remove their property; and in the last place, that it is most probable that they availed themselves of this opportunity.

Not by reference to the general law applicable to such cases,—for it is, in my opinion, a clear proposition of international law that a belligerent who is obliged to bombard the town of his enemy is neither to be deprived of this jus belli by the fact that neutral property may be therein, nor to be afterwards compelled to make compensation for property so destroyed, because it was upon the occasion inevitably mixed up with the res hostium upon which the bombardment was intended to take effect.

It was mainly upon this principle that my predecessor in office reported against Mr. Platt's claim (July 15, 1856), whose property was destroyed at Kertch (a case of very great, though necessary, hardship); and that I had the honour to report (26th December, 1862, and the 20th February, 1863), in accordance with Reports of my predecessor (see March 26, October 15, and November 2, 1857) to your Lordship against the claim of the Spanish Consul-General at Odessa, to be compensated for the destruction, during the Crimean war, of his property near Kertch.

I think it right to notice, though my opinion is not specially asked upon the point, that I do not understand upon what authority Mr. Freeman instituted the blockade of the Egbas (Inclosure 1 in No. 6 of the 8th March, 1863) at Porto Novo, and invited the French to assist him in maintaining it. It is of great importance (even in this semi-barbarous place) that no English authority should be given to the proposition that a blockade can exist without war; and I do not find that at the time of this so-called blockade there was any war being carried on.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 211.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received May 22.)

Temple, May 21, 1863.

My Lord,

Russia.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th May instant, stating that, with reference to our letter of the 2nd ultimo,* in which we suggested that certain questions should be put to the Russian Ambassador with regard to the date of the Russian bonds which were negotiated by Messrs. Rothschild, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note, dated the 30th April ultimo, from Baron Brunnow, containing further information thereupon; and to request that we would take this note into our consideration, together with the former papers in the case, inclosed therewith, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the Commissioners of Stamps have no just claim to retain the duty paid by Messrs. Rothschild on the bonds in question, and paid under protest, on the ground of the "date" of those bonds; for either they are undated, as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in their Report of the 11th December, 1862, considered them to be, or their date is the 1st May,

---

* See Reports for 1862, pages 274 and 309.

† Memorandum from the Marquis de Cadore; Baron Gros, April 27 and May 2, 1863; to Baron Gros, May 7, 1863.

‡ Colonial Office, January 8 and April 20, 1863; Admiralty, April 13, 1863; Memorandum, Foreign Office, May 12, 1863; Consul Freeman, No. 6, March 8, 1863.

* Page 100.

1862; in either of which cases the statute is equally inapplicable under the head of "date."

The question remains, were the bonds "signed" after the 23rd June, 1862? Before returning a definitive answer to this question, we should desire to possess the further information which his Excellency Baron Brunnow in his last note to your Lordship expresses his willingness to endeavour to obtain, namely, what length of time was required for the printing of the bonds issued under the inscription of the 1st May, 1862; or, perhaps, the better form of questions would be (in substance), when the printing commenced, when it was concluded, and whether the Russian Government have the means of knowledge, as regards the particular intermediate dates at which particular bonds were actually printed. On these questions being answered, the point which has been raised may be determined.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 212.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 22.)

Temple, May 21, 1863.

My Lord,

GREECE.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Major Stuart, Her Majesty's Consul at Janina (No. 10, April 14), inclosing copies of a correspondence with the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands relative to the complaint of Mr. G. Manetta, of Corfu, that Major Stuart had refused to act judicially in the manner requested by Mr. Manetta in regard to a bill of exchange. He was also pleased to inclose a copy of a Report made by Sir Henry Storks to the Duke of Newcastle on the same subject; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the proceedings of the Consul, and as to the course which he should now adopt.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, according to the English law, it is not essential to the character of a bill of exchange that it should be negotiable at all. But it is essential to the negotiability of ("per rendere girabile") such a bill (between all persons except the Queen or Government) that it should be payable to order or bearer, or that some equivalent words should be used authorizing the payee to assign or transfer the same to third persons. Although, without such words, the bill be not transferable by indorsement (as in the case before us) so, at least, as to give an action to the indorsee against other parties to the bill, yet the indorsement does give an action against the payee himself, because, in legal effect, it amounts to the drawing of a bill in favour of the indorsee against the drawee, and every indorser of a bill is in the nature of a new drawer.

In this case, however, it appears that the indorsee of a bill not (according to the English rule) negotiable, desired to protest against the original drawee or acceptor; and, according to the English law, this protest would be unavailing.

But we are not certain, from the statements before us, that the law of the Ionian States is identical with the English law; and Mr. Consul Stuart is certainly wrong in supposing that "there cannot, in fact, exist among nations or communities any difference of law and form as to bills of exchange:" differences both in law and form have certainly existed, and, we believe, still do exist, as to these instruments, in England and France. Indeed the law, even of Scotland, differs from that of England, upon the precise point involved in this case: for, in Scotland, the words "or order" are not necessary; and a bill or note is negotiable, and may be effectually endorsed by the payee without those or any equivalent words (see Chitty on Bills, 9th edition, page 159).

At all events, we think that the Consul does not act judicially, but ministerially, in matters of this description, and that he ought, in the first instance, to have accepted and communicated the protest on this bill of exchange, as he appears at last to have done.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 213.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 22.)

My Lord, Temple, May 21, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd of March,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our information, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 347), inclosing copies of his correspondence with the Spanish Minister and with Mr. Seward respecting the case of the "Blanche;" and to request that we would return these papers after perusal, accompanied with our observations, should we have any to offer upon them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the additional papers transmitted to us in this case do not appear to us to call for any special observation, except that the delay on the part of the United States' Government to grant redress in so plain a case of great wrong has reached in our opinion the utmost limits.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 214.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 22.)

My Lord, Temple, May 22, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 30th ultimo† upon the case of the "Granite City," and also with reference to that Officer's Reports of the 15th November, 1862, 4th of February, and 14th of April last,‡ respecting the proposed sale of the British steamer "Bermuda," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers as marked in the margin,§ respecting the appropriation by the United States' authorities of the "Granite City," before any decree of condemnation has been pronounced upon the vessel; and he was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon this proceeding, viewed, whether with reference to the power asserted to be inherent in the Prize Court, of directing such transfer of prize property, or to the Act of the last session of Congress specially conferring that authority.

The previous papers in the case of the "Bermuda," and the volume containing the Prize Act of last session, were inclosed for reference.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 12th and 20th instant, transmitting a further despatch from Lord Lyons respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Page 65. † Page 137.

‡ See Reports for 1862, page 281: and ante, pages 45 and 114.

§ Consul Archibald, No. 78, April 14, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 323, April 17, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 237, May 2, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 333, April 21, and No. 358, April 27, 1863.

1863

That the question before us relates exclusively, it is important to observe, to the sale of neutral vessels captured and brought into port. With reference to this class of prize, the reason of the thing, the best institutional writers, and the practice of Prize Courts, agree in establishing the general principle that the property in the captured vessel does not pass from the owner to the captor, except by a sentence of condemnation pronounced by the proper Prize Court.

The same authorities agree that, nevertheless, the Judge of that Court may, by the exercise of his own discretion, with or without the consent of parties, direct that, pendente lite, and before a sentence of condemnation, the captured ship or cargo may be sold, if it be proved upon the authority of competent and skilled persons, that either of them be in what is technically termed a "perishable" condition, that is, in a condition in which the property will become seriously deteriorated by delay.

This exercise of discretion in prize cases is similar to that which the Court of Admiralty exercises in cases of a purely civil character.

It is important to bear this practice in mind, because it is by the light which it furnishes, that the language of the English statute, 17th Vict, cap. 18, sect. 24, must be construed. By that section, "whenever it appears desirable, either from the nature of the property, the probable length of the proceedings, or any other sufficient cause, that the ship, vessel, goods, or merchandize, or any part thereof, should be sold," the Judge may order the property to be properly appraised, and sold, the proceeds being lodged with the Government. "Any other sufficient cause" means, cause ejusdem generis, a cause found in the interests of the ship, of which the Court is Trustee, not in the necessities or convenience of the captor or his Government; and as a matter of fact there is no record in the English Prize Court, of a neutral vessel sold before a sentence, unless in a perishable condition, or with consent of parties.

The 25th section of the English statute further provides that the Judge may allow the vessel to be delivered up to the claimant (that is, the original owner) on his giving security to the captor.

The 26th section provides that the Judge may order, after a sentence of condemnation, the vessel to be sold.

Therefore the English law and practice agrees with that of other States, in affording no warrant for the sale of a captured neutral vessel, before a sentence of condemnation, except in the two instances of—

1. The vessel being in a perishable condition;
2. Of the consent of claimant and captor.

We do not think it necessary to enter at length into the doctrine of the right of pre-emption, exercised by us, as by other States, when belligerents.

It is enough to observe that this right has been confined to the case of provisions or munitions bound to the enemy's ports (the "Haabet," 2 Robinson, 174).

The statute passed by Congress, in so far as it purports to authorize the taking of any captured neutral vessel before adjudication, by the Secretary of the Navy of the United States, for the use of the Government, is therefore a novelty for which no warrant is to be found in accredited authorities, in usage, or in the principles of international law, while it is manifestly open to the objections stated in the former Reports of the Queen's Advocate.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Notes to the Opinion.

"UNTIL the capture becomes invested with the character of prize, by a sentence of condemnation, the right of property is in abeyance, or in a state of legal sequestration. It cannot be alienated or disposed of, but the possession of it by the Government of the captor is a trust for the benefit of those who may be ultimately entitled. This salutary rule, and one so necessary to check irregular conduct and individual outrage, has been long established in the English Admiralty, and it is now everywhere recognized as the law and practice of nations."—Kent (part 1, lecture 5), vol. i, 110 (103).

"Si la prise est déclarée bonne, la vente en sera faite par devant le juge de l'Amirauté, et le prix en sera délivré aux impétrans, &c.

"Si la prise est déclarée bonne.—Or, elle ne peut être déclarée telle, qu'autant qu'elle aura été faite dans les règles et sur des sujets de l'Etat qui aura refusé de réparer le tort à l'occasion duquel les lettres de représailles auront été accordées.

"Ce n'est aussi qu'au Conseil des Prises, où préside M. l'Amiral, que la prise peut être jugée; mais l'instruction se fera par les officiers de l'Amirauté du port où la prise aura été amenée, comme cela s'observe à l'égard des prises en guerre.

"La vente en sera faite.—De même en prise ordinaire la vente ne doit se faire qu'après qu'elle a été déclarée bonne, à moins qu'il n'y ait des effets sujets á dépérissement et qui ne puissent être conservés sans trop perdre de leur valeur; auquel cas la vente doit s'en faire provisoirement."—Valin, "Ordonnance de la Marine," vol. ii, page 423.

"Si la prise a été faite sous pavillon neutre, ou n'est pas évidemment ennemie, la vente même provisoire ne pourra avoir lieu sans le consentement du capitaine capturé."—Merlin, "Prise Maritime," section 12 (80).

"La prise par lui faite ne peut être considérée sa propriété disponible qu'après lui avoir été également adjugée par le tribunal compétent."

"Mais comme une prise n'appartient aux capteurs que lorsque elle a été jugée valable par l'autorité compétente," &c.—Emerigon (ed. B. Patey), t. i, pp. 440, 442.

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 215.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 24.)

Doctors' Commons, May 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me three despatches and their inclosures received from Lord Lyons (Nos. 362, 363, and 364, of May 5), in answer to the instruction directing him, with reference to my Report of the 23rd of March last,* to furnish information as to the cases in which the point of "no warning under the President's Proclamation" had been raised before the United States' Prize Court. And Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as you may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am obliged by the opportunity of perusing in a more authentic form than has hitherto reached me the Judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this important point. I must take the liberty of saying that this Judgment does not induce me to alter my opinion with respect to the due construction of the Proclamation, namely, that, according to the plain interpretation of the words, notice ought to be given to every neutral ship approaching a blockaded port, before capture.

The reasoning of Mr. Carlisle, and the minority of the Judges, including the most eminent Judge, I believe, in the United States, Chief Justice Taney, which is in accordance with my opinion, appears to me not grappled with, but evaded, by the majority of the Judges.

Your Lordship is aware that the French, in opposition to the English, authorities, hold that such notice is necessary by the general law, and apart from the particular words of the Proclamation.

It is clear, however, that the decision of the Supreme Court upon the Proclamation must be accepted by us as binding upon neutrals, more especially as it is in accordance with the general law maintained by English authorities.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 84.

No. 216.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 25.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES. I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th of May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 374), respecting the case of Mr. W. Murphy, a British subject, who complains of goods having been stolen from his store at Galveston by Confederate troops; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Murphy would be entitled, upon proving that his goods have been stolen, in the manner which he states, from his stores at Galveston by the Confederate soldiers, to compensation from the Confederate Government. The application for this compensation can only be made at present through the channel of Her Majesty's Consul at Richmond. The Confederate Government may refuse to listen to any application not made through a Minister properly accredited to them; but the attempt should, I think, be made to induce them to consider the Consul as, in the circumstances, sufficiently authorized to make the demand.

It would be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should instruct the Consul, not through Lord Lyons, but directly from home, to make this application.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 217.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 27.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 27, 1863.

UNITED STATES. I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th of May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 367, May 5), inclosing copies of his correspondence with Acting Consul Coppell and Mr. Seward respecting the case of the "Antona," a British steamer, which was brought as a prize into New Orleans some months, and whose master has ever since been kept in prison, while the cargo has been advertised to be sold by auction, and the ship has been taken for the United States' naval service without any judicial proceedings. The correspondence with Mr. Grindle respecting his brother's imprisonment at New Orleans was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the sale of the "Antona" and cargo, and the conversion of that vessel into a United States' ship of war, without any judicial sentence of condemnation, I am of opinion that a breach of international law has been thereby committed, which calls for a remonstrance from Her Majesty's Government. I have in several former separate Reports, as well as in a recent conjoint Report signed by all the Law Officers, had the honour to set forth fully the grounds upon which I conceive such a sale and such a conversion of a vessel to be illegal.

With respect to the long captivity of Mr. Grindle (though he appears to have been in some degree the author of his own misfortunes), I think there is much reason for strong complaint and grave remonstrance against the Government of the United States. They are bound to have Prize Courts, or at least the means of taking the necessary evidence of the master and two of the crew, at proper and convenient places; and they have no right to detain as prisoners of war the master of a neutral vessel for three consecutive months.

The whole matter appears to me deserving of very serious consideration.

The fears of Mr. Grindle's brother, arising from his brother's being taken to New York, are probably groundless. I suppose there will be a trial and condemnation of the ship at New York; and that after having made his deposition Mr. Grindle (the master) will be released; but even if this be so, the conduct of the United States' Government in this matter appears to me at present unjustifiable.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 218.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

My Lord, Temple, May 29, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th May instant, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 22nd and 27th ultimo, and to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 7th instant,* respecting the capture of the British steamer "Dolphin," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our information, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 369, May 5), inclosing a copy of a note which he had addressed to Mr. Seward on forwarding to him a copy of the protest made by the master, mate, chief engineer, and purser of the "Dolphin" before the Acting British Consul-General at the Havana. UNITED STATES.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to annex a copy of the protest as sent home by Acting Consul-General Crawford (No. 10, April 2); and to request that we would have the goodness to return these papers after perusal.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have perused and considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That the note addressed by Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward appears to us quite proper. That if the allegations in the protest be sustained by credible proof, more especially the allegation as to placing the engineer "in double irons," they will call for a special remonstrance from Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 219.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

My Lord, Temple, May 29, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 207), relative to the proceedings of Mr. Petherick, the British Vice-Consul at Khartoom, in taking possession of property belonging to the late Mr. A. Picifico, a British protected subject, whose heirs have only been able to recover a portion of it from Mr. Petherick. TURKEY.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe from Sir Henry Bulwer's despatch that the matter is undergoing investigation by Sir Edmund Hornby, but that a question is raised by Sir H. Bulwer whether property assumed to belong to Mr. Petherick, and sent by him to Alexandria for sale, can be sequestered in order to meet the claims of Mr. Picifico's heirs.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion on this point.

---

* Pages 125, 134, and 143.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not, in our opinion, competent to Her Majesty's Government to take any proceedings, by way of attachment or sequester of goods or money, the property of Mr. Petherick, in the hands of Messrs. Thurburn at Alexandria. Any proceedings of that kind must be instituted, if at all, by the creditors themselves, the representatives of Mr. Picifico; and they must proceed in the Consular Court in Egypt, according to the customary procedure in all respects. We are informed by a Minute of Sir Edmund Hornby given on the 15th October last, in relation to the case of Mrs. Shee's jewels, that the old practice in this respect remains in force in Egypt, unaffected either by the Order in Council of August 1860, or by the rules framed under the provisions of that Order; and that according to such practice, all persons to be affected by the sequester, if issued, must have due notice and full opportunity of resisting the application.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 220.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 31.)

My Lord, Temple, May 29, 1863.

TURKEY.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 26th of January last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt (No. 15, April 15, 1863), furnishing a further explanation of his proceedings in the matter of the complaint made against him by Messrs. Crowder and Co. of undue interference in the dispute between that firm and Mr. Frederick Ayrton regarding Mrs. Shee's property.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed the former correspondence on this subject, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the despatch containing Mr. Colquhoun's further explanation satisfies us that his motives for the course which he adopted were strictly honourable; but that we retain our opinion as to the legal impropriety of his conduct.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 221.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 30, 1863.

SIAM.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st May instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 25th ultimo,† he was directed to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a letter from Messrs. Clarkson, Son, and Cooper, stating that they have instituted a suit on behalf of the mortgagee of the vessel "Canada" against the proceeds of that vessel, and requesting that Her Majesty's Government will instruct Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok to remit the proceeds to England, in order to the same being paid to the credit of the Registrar of the High Court of Admiralty of England; and to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether this application should now be complied with.

---

* Page 30. † Page 132.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship presumes that if my answer should be in the affirmative, it would be sufficient for your Lordship to instruct Her Majesty's Consul to remit the proceeds to the Admiralty Court by a bill of exchange drawn in favour of Mr. H. Cadogan Rothery.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Messrs. Clarkson, Son, and Cooper have now placed themselves in a condition which entitles them to the aid of your Lordship in this matter. I think that your Lordship might properly direct Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok to remit the proceeds to the Registrar of the High Court of Admiralty. There would be no objection to this being done, as proposed, through the medium of a bill of exchange in this instance.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 222.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 30, 1863.

BRAZIL.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the despatches noted in the margin* respecting the arrest and imprisonment in Brazil of Mr. Vionnée, a British subject, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government can take any or what steps in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to take any steps in this matter.

It is clear that Mr. Christie, when he wrote to the Marquis of Abrantes (and, I should hope, also Mr. Consul Hervey, when he wrote to Mr. Christie) must have been kept in ignorance of the letter of Mr. Vionnée, which is entirely exculpatory of the Judge Domini.

That letter disposes altogether of the principal charge, namely, the partiality of the Judge who passed sentence upon Mr. Vionnée.

It seems also very probable from Mr. Christie's letter to Consul Hervey, as well as from other circumstances, that Mr. Vionnée is very unguarded and indiscreet in his language.

It is extremely difficult to decide whether the Marquis d'Abrantes, who is, of course, fortified by the legal advisers of the Government, or Dr. Azevedo, be right in the construction of the particular Article of the Criminal Code, and whether Mr. Vionnée was or was not entitled to a jury.

It is true that in England witnesses are not allowed, above all in a criminal case, to state inferences from words, but are obliged to repeat the words themselves, in order that the Judge may draw the inference.

In Brazil the law appears to be different, and Mr. Vionnée is voluntarily resident in that country, and therefore amenable to that law.

It would seem also, from the letter of the Marquis d'Abrantes, that Mr. Vionnée has sound legal remedy by way of appeal ("dos recursos") if he has been really injured.

But even if this be not so, I should still, in the particular circumstances of this case, be of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to intervene in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Christie, No. 128; Mr. Eliot, No. 16.

1863

No. 223.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

My Lord, Temple, May 30, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 404), together with a letter from the Board of Admiralty, dated the 26th May instant, respecting the arrest, at the Havana, of a seaman named Charles Ford as a deserter from Her Majesty's ship "Nile;" and as to a claim raised on his behalf by the United States' Consul-General, as being an American seaman, and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, with especial reference to the point raised by the Board of Admiralty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should not refuse to give up Charles Ford on the requisition either of the Spanish or the United States' authorities. That we do not intend by the expression of this opinion, to cast any claim upon Captain Barnard, who, in the circumstances of the case, and especially having regard to the acquiescence of the United States' captain, might have not unreasonably considered himself justified in what he did.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 224.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 2.)

My Lord, Temple, June 1, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 378, May 5, 1863), respecting a privateer said to be fitting out at Nassau to cruize against the shipping of the United States, and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the despatch of Lord Lyons to the Governor of the Bahamas will doubtless be sufficient to induce his Excellency to exercise a proper vigilance in the matter; but it would, we think, be expedient that he should receive instructions from Her Majesty's Government to take, under legal advice on the spot, whatever measures may be necessary to prevent the fitting out of a cruizer in a manner forbidden by the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 225.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 2.)

My Lord, Temple, June 1, 1863.

CHINA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 17th of March,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, three despatches and their inclosures from Sir Frederick Bruce,* respecting a further question which has arisen in connexion with the case of the "Pearl," namely, as to the extent to which under the XLVIIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, the Chinese authorities have the power of confiscation in the case of a vessel which has taken on board a prohibited cargo at a prohibited port.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe that Sir Frederick Bruce supports the view taken by the Chinese Government of its right to confiscate both vessel and cargo, but that Mr. Consul Sinclair and the Attorney-General at Hong Kong contend that the vessel is not liable to confiscation, unless she is seized in the act of trading with the port itself at which by Treaty she is not entitled to trade.

And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not see any reason for narrowing the construction of the language of the XLVIIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, so as to defeat its plain and avowed object. That we agree with the construction put upon this Article by Sir F. Bruce and the Chinese Government, and that we are of opinion that the Chinese authorities have power to confiscate the "Pearl" as well as her cargo.

We have, &c
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 226.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 3.)

My Lord, Temple, June 1, 1863.

SPAIN.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that with reference to the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 10th of May, 1861,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Robinson, dated the 18th of May ultimo, requesting the interference of Her Majesty's Government in support of his claim against the Government of Spain "for the wrongful condemnation at Mahon of a cargo of maize" shipped by him in the Roman brig "Mio Zio."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he likewise transmitted to us a despatch received in March of last year from Her Majesty's Consul at Palma (No. 18, March 13, 1862), stating that Mr. Robinson had compromised the case, which was before the Spanish Law Courts; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in taking any action in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there now appears to be a reason, in addition to those given in the Reports of the late Queen's Advocate, against the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government in this case, namely, that a compromise has actually been effected by Mr. Robinson's own directions, through his agent, and that the lawsuit is at an end.

With respect to the misconduct of the Judge who has been removed, we do not think it founds any claim against the Spanish Government for pecuniary compensation to Mr. Robinson which Her Majesty's Government ought to put forward.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 78.

* Sir F. Bruce, No. 3, January 6, 1863; No. 10, January 26, 1863; No. 17, February 24, 1863.

† See Reports for 1861, page 93.

1863

No. 227.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 3.)

My Lord, Temple, June 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st June instant, stating that the attention of Her Majesty's Government has been for some time directed to a steam-vessel named the "Phantom," which was denounced by Mr. Adams as being probably designed for the naval service of the Confederate States. And Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the representations made by Mr. Adams and the reports which have been made to Her Majesty's Government in regard to the results of the inquiries instituted into the character of the vessel; and to request that we would consider these papers, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the facts disclosed in them are of a nature to call for or to admit of interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government with a view to prevent an infringement of the law.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that no sufficient evidence has yet been produced to warrant Her Majesty's Government in taking any action with respect to the steam-ship "Phantom."

The only new fact alleged (which appears not in the papers accompanying Mr. Hammond's letter, but in the papers accompanying a separate case laid by orders of Sir G. Grey before the Attorney and Solicitor-General) is that on Thursday the 28th of May a police officer visited the "Phantom" and saw "several men at work, together with her officers, all wearing an uniform, believed to be that of Confederate States' Navy." If it were proved as a fact that the uniform seen was really that of the Confederate States' Navy, it might, perhaps, be important; but this seems to us to be very improbable, and no grounds are stated for the officer's belief upon which we can rely.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 228.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 5.)

My Lord, Temple, June 3, 1863.

CHINA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 185, December 23, 1862), inclosing with other papers a translation of a note from Prince Kung, protesting against the attempt to sue before British tribunals, British subjects in the service of China, for acts done by them in the exercise of the authority confided to them, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Sir F. Bruce.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Sir F. Bruce has fallen into an error by confounding two distinct questions, namely, a question relating to the infringement of orders made under the Treaty[*] of the 13th of June, 1853, and a question as to alleged civil liability as between British subjects in the Consular Courts in China.

We think that Sir F. Bruce is mistaken in treating (see despatch to Earl Russell of the 23rd of December, 1862, page 2) the question which he refers to your Lordship as depending on the fourth and following Articles of the Treaty.[*] Those Articles relate to the infringement of the Treaty and other regulations, and to the punishment of such infringements by penalties, and not in any way to civil suits.

---

[*] Should be "Order in Council."

But in the present case a difference has arisen between "British subjects;" that is, the complainant and the person complained of are both British subjects. To such a case the 12th Article of the Treaty[] applies, and the Consul of the District is competent to hear and determine the matter. His decision is subject to an appeal to the Chief Superintendent if the sum in dispute does not exceed 1,000 dollars; but if it exceed that sum, then to the Supreme Court of Hong Kong, and not to the Chief Superintendent. This proceeding before the Consul will be "a suit of a civil nature;" and we therefore think that the suit ought to be entertained under Article 12 of the Treaty.[] But we think also that the Court which should entertain it would be bound to give judgment for the defendant, upon the fact of his employment as a Chinese functionary in the Chinese Customs being either admitted or proved; for we are of opinion that a British subject so employed is not civilly answerable in the British Consular Courts for acts done by him in his official capacity.

There remains the question as to the power of the Supreme Court at Hong Kong to issue a mandamus to the Consular Courts. We cannot find any trace of such an authority in the original Charter (6 Hertslet, 228), which was confined to matters of criminal jurisdiction. Perhaps the Court may by a subsequent Charter have acquired the power of mandamus, but if this be so we should desire to see this further Charter. Otherwise, in the absence of any proper authority, plainly conferring the power of controlling the Consular Courts, we are of opinion that it cannot be arrogated by the Court at Hong Kong, which is (without such authority) merely a Court of appellate, and in some cases of concurrent, jurisdiction. These difficulties have arisen from an event not expressly contemplated in the year 1853, namely, the employment of British subjects in the service of the Emperor of China. We think that they do not, by virtue of that service, cease to be "British subjects" under the terms of the Order in Council; although, in respect of acts done by them officially in the service of the Emperor, when such justification is pleaded and proved, they ought not to be holden civilly liable in the Consular Courts.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 229.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 5.)

My Lord, Temple, June 4, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 31st March,[†] he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the further correspondence, as marked in the margin,[‡] which has passed between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Minister at Washington respecting the Act of the United States' Congress, for "enrolling and calling out the National Forces, and for other purposes;" and Mr. Hammond was to call our attention to the Proclamation which has been issued by the President of the United States, specifying the term of sixty-five days from the date thereof, as the time within which foreigners who have simply declared their intention to become citizens will be allowed to leave the United States, if they wish to avoid the conscription; and he was to request we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the sufficiency of the time allowed; and as to any further instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the period of sixty-five days is a reasonable

---

[*] Should be "Order in Council."

[†] Page 94.

[‡] To Lord Lyons, No. 173, April 3, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 348, April 24; No. 398, May 8; No. 415, May 11; No. 416, May 11, 1863.

1863

period, with reference to all the circumstances, to allow for the departure of foreigners, who have simply declared their intention to become citizens, from the United States.

That it does not occur to us to suggest any further instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons on this subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 230.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 5.)

My Lord, Temple, June 5, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st June instant, stating that he was directed to request that we would inform your Lordship what is the exact position of a vessel like the "Dolphin," sent in by a naval captain on a charge of running the blockade or carrying contraband of war. That your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether it is the captain of the capturing cruizer, or the Naval Department, or the Government, that prosecutes; also whether there is any difference in these respects between British and American proceedings. That your Lordship supposes that when transferred to the Prize Courts, the vessel can no longer be released by the President of the United States. And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with information on these points.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the usage of international law, all prize, before condemnation, enures to the Sovereign or Government of the State which commissions the captor. The general maxim upon which this usage is founded is usually expressed in the terms, bello parta cedunt Republicæ. In England, even since Prize Acts (which practically date from the time of Queen Anne) and Proclamations have given the whole value of the prize to the captor, it is nevertheless a matter of undoubted law that the Crown may at any time before condemnation release the prize.* It usually signifies officially to the Queen's Advocate and Queen's Proctor its order to take no further proceedings; and, on the application of these officers, the Judge releases the vessel. The whole law is exhausted in Lord Stowell's Judgment in the "Elsebe" (5 Robinson, 173), and that of Lord Brougham in the case of Alexander v. the Duke of Wellington (2 Russell and Mylne's Reports). In the United States of America the Government has the same power, and has lately exercised it; the Prize Court overruling an argument on behalf of the captor, to the effect that the Prize primarily vested in him. The only doubt has been in that country whether, even after condemnation, the Government had not the power of release. We believe, however, that the view taken by the United States' Government is that after condemnation the property is vested in the captor, and that the Government can therefore no longer interfere in the matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* It may depend upon the words of each Prize Act whether the property vests in the captor after first or a final condemnation.

No. 231.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 6, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 439, May 19), stating that he had been informed by Mr. Seward that he was engaged in a discussion with the Spanish Government respecting the pretension of Spain that her territorial jurisdiction extended to a distance of two marine leagues from the coast of Cuba and other places, and that Mr. Seward was desirous of knowing what view Her Majesty's Government took of the matter; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Lord Lyons' despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the expediency of answering it, and if so, in what terms.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the universally received axiom of international law, territorial waters extend, as a general rule and apart from all particular considerations as to bays, chambers, and the like, to the distance of one marine league only from the shore.

Throughout this war Great Britain and the United States have adhered to this doctrine. It was indeed originally founded on a rough estimate of this being the usual distance to which cannon-shot would reach,—quousque tormenta explodi possunt,—and it may well be that hereafter States may agree to extend the distance to one better suited to the recent improvements in artillery; but at present the general rule certainly is that the jurisdiction of a State extends to one league only. I am not aware of any exceptional circumstance as to Cuba which would take the coast of that island out of the application of the general rule.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 232.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 6, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 26th January last,* respecting the case of Mr. Crosse, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the former papers,† a subsequent correspondence between that gentleman and the Foreign Office, and a despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,‡ in answer to an instruction which was addressed to him, to endeavour to ascertain what had happened to Mr. Crosse's property at Fredericksburg; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the further answer which should be returned to Mr. Crosse.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise that the further answer to Mr. Crosse be to this effect: that it appears from the communication which Her Majesty's Government have received from Lord Lyons that Fredericksburg has been for many months the scene of continual conflict between the belligerent forces; that he has no means of ascertaining whether or not the property of Mr. Crosse, in common with that of other persons, was or was not destroyed in that town. That your Lordship thinks it right to apprise Mr. Crosse that if his property

---

* Page 34.

† Mr. Crosse, January 14.

‡ To Mr. Crosse, February 13; Mr. Crosse, February 17; to Mr. Crosse, February 21; Mr. Crosse, February 23 and April 21; to Mr. Crosse, April 23, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 208; Lord Lyons, No. 428, 1863.

1863

has been so destroyed, Her Majesty's Government would not, in the circumstances stated, be warranted in making any official application for compensation to the Government of either belligerent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 233.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 8.)

Doctors' Commons, June 6, 1862.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 438, May 19), respecting the case of Mr. John J. Craven, a British subject, who has been banished by the military authorities from the State of Missouri, and who now seeks to obtain permission to return to that State, as well as compensation for his banishment and the arrests that preceded it, and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that no case has been made out for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government in this case of Mr. Craven. A British subject has no right to expect his Government to protect him from the consequences of writing an offensive, violent, political pamphlet against the ruling authorities in a country torn asunder by civil war, and in a part of that country in which the exigencies of the State have compelled it to introduce martial law over its own subjects.

I think that Mr. Craven has probably been less harshly dealt with than an United States' citizen would have been in the like circumstances.

Possibly at some future period of greater civil tranquillity than the present Lord Lyons may be able to obtain for Mr. Craven permission to return to the State of Missouri. In the meanwhile Mr. Craven must suffer from the consequences of his own grave misconduct.

I have only further to observe, that the defence of the pamphlet, viz., that it was intended to be private, is obviously untrue. The title-page shows that it was not only printed, but "published," and to be "republished in England."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 234.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 9.)

Temple, June 8, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th May ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 18th April last,[*] respecting the alleged partiality shown by the Governor of the Windward Islands to the Confederate steamer "Oreto," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,[†] a letter from the Colonial Office,[‡] containing the Duke of Newcastle's observations upon the views stated in our Report.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington on this subject; and to request that we would again take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such further observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we intended to express by our Report that we thought the communications and explanations of Mr. Walker to Admiral Wilkes, regard being had to the character of that officer, were unnecessary and inexpedient, and that it appeared to us that they were likely to lead, as they appear to have done, to the difficulties which have arisen from the letter of Admiral Wilkes to Mr. Walker.

That with respect to the observance of Her Majesty's Regulations, in answer to the questions of the Duke of Newcastle, we have the honour to state our opinion—

That it is most desirable that the terms of Her Majesty's Proclamation should be strictly adhered to; that coal ought not to be supplied to either belligerent, except in such quantity as may be necessary to "carry such vessel to the nearest port of her own country, or to some nearer destination;" and that by these latter words it is not intended to include a mere cruising destination, but some definite port or place: that, therefore, coal granted at any of Her Majesty's ports, and consumed in cruising, ought not to be replenished under the terms of the Proclamation, but that a vessel whose coal has, owing to real necessities arising from stress of weather, been prematurely exhausted, before she could (if time and weather were the sole obstacles) reach her port of destination, ought not to be forbidden by the Governor to coal, although within the time specified in the Regulations.

It would appear to us that the suggestion of sending an officer on board to verify in each case the necessity for coaling would be likely to give great offence to belligerent men-of-war; but of course it would be competent to Her Majesty's Government, if they thought fit, to make such a verification the condition of liberty to coal in Her Majesty's ports.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 235.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 9.)

Temple, June 9, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, for our immediate consideration, a letter from Mr. Adams, the American Minister at this Court, inclosing depositions respecting a vessel called the "Southerner," suspected of being fitted out for the naval service of the Confederate States; that these papers have been sent to the Treasury and Home Department, with a request that instructions may be sent by telegraph to the proper authorities at the places specified in the depositions, to pay particular attention to the vessel, and if there seem any reasonable ground for interference, to take such steps as can legally be taken to prevent any infringement of the law; but Mr. Hammond was to request that we would communicate to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, for the guidance of those two Departments, our opinion upon the course that can be pursued in the case as set forth in the inclosed papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the evidence (such as it is) of Langley (whose very singular description is "Surgeon and Journalist") and Blakiston would not support a charge that the "Southerner" is so equipped, or fitted out, or destined, as to constitute a breach of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act; and that they are not, therefore, sufficient to warrant Her Majesty's Government in ordering the arrest of this ship.

We think it would be expedient to represent to Mr. Adams that by far the greater portion of the two depositions which he has forwarded contain hearsay

---

[*] Page 132.

[†] Colonial Office, March 23 and March 31, 1863.

[‡] Colonial Office, May 15, 1863.

1863

matter, or statements of mere belief, which, equally, according to the American and British law, are inadmissible in a Court of Justice, and upon which, therefore, the Government of Her Majesty could not legally act.

The only points of any materiality (to use a legal expression) are the facts that the vessel had two guns on board, and perhaps (but this does not seem quite certain) that she had port-holes for more; and that Captain Butcher was actively concerned in her fitting out.

But the guns are only two 18-pounders, which Blakiston himself appears to consider inadequate for a privateer, and not unfit for a merchant-vessel to carry.

The information which Langley states that he received on board the vessel was to the effect that she was destined to carry on commerce between the Confederate States and Great Britain. Blakiston does not appear to have heard anything from any person whose statements could be evidence which tends to show any illegal purpose. The name, devices, and decorations spoken of, are consistent with a commercial destination.

We cannot advise your Lordship that there is at present evidence sufficient to justify the seizure of the vessel, though the circumstances are suspicious, and it may be desirable that she should be watched, as far as the law permits, in order that if other circumstances should be discovered, supported by proper evidence, and capable of proper proof, tending to show that her equipment and destination are unlawful, orders may be given for her detention.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 236.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 11.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 10, 1863.

GREAT BRITAIN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated 8th June instant, and its inclosure, from a Mr. Phené, asking for certain information respecting passports which he believes to have been issued to his wife and a Dr. Shute in 1858, and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would furnish your Lordship at my earliest convenience with my opinion as to whether Mr. Phené should be supplied with the information he requests.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the very special circumstances of this case, I think the information required by Mr. Phené may be properly given.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 237.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 12.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 12, 1863.

GREAT BRITAIN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th of June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort asking for information on a point connected with the protection of naturalized British subjects in the country of their birth; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer that should be returned to Sir Alexander Malet.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a foreigner who has become a naturalized British subject cannot claim British protection against the operation of the law of his native country, so as to exempt himself from any penalties which the law of his native country may inflict upon him when he returns to it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 238.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 12.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 12, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter (dated the 15th April ultimo, from Mr. A. A. Nevins (which has been forwarded to your Lordship by Mr. Laird, M.P.), stating the circumstances under which he left Liverpool last December on board the British ship "C. N." for New Orleans. That Mr. Nevins further states that on his arrival at the latter port, he was informed of the intention of the United States' authorities to arrest him, and that acting upon the advice he received, and with a view to save the ship and cargo from heavy loss, he had felt it necessary to abandon his original voyage, and he had accordingly left New Orleans, and had arrived at the Havana. That Mr. Nevins states that he is unaware of any cause whatever to warrant the threatened violence against his person, and that he asks your Lordship to obtain from the Government of the United States a statement of the charges (if any) against him, and the reasons of his attempted arrest; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise your Lordship in the present state of facts to make any official application to the Government of the United States in the matter of Mr. Nevins' complaint. That Government so addressed might decline to answer any hypothetical questions as to what it would have done if Mr. Nevins had remained at New Orleans.

There is no evidence before your Lordship that they threatened to arrest Mr. Nevins. He appears to have received some information from his own friends, which is most vaguely stated, and which might have been erroneous. Mr. Nevins should certainly furnish your Lordship with a more detailed statement as to the nature of the information which he received, and the authority upon which it rested, before the propriety of addressing any communication to the Government of the United States or to Lord Lyons can be considered by your Lordship.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 239.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 13.)

My Lord, Temple, June 13, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying papers respecting the case of the "Will o' the Wisp," a Nova Scotian vessel which was captured in June 1862 by the United States' cruizer "Montgomery" and taken into Key West, whence she was released on the 19th of the following month under a decree of the United States' Prize Court. That this case has been several times reported on by Her Majesty's

Advocate-General, and that it formed the subject of a discussion in the House of Commons on the 4th June instant, in the course of which a desire was expressed that the papers should be laid before Parliament. But that before, however, your Lordship consents to these papers being given either wholly or in part, your Lordship requested that we would consider them and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, in the interests of the owners of the "Will o' the Wisp," or on any other grounds, we should see any objection to the papers being published. That of course the letters of the Queen's Advocate will under no circumstances be published.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have this case into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no objection to these papers being laid before Parliament with the exception proposed. There are perhaps some which it would not be expedient to publish in extenso, but this is a matter of discretion as to which your Lordship will judge.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 240.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 13.)

Temple, June 13, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 9th instant,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers† respecting the case of the "Southerner," and Mr. Hammond was to call our special attention to the statement contained in the letter from the Mayor of Hartlepool to the Home Office of the 8th instant, that the "Southerner" has two guns at the least on board, and that she has ten port-holes, and adverting to the orders which were recently given for detaining the "Ward Jackson" because she was fitted up with side seats for soldiers; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether there are not sufficient grounds for also detaining the "Southerner."

The previous papers in this case were annexed for reference, as well as the correspondence relative to the orders given for detaining the "Ward Jackson." ‡

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are still of opinion that there is no evidence at present upon which the "Southerner" could be legally convicted of a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

The opinion of every person employed to examine her is, that she is destined for merchant service; the opinion is founded positively on her build, her fittings up, her cargo; negatively, on the absence of the fittings up and build requisite for a ship of war. It is true she carries two guns, but we are expressly told that they are so light as to be fit only for firing signals with blank cartridge, and common to merchantmen of her class. It is true she has ten port-holes, but we are told that they are not large enough to receive guns, and are adapted for the purpose of letting away the water from the deck; which is itself too small to be fired from. Her cargo is pig iron alone, except the necessary coals.

It is true that Captain Butcher and Messrs. Frazer are concerned with her, and that there is reason to suppose them to be connected with Confederate interests; but this may well be of a commercial character in this case.

With respect to our Report on the "Ward Jackson," it must be remembered that the Custom-house Officers had seized a large quantity of muskets on board of her in cases purporting to contain "hardware;" this material fact, in connection with an internal arrangement, most unusual in merchant, and most usual in transport ships, justified us in advising Her Majesty's Government to refuse a clearance to the ship until time should be afforded for further inquiry, which is all that we did advise.

The evidence at present obtained in this case does not go at all to the essential point of the intent with which the ship is fitted out; and so far as her construction is concerned, we see no ground for supposing that without very material alterations she would be capable of acting as a privateer.

All that we can at present recommend is, that on her arrival at Liverpool she should still be closely watched.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 175.
† Treasury, June 8; Home Office, June 9 and June 10; Treasury, June 10 and June 11, 1863.
‡ Mr. Adams, June 3; Treasury, March 21; to Treasury, March 22, 1863.

No. 241.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 13.)

Temple, June 13, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Adams,* again calling attention to the "Gibraltar" or "Sumter," now fitting at Liverpool, and as to the destination of which vessel he entertains suspicion. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose letters from the Home Office and Treasury,† containing the results of the inquiry which their respective officers have made in consequence of Mr. Adams' letter; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship what course Her Majesty's Government should adopt under present circumstances.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that this case has assumed a very suspicious aspect; but that the papers before us furnish no evidence which would warrant Her Majesty's Government in directing the vessel to be seized for the violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act. But we think that, having regard to the previous history of this vessel, and to the request of Messrs. Klingender (10th June, 1863), Her Majesty's Government ought to call upon those persons to furnish them with an explanation as to the necessity of, and reason for, placing these guns and gun-carriages on board, and to give directions to the proper officer of the Customs to refuse the clearance until further orders. We shall be glad to have an opportunity of further considering this case when the communication from Messrs. Klingender shall have arrived.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Adams, June 3, 1863.
† Treasury, June 8; Home Office, June 8; Treasury, June 8, 1863.

No. 242.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 16.)

Doctors' Commons, June 15, 1863.

My Lord

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to me that a despatch (of which the draft was inclosed, No. 164) founded upon my Report of the 24th March,[*] was addressed to Lord Lyons on the 1st of April, instructing him as to the steps he was to take in the case of the "Elias Reid," if he should be satisfied that the evidence was clear as to that vessel having been captured in British waters.

1863

That, in reply thereto, a despatch was received from Lord Lyons (No. 414, May 11), stating the grounds upon which his Lordship was not able to satisfy himself that the evidence to that effect was clear; that it was consequently deemed desirable to request the Colonial Office for further evidence; and that Department replied, under date of the 6th instant, that the Governor of the Bahamas would be asked whether any further evidence could be produced; that a further despatch has, however, now been received from Lord Lyons, inclosing additional evidence obtained from the United States' Government which, in the opinion of the United States' Secretary of the Navy, places it beyond a doubt that the seizure of the "Elias Reid" was not made in British waters.

Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the further instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the evidence now produced by the United States' Government, if credible, would establish the point of the place of capture of the "Elias Reid" in favour of the captor. It is evidence, however, which is at variance with that which has been formerly laid before me, and I should desire to await the arrival of the expected answer from the Governor of the Bahamas before tendering my final advice to your Lordship on this subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 243.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 16.)

Doctors' Commons, June 15, 1863.

DENMARK.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen (No. 132), forwarding a correspondence which has passed between him and the Danish Government on the subject of the nationality of Mr. Rainals, British Vice-Consul at Copenhagen; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon at my earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That from whatever motive the demand upon Mr. Rainals was allowed to slumber from the 5th of October, 1860, to the 20th of February, 1863 (as to which I do not find any remonstrance from Mr. Paget to M. Hall), if the demand be well founded in law, it has not been so waived as to be incapable of being put in force against that gentleman.

The true question is, had it ever a legal foundation?

Whatever consequences flow from the status of Borgerkab, and the acceptance of the Borgerbrev, did at one time attach to Mr. Rainals; and in my opinion he must (though the absence of the original license be in this case a suspicious fact) be now legally deemed to have taken the oath, to the fact of having taken which his name is indisputably subscribed, though the oath itself was not set forth in extenso in the paper which he subscribed.

It is important to consider what legal consequences flow from this act. It is said (letter from Mr. Rainals to Mr. Paget, February 21, 1863), that Her Majesty's then Representative apprised him that by a Treaty or Convention, it was expressly provided that the consequence of taking such an oath, or of the Borgerbrev, did not affect his British national character.

I should be glad to be informed whether this be a correct statement.

It is, perhaps, not altogether unimportant, though it seems to be conceded by the Danish Minister, that the sending back the Borgerbrev does, in ordinary cases, replace the person who had possessed it in his former position.

---

[*] Page 85.

But the Danish Minister says (M. Hall to Mr. Paget, February 24, 1863), that Mr. Rainals was born in Denmark, and therefore a Danish subject, irrespectively, as I understand, of the Borgerbrev.

Whether he was born in Denmark, and whether, if so, he be thereby a Danish subject, Her Majesty's Representative at Copenhagen does not state.

But I humbly advise that information be obtained from him as to the fact and as to the law.

I should be glad also to learn if a Danish-born subject was under the necessity of applying for a Borgerbrev.

I think that with this information (though the subject would not then be wholly free from embarrassment), I should be in a better condition to advise your Lordship upon it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 244.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 17.)

Doctors' Commons, June 16, 1863.

DENMARK.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th June instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 17th March,[*] relative to the refusal of the Danish Government to give up to the British Vice-Consul the property of Mrs. Strattin, a British subject, deceased at Copenhagen, he was directed to transmit to me two further despatches on the same subject which have been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen (Nos. 85 and 136); and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon. The previous correspondence in this case was inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would seem, from the papers now submitted to me, that the marriage itself of the deceased Mrs. Strattin is denied, and that a suit, resembling what is called an interest suit in the English Court of Probate, has been instituted, and, as I conclude, is still pending before the Danish Magistrate; and that the Danish Minister of Justice is of opinion that Mr. Strattin must satisfy the Court,—both that he was married to Mrs. Strattin, and that, according to the English law, the cessation of matrimonial cohabitation does not destroy the English national character of the wife. The law upon this latter point is clear; such cessation, apart from a legal divorce, has no effect upon the national character of the wife. As to the first point, it is clearly an after-thought on the part of those who oppose Mr. Strattin's claim; but it appears that Mr. Strattin, if the Danish Court think the declaration of Captain Christmas too informal, can procure a certificate of his marriage from Australia. I understand, also, that the question of Mr. Strattin's costs is a matter to be submitted to the Danish Tribunal, and, I presume, that he will be deemed entitled to them, on proving his case, from those who have entailed upon him the unnecessary expense of doing so.

In this state of circumstances Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere further at present, but it should be understood and explained by Sir A. Paget to the Danish Minister that they abstain from interference on the ground that there is a bonâ fide suit pending, in which the facts of the marriage of Mr. Strattin is disputed, and therefore that at present the Treaty is denied to be applicable, and also in the firm expectation that, if it should turn out as the Vice-Consul has from the first declared, that Mr. Strattin has been put to unnecessary cost and expense by an unfounded litigation, the Danish Tribunal will condemn the adverse party to pay these costs. I do not advise that any attempt be made to graft upon the existing Treaty any additional Convention.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Page 75.

No. 245.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 17.)

Doctors' Commons, June 16, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch, dated the 11th June instant, from the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, together with the correspondence therein referred to, respecting a disagreement connected with official matters which had arisen between the Consul and the Vice-Consul of the United States at Cape Town; and to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope appears to have acted discreetly and properly in this matter. That with respect to the general question put by his Excellency, it must be generally answered by saying that instances may be supposed in which the Executive Government might properly certify to a Court of Law that a foreign Consul had been duly recognized as such, and that he was entitled to whatever privileges or authority belonged to that character, but that it is not easy to foresee any other manner in which the Executive Government could or ought to interfere in proceedings on behalf of or against a foreign Consul carried on in a Court of Law.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 246.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

Doctors' Commons, June 17, 1863.

My Lord,

OLDENBURG.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Hanover (No. 28), asking to be furnished with a reply to certain inquiries on points of law which have been addressed to him by the Oldenburg Minister for Foreign Affairs, with reference to a charge of fraud and perjury against a naval officer in the service of the Grand Duke of Oldenburg; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and inform your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, of the answer which should, in my opinion, be returned to M. de Rossing's inquiries.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as to the first question, if the law of Oldenburg required the instrument to be sworn before a Notary Public, in order to give it validity in Oldenburg, it was competent to the Notary Public to administer the oath.

As to the second question:—this question cannot be said to have yet received a clear and binding judicial decision; but the better opinion certainly is, that Captain Sommer would not, on account of a false affidavit, not sworn in any suit or judicial proceeding, be liable to a prosecution for perjury.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 247.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

Doctors' Commons, June 18, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 503, June 2, 1863), together with the previous papers therein referred to, reporting a conversation with M. Mercier on the cotton question, in the course of which M. Mercier suggested that England and France, as neutrals, might call upon the United States' Government to declare at once, in writing: 1st. That cotton, the property of neutrals, should be respected in districts recovered by the United States, without any inquiry from whom it had been bought; and 2ndly. That whatever facilities for removing and exporting cotton were given either to the agents of the United States' Government or to American citizens, should also be given to neutrals; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the lawfulness of either or both of the demands suggested to be made upon the United States' Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That both the demands in question are founded upon sound principles of international law. Neutral States have exactly the same rights, and belligerents exactly the same obligations towards them, in this as in any other war.

With respect to the first demand, it is to be observed that property bonâ fide transferred from a belligerent to a neutral in the territory of the belligerent, and which is not captured for any breach of maritime international law, is to all intents and purposes the property of the neutral, and just as sacred as any other property of which he has become lawfully possessed. With respect to the second demand, it is to be observed that neutral States are entitled to be placed on the same footing with respect to facilities for removing and exporting the produce of a country whose ports are blockaded, as the subjects or agents of the belligerent who enforces this blockade.

The force of this general proposition of international law is certainly not weakened in its application to a case in which neutral States have loyally submitted to the severe inconvenience of a blockade, extending, it is believed, over 3,500 miles, and 119 ports, of a country with which, previously to the war, there was carried on a commerce of the greatest importance to their own subjects.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 248.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

Temple, June 18, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that with reference to our several Reports of the dates noted in the margin,* respecting the case of the "Peterhoff," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter from Mr. Joseph Spence, containing observations on the case, and requesting to be made acquainted with the result of the instructions which he was informed, on the 3rd of April, had been given to Lord Lyons, and in particular whether any, and if any what, grounds of capture have been alleged by the Government of Washington.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Mr. Spence's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Spence's letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the United States' Government having insisted upon their right to have the validity of the capture of the "Peterhoff" inquired into, and adjudicated upon in the Prize Court, have, by so doing, undertaken to bring forward, and must be understood to have expressed a belief that they can establish, legal grounds of capture, sufficient to justify that course of proceeding; but that it

---

* Law Officers, April 1, April 22, April 22, May 6, May 15, May 15, and June 6, 1863; pages 98, 126, 127, 143, 155, and 156.

1863

yet remains to be seen whether they can or cannot do so; and if they should fail to do so, Her Majesty's Government will take all proper measures to obtain due compensation for the owners. That, in the meantime, the rules of international law do not admit of any immediate further interference by Her Majesty's Government; nor are they in a situation to communicate to Mr. Spence any information as to the particular grounds on which the United States' Government may found their expectation of being able to make out a case of violation of neutrality against the vessel.

That Her Majesty's Government feel, however, no apprehension that any erroneous construction will be placed, by any persons acquainted with international law, upon the expression in your Lordship's former reply to Mr. Spence, "contraband of war destined for the Confederate States." No language could more clearly point to the fact that the mere nature of any particular cargo or consignment would not make it contraband, unless it were being carried by the captured vessel to some destination within the Confederate States; and if the vessel were really employed in carrying munitions of war, &c., to any destination within the Confederate States, it would undoubtedly be liable to seizure, although its ostensible and professed destination might be to some neutral port.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 249.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 18, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying papers* respecting the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. John Tovell, a British subject, at Nashville, Tennessee, and was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is very probable that Mr. Tovell did on the occasion of this funeral oration (which appears to have been delivered orally, and not from any written paper) use expressions capable of being considered as exciting disaffection to the military government of Tennessee and the martial law under which that State was placed, and that he has been treated exactly as a citizen of the United States would have been in the same circumstance. It is, moreover, impossible to deny that any oration of the kind, however warranted by facts, was, all the circumstances considered, a most injudicious proceeding.

Nevertheless, it seems to me now a proper case for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, and that Lord Lyons should be instructed to continue his application for the release of Mr. Tovell, and to represent that he has never undergone any form of trial; never had an opportunity of seeing or hearing the witnesses who have deposed against him; that he has always denied the truth of the charges; that the occasion was one naturally leading to the use of strong language, and very capable of being maliciously represented, and that an imprisonment for three months for words spoken on such an occasion, in great and pardonable excitement of feeling, is already an excessive punishment.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Miss Tovell, January 6, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 38; Lord Lyons, No. 162, February 16; Mr. Tovell, May 25, 1863.

No. 250.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 22.)

FRANCE.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 20, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence, as marked in the margin,* which has taken place between the Foreign Office, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, and the Home Office, as to the manner in which certain papers, also inclosed, bearing upon the divorce case of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, and which have been furnished by the Préfet de Police at the request of Messrs. Freshfield, should be dealt with; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether Lord Cowley can properly transmit the papers in question to Messrs. Freshfield.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there does not appear to be any precedent for such a communication between Her Majesty's Representative at a foreign Court, and the solicitor for one of the parties in a contested suit in this country.

It seems to me on principle, and with a view to possible consequences in other cases, not expedient that your Lordship should make such a precedent, and I therefore do not advise your Lordship to give any directions to Lord Cowley to forward the Report of the French Commissioner of Police to Messrs. Freshfield and Co.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 251.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 23.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, June 20, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th instant,† upon the case of the "Gibraltar," otherwise "Sumter," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,‡ a letter from the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the Commissioners of Customs, forwarding a further report from the Surveyor at Liverpool, and other papers,§ including an explanation from Messrs. Klingender and Co. with regard to the two heavy guns shipped on board that vessel.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the "Sumter."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Messrs. Klingender and Co. is not satisfactory. Mr. Morgan does not vouch, as Mr. Klingender expects, that the guns in question are unfit for sea use, and he does speak distinctly to the fact of gun-carriages being on board, of which fact Messrs. Klingender declare themselves to be ignorant. We think that Mr. Morgan should be distinctly asked whether the guns are unfitted for sea use, and that Messrs. Klingender's attention should be drawn by Mr. Morgan (to whom they have themselves appealed), to the portions of the gun-carriages and the heavy iron castings now on board, and a further explanation required from them.

The Solicitor to the Customs appears, in his observations on this case, to leave entirely out of sight the previous history of the "Sumter," but we think it better for Her Majesty's Government to incur some possible risk of liability

* Earl Cowley, No. 606; to Home Office, May 30; Home Office, June 3, 1863.
† Page 179.
‡ Mr. Adams, June 3; Home Office, June ; Treasury, June 8, 1863.
§ Treasury, June 12; to Treasury, June 14; Treasury, June 16, 1863.

1863

in damages for a temporary detention of the vessel, than (having regard to that previous history, and to the questions of maritime law which it may raise when the vessel is at sea) to acquiesce in her taking out what may prove to be a formidable armament, without being satisfied, on reasonable grounds, that the guns, &c., are really intended for a lawful commercial purpose. The names of Messrs. Klingender have appeared, in other transactions which have come under our notice, to be connected with the known agencies of the Confederate States at Liverpool, and no explanation as to the true destination and consignment either of the vessel herself or of the guns, &c., or as to the occasion for shipping goods of this description on board, has yet been sought or offered from the alleged charterer, Captain Blakeley.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 252.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 22.)

Doctors' Commons, June 22, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 495, June 2, 1863), respecting the case of Mr. Power, a British subject, "who having for a number of years exercised the functions of a citizen of the State of Texas, and claimed and enjoyed the privilege of citizenship, now desires to escape the liabilities of citizenship on the plea of being a British subject;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that the opinion expressed by Lord Lyons to Mr. Consul Lynn is well founded; and that Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere in this matter on behalf of Mr. Power, with the Government of the United States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 253.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 22.)

Doctors' Commons, June 22, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that with reference to the Law Officers' Report of the 23rd of April, respecting the case of Mr. Elsworth and Mr. Redgate, who were captured on board the "Peterhoff" and imprisoned at New York, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,* a letter from Messrs. Gregory and Champion,† requesting to be informed of the result of the proceedings taken by Her Majesty's Minister at Washington on behalf of Messrs. Elsworth and Redgate.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to me the despatches as marked in the margin,‡ from Lord Lyons, inclosing copies of the notes which have passed between him and Mr. Seward respecting the case of these gentlemen; and he was to request that I would take the same into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Gregory and Champion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think the answer to Messrs. Gregory and Champion should be to the effect that Her Majesty's Government are still in communication with the Government of the United States upon the subject of their letter, and as soon as any definite result has been arrived at, they will not fail to apprise these gentlemen of it.

I must add that I am of opinion that the proposition of Mr. Seward as to referring this matter to the Prize Court ought not to be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

In the first place it is certainly not a question, as Mr. Seward seems to be aware, which a Prize Court is ordinarily competent to entertain. The jurisdiction of that tribunal is in rem, and does not extend to awarding damages to individuals ill-treated by the captor apart from the adjudication upon the guilt or innocence of the vessel seized; and the claim of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of these persons is independent of that circumstance.

In the second place it is a case in which, assuming the truth of the story, immediate redress should be granted by the Executive Government of the United States.

The captor had no right to treat Messrs. Elsworth and Redgate, the subjects of a neutral State, on board a neutral vessel, as prisoners of war.

The captor's right is confined to detaining, not as prisoners of war but as necessary witnesses, such of the crew (usually the master and two of the seamen) as may be required to make depositions as to the circumstances of the case. These gentlemen formed no part of the crew, and do not appear to have been detained for any such purpose, but rather to have been treated as subjects of the belligerent at war with the United States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Messrs. Gregory and Champion, April 21, 1863; to Messrs. Galbraith, Redgate and Co., April 24, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 209, April 24, 1863.

† Messrs. Gregory and Champion, June 18, 1863.

‡ Lord Lyons, No. 387, May 8; No. 409; No. 443, May 19, 1863.

No. 254.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 22.)

Doctors' Commons, June 22, 1863.

My Lord,

GREAT BRITAIN.

I AM honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th June instant, stating that he was directed to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon the following point,—whether a Power who merely accedes to a Treaty concluded between two or more other Powers has a right to be consulted before the Powers who actually concluded the Treaty can make any alteration in its provisions; whether, in short, a Power who has merely acceded to a Treaty can, by its refusal, prevent the original contracting Powers from cancelling or modifying such Treaty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is difficult to answer this question in the abstract, as the law applicable to it may be affected by the circumstances of the particular case.

If the original Treaty had been substantively and definitively concluded between certain States, and afterwards another State merely acceded to it, I do not think that, as a general proposition, and apart from any peculiar circumstances, this State can prevent the original parties to the contract from modifying or cancelling it; but in the event of a modification, the acceding State unless consulted and approving of it, would be entitled to be relieved from any obligations arising out of the original Treaty by which it would otherwise have been bound; in other words, to be no longer a party in any sense to the Treaty; and in the event of the Treaty being cancelled, might require to be placed in no worse condition than that in which it was before its accession to the Treaty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1863

No. 255.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 23.)

Doctors' Commons, June 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 30th of April, and to the Report of the Law Officers of the 22nd ultimo,* upon the case of the "Granite City," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 423, May 15, 1863), inclosing copies, sent to him by Mr. Seward, of two letters from the United States' District Attorney respecting this case. And Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, transmitting to me, for my consideration, a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 519) relative to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, with respect to this case of the "Granite City," judgment appears to have passed by default, and therefore she is now at all events lawfully condemned.

I am not apprised of the circumstances of the "Aries" and the "Adela," with respect to their appropriation by the United States' Government before condemnation, but I think that Lord Lyons should be instructed that upon this point Her Majesty's Government entertain a very strong opinion, and that they cannot permit the Law of Congress to set aside the law of nations upon this important question of neutral rights.

It is perhaps for your Lordship to consider whether any Conference should take place between Lord Lyons and the French Ambassador at Washington on this point. The French writers, as pointed out in the last Report, are very clear upon it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 256.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 23.)

Doctors' Commons, June 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 478, May 29, 1863) respecting the case of the British schooner "Tampico," which is stated to have been advertised for sale at New Orleans, although no legal proceedings had been taken against her; and that it would be observed that Her Majesty's Minister had called the attention of the United States' Government to the irregularity of the proceedings in this case, as well with regard to the vessel and cargo as to the long detention of the master, mate, supercargo, and crew, and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion (as I have had the honour to state in my Report of this day's date, to which I beg to refer, on the "Granite City") that Her Majesty's Government should strongly remonstrate against the appropriation of neutral vessels by the United States' Government before a sentence of condemnation.

With respect to the detention of the whole crew of the "Tampico," I must again express my opinion that the practice of detaining whole crews of captured vessels for a considerable period is an abuse of belligerent power.

---

* Pages 137 and 161.

The proper course is to take, as early as possible, the depositions of the necessary witnesses, to detain them as short a time as possible, and not to detain the others at all.

It cannot be too emphatically pressed upon the United States' Government that neutral subjects found on board neutral vessels are not (as some United States' captors appear to think) in the category of prisoners of war; that the authority of the belligerent over them extends only to the detention of the witnesses necessary for the truth of the case; and that with respect to them it is the duty of the belligerent to afford every reasonable facility for their early release, and consequently for a speedy taking of the necessary depositions.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 257.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 23.)

Doctors' Commons, June 23, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to the Law Officers' Report of the 7th ultimo,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, for perusal, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 491), inclosing copies of his correspondence with Mr. Acting Consul Walker and with Mr. Consul Moore, relative to the ill-treatment of British subjects in the Confederate States, and to the cavils of Mr. Benjamin on the subject of communications from British Consular authorities; and that your Lordship was disposed to think that Mr. Moore's Report to Lord Lyons of the 24th ultimo (Inclosure No. 24) may be regarded as satisfactory.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with your Lordship that Mr. Consul Moore's Report is satisfactory, regard being had to the great difficulties of his position.

With respect to the cavil of Mr. Benjamin, I venture to observe that Mr. Benjamin is, perhaps not unnaturally, sensitive upon the point of Consuls not directly accredited to the Confederate States, yet exercising (however unnecessarily) a kind of authority which, strictly speaking, is incident only to the office of a Diplomatic Minister.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 258. Inserted in error

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received June 24.)

Temple, June 28, 1862.

PERSIA.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammand's letter of the 10th of June instant, stating that he was dircted by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Persia (Mr. Alison's No. 55 of April 29), suggesting whether it would not be advisable to extend to Her Majesty's Consuls in Persia the power granted to the Consuls in Turkey in exercising jurisdiction over British subjects.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose copies of the Treaties between Persia and Great Britain and between Persia and Russia, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty holds under those Treaties such jurisdiction as to admit of an Order in Council being passed under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act; and if so, whether a short Order "authorizing the application of the Levant Order to Persia, as far as circumstances admit," would not be the best course of proceeding for the purpose of attaining the proposed object.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Page 145.

1863

That under the Treaties referred to, Her Majesty does, in our opinion possess such jurisdiction as to admit of an Order in Council being passed for Persia under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. But adverting to the structure and terms of the Levant Order, it does not appear to us that it would be a convenient course to attempt to apply that Order to Persia merely by a reference thereto in general terms "as far as circumstances admit." We think that an Order in Council should be framed with reference to the actual circumstances of the British Consular Establishment in Persia, and to the terms of the Treaty between Russia and Persia, which will constitute the basis of the jurisdiction to be exercised. So many of the provisions and Articles of the Levant Order as may be found applicable, having due regard to these conditions, may be adopted; but we think it would be likely to give occasion to difficulties and questions, which had better be avoided, if the duty of adjusting the machinery of the Levant Order to the circumstances of the Consular Establishment in Persia, and of separating the applicable from the inapplicable parts of that Order, were left entirely to the Consuls themselves.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 259.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

Temple, June 27, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 15th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 13th of June instant, from Mr. Whitlock on the question of the liability to military service in the United States of British subjects who have declared their intention to become United States' citizens, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

We are also honored with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 17th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, a further letter, dated the 19th instant, which your Lordship had received from Mr. Whitlock.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the answer to Mr. Whitlock should state that Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere, generally, on behalf of those subjects of Her Majesty who, having been formally apprized that if they remain in the United States six weeks after the notice given to them they will be liable to the same conscription as native subjects, elect to remain in the United States. If, however, there should be special circumstances in any particular case, rendering it difficult for a British subject who is bonâ fide desirous of leaving the United States, to do so within the exact time limited by the President's Proclamation, we think that the good offices of Her Majesty's Representative at Washington might properly be used to obtain for any such person reasonable indulgence by way of extension of the time, as the circumstances of his particular case may require. And if Mr. Whitlock's friend has any such special case to make, he ought (we think) to be directed to represent the circumstances to Her Majesty's Ambassador, and to solicit his aid if necessary.

With respect to the further question submitted to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, we are of opinion that Mr. Whitlock ought certainly to refuse to bear arms against Her Majesty, and that he would by doing so legally incur the penalties of high treason.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 260.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 1.)

Doctors' Commons, June 30, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd (dated 30th) instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated 18th June instant, and its inclosures, from Mr. W. H. Fisher, complaining of the capture of his vessel the "Minnie," while on a voyage from Nassau to Baltimore, by the United States' ship "Lodona;" and Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to me two despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons respecting this case,[*] from which it would be seen that your Lordship had addressed to the United States' Government a representation relative to the unusual and dangerous manner in which the "Minnie" was brought-to by the capturing ship; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take this case into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon, and also as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Fisher.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the place where the "Minnie" was taken certainly justified her capture. She was close to the blockaded shore, and the excuse of the chronometer being out of order, and the vessel being leaky, if true on this occasion, is very often falsely alleged; and the captor does not appear to have exceeded the bounds of his duty in taking her in for adjudication.

The manner in which she was alleged to have been brought-to would have been a grave violation of international law, and being believed to have happened was most properly remonstrated against by Lord Lyons; but the balance of evidence, from all the facts, preponderates in favour of the captor's version of the firing.

I advise your Lordship to reply to Mr. Fisher to the effect that the "Minnie" was captured in circumstances of grave suspicion, close to the blockaded coast, that the captor had a right to take her in for adjudication, that the alleged improper firing is at present credibly stated to have been occasioned by the refusal of the vessel to heave-to until fired at four times.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 261.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 1.)

Doctors' Commons, June 30, 1863.

My Lord,

FRANCE.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Réunion (No. 5), relative to the difficulties placed by the French Colonial Authorities at Réunion in the way of Indian labourers wishing to proceed to Mauritius at their own expense, on the expiration of their stipulated term of service, instead of availing themselves of their right to a return passage to India at the expense of the Government of Réunion; and Mr. Murray was also pleased to inclose a correspondence which has passed upon the subject between the Foreign Office and the India Office,[†] and was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereon, with reference especially to the question of the interpretation to be put upon the IXth Article of the Convention of the 10th of August, 1861.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is hardly necessary to say, that apart from the consideration of

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 436, May 19; and No. 480, May 29, 1863.

[†] To India Office, May 9, 1863; India Office, June 15, 1863.

1863

the Treaty, the detention of British subjects whose contract of service had expired, by the French authorities at Réunion, was unlawful.

The words, therefore, which deprive them of this natural liberty must be clear and express in the Treaty.

But I have the honour to agree with the interpretation put upon Article IX of the Treaty by Sir Charles Wood; and it seems extraordinary that Baron Darrican should not have referred to the conclusion as well as to the beginning of that Article.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 262.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 1.)

Doctors' Commons, June 30, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith, three despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at Bahia (Nos. 15, 16, 17), relative to the proceedings of the Brazilian authorities and the United States' officers towards the British barque "Castor," from which vessel a supply of coal was furnished to two war steamers belonging to the so-called Confederate States; and Mr. Murray was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Brazilian authorities at Bahia ought not to have prevented the "Castor" from selling coals to the "Alabama" and the "Georgia" at Bahia. It was a legitimate commercial transaction. At the same time much allowance must be made for the anxiety of this State to preserve her neutrality, and for the effect produced by the apparently false statements made by the United States' Consul, as to the "Castor" having conveyed arms and ammunition on board the "Alabama" and "Georgia."

The conduct of the Brazilian authorities and of the United States' steamer "Mohican," as stated in Her Majesty's Consul's letter of the 29th May, present graver matter for consideration.

The United States' war-steamer had no right to make use of the port of one neutral State, so as to pursue from it the vessel of another neutral State as it left that port; and the State of the neutral port ought not to have allowed such a use to be made of its harbour.

It appears to me that Her Majesty's Consul at Bahia should be instructed that Her Majesty's Government desire him to express their hope to the proper authority at Bahia that such a breach of neutrality will not again be permitted in their port, as well as to express their surprise that the "Castor" should have been prevented from completing a legitimate commercial transaction; and that Lord Lyons should be instructed to express to the United States' Government the expectation of Her Majesty's Government that proper orders will be sent to the "Mohican" to prevent a recurrence of such a breach of neutrality as appears to have been committed by that ship.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 263.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 2.)

Temple, July 1, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 24th April and the 12th May,* respecting the disposal of the prisoner charged with the murder of the Senior Officer of the Confederate steamer "Sumter," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 483 of the 29th May), reporting that he had been informed by Mr. Seward that it was impossible for the Government of the United States to give its consent to the prisoner being passed on board one of Her Majesty's ships of war, through the blockading squadron, to a Confederate port, for the purpose of being delivered up to the Confederate authorities; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would again take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to how the prisoner should now be disposed of.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as in this case leave has been sought by Her Majesty's Government to take the prisoner within the line of blockade to a Confederate port, and that leave has been refused by the belligerent Government which has instituted the blockade, and as it does not appear probable that Her Majesty's ship which has charge of the prisoner can be at all assured of meeting with any ship of war belonging to the Confederate States on board of which the prisoner might be placed, we are obliged, however reluctantly, to advise your Lordship that the prisoner, being a person over whom no British Court has jurisdiction, ought not to be detained in custody by any British authority longer than may be necessary for the purpose of disposing of him on shore.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 264.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 2.)

Temple, July 2, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 20th ultimo,* pointing out that the explanations respecting the guns to be shipped on board the "Gibraltar" (or "Sumter") were not satisfactory, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† the draft of the letter which was thereupon addressed to the Treasury‡ requesting that further explanations should be called for, and that in the meantime the "Gibraltar's" clearance should be withheld; and also a letter which had that day been received by your Lordship from the Treasury, inclosing further papers received from the Customs in this case.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the course which should now be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in regard to the "Gibraltar."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, as it now appears that the guns on board the "Gibraltar" are not adapted for use on board that vessel, but are to be carried out as merchandize, the clearance of that vessel should be no longer delayed.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Pages 131 and 152.

* Page 185.

† Mr. Adams, June 3; Treasury, June 8; Home Office, June 8; Treasury, June 12; to Treasury, June 14; Treasury, June 16; Home Office, June 23, 1863.

‡ To Treasury, June 23, 1863.

No. 265.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 6.)

Doctors' Commons, July 2, 1863.

My Lord,

COSTA RICA.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the despatches marked in the margin,* respecting the legality of marriages between British subjects when solemnized in Costa Rica, and also relating to the nationality of the children of British subjects born in the Republic. And Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any, and if so what, instructions should be given to Mr. Mathew in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and had the honour to report—

That the proposal with respect to the obligations of British subjects born in Costa Rica, contained in Señor Nazario Toledo's letter (February 16, 1859) to Mr. Mathew (No. 20) appear to me fair and reasonable.

With respect to the important question of marriages not according to the lex loci, but according to the British Consular Act, the legal effect of that Act is certainly confined to Her Majesty's dominions, though probably the validity of such marriages might be recognized in some other countries. It certainly would be desirable that the validity of such marriages in Costa Rica should be affirmed by Convention, or by Municipal law, or by both, if possible.

There is force in the observation of Mr. Mathews with respect to the possible difficulties which may arise with respect to the effects of British subjects dying intestate, from the local invalidity of such marriages; and for other reasons, also, I think it would be expedient that Mr. Mathews should be instructed to forward, as far as he can, by way of request and representation, but not by way of demand, the obtaining a recognition of the validity of these marriages by Convention or by Municipal law.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 266.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 4.)

Temple, July 3, 1863.

My Lord,

CHINA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th of June ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 20th of May last,† and our previous Reports respecting the Proclamation issued by the Governor of Hong Kong, prohibiting the export of munitions of war from that Colony, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,‡ two letters from the Colonial Office, dated the 12th and 13th of June ultimo, the first transmitting a copy of a letter from Messrs. Barnett and Sons, of the Minories, claiming to be allowed a certain time for reshipping arms consigned by them in the ordinary course of business to China, and which were landed in Hong Kong in December and February last, and the second letter inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Hong Kong, in which he described the position of the local Government in reference to the Proclamation, and suggested that it should be published in this country for the information of shippers of warlike stores; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion upon the several points therein referred to.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* To Mr. Wyke, No. 19, 1858; Mr. Wyke, No. 13, 1859; Consul Wallis, No. 15, 1861; to Mr. Mathew, No. 6, 1861; Consul Wallis, No. 18, 1861; to Consul Wallis, No. 2, 1862; Mr. Mathew, No. 27, 1862; to Mr. Mathew, No. 44, 1862; Mr. Mathew, No. 20, 1863.

† Page 158.

‡ Sir F. Bruce, No. 94; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 177; to India and Colonial Office, November 13, 1862; Colonial Office, November 22, 1862; to Colonial Office, December 17, 1862; Colonial Office, April 24, 1863; to Colonial Office, May 22, 1863; Sir F. Bruce, No. 26.

That we think it reasonable that the Governor of Hong Kong should permit the export of arms introduced into the Colony previously to the issue of the Proclamation, provided that care be taken that the arms are shipped in vessels not destined for the Chinese coasts.

It appears to us desirable that the Proclamation should be published in the "London Gazette."

We have, &c.
For myself and the Attorney-General,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 267.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 4.)

Doctors' Commons, July 3, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 525) inclosing, with other papers, a copy of a note from Mr. Seward, in which, with reference to the case of Mr. John Green, a British subject, who represents that he has been almost totally ruined by the destruction of his property in the State of Arkansas by troops in the service of the United States, Mr. Seward informs Lord Lyons that at the next session of Congress the President will call the attention of that Body to the claims of parties who have been innocently aggrieved in the prosecution of the war with a view to the establishment of some general system which shall be adequate to the emergency; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether any instructions to Lord Lyons are required at present.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the despatch of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons (8th June, 1863) upon the subject of granting compensation to the subjects of neutral States whose property has been injured during the prosecution of the war appears to me quite satisfactory, and that I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to send at present any instructions to Lord Lyons.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 268.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 4.)

Temple, July 3, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 31st of March,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 448), inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward, in which he stated that the United States' Government continued to be of opinion that there was probable and justifiable cause for the imprisonment of Mr. John Shaver, but that, in the event of a Joint Commission being established for the adjustment of claims, Mr. Shaver's case might be brought before it.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take Mr. Seward's note into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of Mr. Seward appears to us very unsatisfactory. Mr. Seward seems to think that the release of Mr. Shaver without formal trial has no bearing upon the question of his title to compensation. We are of opinion that the release founds a presumption of his innocence which cannot easily be rebutted, and which, at all events, has not been rebutted by any evidence to the contrary produced by the United States' Government. We do not think that the United States' Government is relieved from the duty of making proper compensation to the subject of a neutral and friendly State by a reference to the possible cognizance of the case by a Commission which has been suggested, but which has not yet been, and may never be, set on foot. It will, however, be for Her Majesty's Government to decide whether Mr. Shaver's claim should be further pressed at the present time, or reserved to be hereafter dealt with.

---

* Page 97.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 269.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 4)

Temple, July 4, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 15th April* respecting the case of Mr. J. Carlin, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† and with the draft of the instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons‡ founded upon our Report, a despatch from his Lordship,§ inquiring whether in coming to a decision as to what would be a fair and reasonable compensation for Mr. Carlin to claim, he was to consider that person's occupation as a pilot engaged in running the blockade as a legitimate one; and whether he was to estimate the losses Carlin has sustained on a calculation of the gains he would probably have made had he been following it with average success, instead of lying a prisoner in Fort Lafayette.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take Lord Lyons' despatch into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Lord Lyons ought to form his estimate of the amount of compensation to be demanded, so far as the loss of time is concerned, upon a calculation of the ordinary earnings of a pilot, and without reference to the extraordinary earnings derived from running the blockade.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 270.

Report on Glover v. Persigny, July 4, 1863.

[See Appendix.]

No. 271.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 6.)

Temple, July 4, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES AND URUGUAY.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th of April last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General at Monte Video (No. 22, April 11, 1863, and No. 23, April 20, 1863) reporting the circumstances under which the United States' ships "Carolina" and "Kanawka" had assumed and had navigated under the British flag, as well as a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 90, May 8, 1863), relative to the increasing number of transfers of American-built ships to British purchasers.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that he likewise inclosed two letters from the Board of Trade (dated June 16, 1863), to whom the above papers were referred, setting forth the views of that Department upon the subject; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which Her Majesty's Government should take thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree in substance with the opinions stated in the Reports of the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, and that we adhere to the opinion expressed in our former Report on this subject.

We do not advise Her Majesty's Government to take any steps in this matter.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 272.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 6.)

Temple, July 6, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch (dated the 3rd July instant), from the Governor of the Bahamas, relative to the sinking by a United States' vessel of war, off Eleuthera, of a Confederate ship called the "Margaret and Jessie;" and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming the statements in the protest of the Master of the steamship "Margaret and Jessie" to be worthy of credit (and they appear to receive confirmation from Governor Bayley's despatch), there is no doubt that the armed vessel of the United States, supposed to have been the "Rhode Island," committed a gross breach of international law by firing upon the vessel the "Margaret and Jessie," not only within the territorial waters of Her Majesty, but within a few yards of the actual shore of one of Her Majesty's possessions; and it will be the duty of Her Majesty's Government to seek for and obtain immediate redress for the offence which has been committed.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 273.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 9.)

Temple, July 7, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 21st May,† and to our previous Reports, respecting the case of the

---

* Page 116.

† Mr. Turner, September 8; to Mr. Stuart, No. 119; Mr. Stuart, No. 296; Lord Lyons, Nos. 27, 28, 111, 190, and 209.

‡ To Lord Lyons, No. 207, April 22, 1863.

§ Lord Lyons, No. 446, May 25, 1863.

* Page 130.

† Page 161.

1863

"Blanche," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, inclosing a copy of a note addressed by Mr. Seward to M. Tassara, together with a printed copy of the proofs, depositions, and correspondence therein referred to,* conveying the views of the United States' Government with regard to the claims upon it advanced by the British and Spanish Governments in connection with this case; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our observations thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the intentional violation of the neutral waters of Spain by the United States' Commander Hunter is at least recognized, not only by the letter of Mr. Seward, but by the dismissal of the officer who was guilty of it from the service of the United States.

That with respect to that part of the letter of Mr. Seward which refers to the evidence taken before the United States' Court-martial, and the conclusions which he founds upon it, we have to observe that Her Majesty's Government, having taken no part in those proceedings, cannot admit that the evidence formerly laid before the United States' Government by Her Majesty's Government, as to the circumstances of the seizure and destruction of the vessel, is at all displaced by those proceedings; and we think that Her Majesty's Government must continue to express its opinion that the vessel so seized, in plain and intentional violation of international law, was also destroyed by the wrongdoers upon that occasion.

In the presence of contradictory statements on the one side and on the other with reference to this part of the subject, it seems to us sufficient for all practical purposes to observe, that the destruction of the vessel would certainly never have occurred but for the wrongful and violent attempt of Commander Hunter to seize her, in avowed contempt of international law, within Spanish waters; that, even if she were actually fired, under these circumstances, by her own crew, the responsibility of the wrongdoer for this consequence of his unlawful act would remain the same; and that no presumption can be admitted as to any doubtful question of fact in favour of the aggressors in such a case. The practical question is, whether the United States' Government is internationally responsible for the loss sustained by the injured parties; and we think that Her Majesty's Government ought not to treat this as an open or doubtful question. We hope that the Government of Spain will arrive at a similar conclusion.

There remains, however, a subject of the gravest importance, to which we adverted in our former Report, but to which we think the attention of Her Majesty's Government should again be most particularly directod. Mr. Seward now expresses his formal opinion "that the 'Blanche' was an American vessel lawfully belonging to American citizens, from whom she had been piratically taken by armed insurgents of the United States, and that she was in possession of such insurgents at the time of her destruction, and that her cargo also belonged, not to British subjects, but to such insurgents."

We have in vain endeavoured to discover the grounds on which Mr. Seward rests this assertion, either from his letter to M. Tassara of the 21st of May itself, or from the correspondence and proceedings of the Court martial on Captain Hunter, as printed by the authority of the United States' Government. By the documents (at pages 134 to 138 inclusive, of the printed Correspondence, &c.), it clearly appears that the ship in question, which had previously been navigated as Confederate property, under the name of the "General Rusk," was, on the 31st July, 1862, transferred at Havana, by bill of sale, under a regular power of attorney, from W. L. Smith, of Galveston, her Confederate owner, to Mr. George Wigg, of Liverpool, a British subject, for the valuable consideration of 50,000 dollars, and that she received on the same day, from the British Consul at Havana, a temporary certificate of registry as a British ship, in accordance with the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict., cap. 104, sect. 54.

It further appears that she was, from that time, until she was destroyed, navigated under the name of the "Blanche," as a British ship, with British papers. Nothing whatever appears in this "Correspondence, &c.," or in any other of the documents before us, as to her prior history; and if at any earlier period she was owned by citizens of the United States, there is a total absence of particulars, and of evidence, as to the fact of such ownership, and also as to the circumstances under which the ship afterwards came into the hands of W. L. Smith, who sold her to her British owner.

The papers to which we have referred, and the actual possession of the ship under them, establish a clear case of British ownership, which, at present, there is nothing whatever, beyond Mr. Seward's bare assertion, to displace; and we think that Her Majesty's Government cannot for a moment acquiesce, upon the bare assertion of Mr. Seward, in the refusal of the United States' Government to recognize such British ownership, and the claims to compensation thence arising.

It is to be observed, that in the proceedings before the Court-martial no evidence was offered on this subject, except the statements (almost entirely hearsay) of a single witness, James Speirs, who appears to have been a fireman on board the "Blanche," and who took upon himself to state his belief as to the nationality of the captain, officers, and crew; making out the captain to be, "as he understood," an American; and the rest of the crew, men of various European nations, with only one Englishman and three Irishmen.

In answer to questions put to him, he added, that he "had heard it said that before she began to run the blockade she was a rebel gun-boat;" that he had heard it said she was owned by a man of the name of Morgan, in New York." He "heard this while on board of her;" and he gave an account of a transaction which he represented to have taken place while she was at Port Lavaca, in Texas, which (if true) amounted to no more than this, that some Confederate soldiers there took temporary possession of her (turning out her captain and crew, and stores), with the view of making use of her for some warlike purpose; and that after keeping such possession for a week, they gave her up again to the crew, who then proceeded to finish her lading with a cargo of cotton. (Correspondence, &c., pages 313, 314.)

We deem it impossible that Mr. Seward can suppose himself warranted in building any conclusion upon this "evidence" (if such it can be called), in opposition to the ship's papers and to her British register. Still less can we suppose that Mr. Seward adopts the argument used by Commander Hunter in his defence (Correspondence, &c., page 339), that this was not a British ship, because "the Act of the British Parliament, recognized by our Department of State, as the one in force on the subject of provisional register, requires that the captain and three-fourths of the crew be native-born British subjects." We presume that Commander Hunter was then referring to 12 and 13 Victoria, cap. 29, sect. 7, in ignorance that this statute had been repealed by 17 and 18 Victoria, cap. 120; and that the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 and 18 Victoria, cap. 104 (sections 17 to 54), contains no similar requirements.

In the absence of any explanation of the real grounds on which the British ownership of the "Blanche" is disputed by Mr. Seward, we can only conjecture that he may possibly be proceeding upon the same ground, to which reference was made in Lord Lyons' despatches of December 22, 1862 (No. 539), and March 6, 1863 (No. 208); and that the facts on which his assertions are founded may, on further explanation, prove to be, that this vessel, having been originally owned in the United States, was captured by a cruizer of the Confederate States, and after being regularly condemned as lawful prize by a Confederate Prize Court, was sold to the person by whom she was afterwards transferred to her present British owner; and that Mr. Seward (as he left Lord Lyons to collect, from his conversation in March last), refuses to recognize the validity of any sale made under a Decree of a Confederate Prize Court. The same point appears to be indicated by that part of Commander Hunter's defence, in which he suggested, for the decision of the Court-martial, "whether a transfer made by an insurgent in Havana could, consistently with existing Treaty provisions, transfer stolen American property to a British subject."

Under these circumstances, it being (as has been already intimated by Lord Lyons to the United States' Government), impossible for Her Majesty's Government to acquiesce in a pretension, contrary to the clearest principles of international law, we think it indispensably necessary that the title of the

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 464, May 25, 1863; and printed Papers.

1863

British purchaser of the "Blanche" should be maintained, and the question promptly brought to a distinct issue.

The pretension amounts to this:—That the Government of the United States, while it claims from all neutral States the rights, at the same time refuses to acknowledge the corresponding obligations, of a belligerent Power.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 274.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 9.)

Temple, July 7, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th of June ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 8th of May,* he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, four further despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons (Nos. 385, 407, 456, and 517), respecting the case of the "Adela," and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the following position: That the decision of the Judge in the case of the "Adela" does not give the grounds of condemnation. That if the Judge saw no sufficient grounds for condemnation, he ought to have released the vessel, and have left it to the United States' authorities to detain her, and appeal to a Superior Court. And Mr. Layard was further pleased to request that we would inform your Lordship whether your Lordship is right in this view.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th of June ultimo, stating that he was directed to state to us that in conformity with the opinion expressed in the concluding paragraph of our Report of the 8th ultimo, that Her Majesty's Government should wait for the decision of the Superior Tribunal before giving any further instructions in the matter, that your Lordship had abstained from issuing any further instructions to Lord Lyons; but that your Lordship would now be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to whether it would be proper that an intimation to that effect should be conveyed to Mr. Forwood, whose letter of the 16th day of April has remained up to the present time without any further answer than that it should be considered by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that your Lordship's view is correct, and that if the Judge saw no sufficient grounds for condemnation, he ought to have given sentence in favour of the vessel; the onus probandi lies upon the captor.

With respect to the sale of the vessel after a sentence of condemnation, such a proceeding is in accordance with the practice of Prize Courts, and in this case it appears, upon the face of the sentence, to have been consented to by the claimants; a fact of which we think Mr. Forwood can hardly have been aware when he made the order for sale a ground of special complaint. We think that Mr. Forwood should be officially apprised that Her Majesty's Government are waiting for the decision of the Court of Appeal before they determine what course it will be proper for them to pursue.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 147.

No. 275.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 9.)

Temple, July 9, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter addressed to Mr. Roebuck, M.P., by Mr. Alfred Sellers, whose case, as a British subject who had declared his intention to become a United States' citizen, formed the subject of our Report of the 18th of October last; in which he urges Mr. Roebuck to try and get some definite answer from Her Majesty's Government with regard to his position under the recent Proclamation of the President of the United States, declaring that foreigners who had stated their intention to become citizens are liable to be included in the conscription unless they shall remove from the United States within sixty-five days of the date of the Proclamation; and to request that we would take Mr. Sellers' letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to alter the opinion which we have had the honour to express upon this question,—that the period of sixty-five days cannot be assumed to be an unreasonable period to allow for the departure of foreigners who have simply declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. That, nevertheless (as we have already advised in another case), we think the good offices of Her Majesty's Representative at Washington might properly be interposed to obtain an extension of the time so allowed in any particular case in which it would be productive of special and manifest hardship to refuse such extension to British subjects bonâ fide intending to leave the United States.

We do not, however, find any special circumstances in the case of Mr. Sellers (as at present stated) which would entitle him to be exempted from the operation of this order of the United States' Government. The order does not, in our opinion, constitute any breach of the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1815. The liberty to reside in the United States thereby given to British subjects cannot be deemed to exempt them from the general obligation of all residents to obey the laws of the country in which they live, nor to involve any engagement on the part of the United States' Government not to make these laws, by subsequent legislation, more onerous than they may have been when particular British subjects commenced their residence: Provided always, that such British subjects are not more unfavourably dealt with than citizens of the United States, and that they have a reasonable opportunity given them of leaving the country if they do not like to submit to such new laws. That Treaty cannot be fairly construed as preventing the United States' Government, in a time of great national peril, from offering to foreigners (and especially to those who have declared on oath their intention to become citizens) the alternative of either leaving the country within a reasonable time, or remaining there on the condition of sharing the burthens which an extraordinary necessity imposes on the citizens of the Republic. It would be a different question if any such foreigners were required to bear arms against their own country; but that question has not arisen, nor can we assume that it will ever practically arise.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 276.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 11.)

Doctors' Commons, July 10, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 27th day of April,* respecting Messrs. Crow and Wylie's timber at Pensacola, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,† two despatches, and their inclosures, from Lord Lyons,‡ from which I should perceive that the United States' Government continues to decline to allow the timber in question to be exported. And Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this further correspondence into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this further correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think Lord Lyons should be instructed to express the regret of Her Majesty's Government at the reply of the United States' Government, and to say that the reasons assigned for their refusal to allow the exportation are not satisfactory.

The objection to the insufficiency of the title does not appear to have been raised in June 1862, when Mr. Crow sought permission from the authorities at Washington to export the timber.

I do not think, however, that Lord Lyons should be instructed to go beyond this.

I observe that the Agent of Messrs. Crow and Wylie is admitted, in their Memorandum of the 7th day of May, 1862, to have some interest in the timber, and to be a person whose political sympathies are probably on the side of the Confederates.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 277.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 11.)

Doctors' Commons, July 10, 1863.

UNITED STATES

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th June ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 23rd June,§ he was directed to trasmit to me the papers, as marked in the margin,‖ respecting the case of the British steamer "Aries," stated to have been taken into the United States' service before condemnation, and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that if I should be of opinion that it would be advisable that these papers should be submitted to the Law Officers, in connection with his letter of the 29th June on the subject of the appropriation of vessels before condemnation, your Lordship requested that I would so submit them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it cannot be conceded to Mr. Seward that the fact of the "Aries" having been condemned after she was appropriated as a gun-boat by the United States' Government removes the original ground of complaint in this case.

One of the evils attendant on this novel and irregular practice is the bias which the knowledge of the appropriation must leave, or must be not unreasonably supposed to leave, on the mind of the Court which, subsequently to the appropriation, tries the case on its merits. This observation belongs to the present case. But as it has lately appeared that the United States' Government intend to discontinue this practice, it may properly be left to the discretion of Lord Lyons whether he would further press the particular case of the "Aries," which is now condemned, upon the attention of the United States' Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 134.

† Messrs. Crow and Wylie, May 7, 1862; to Messrs. Crow and Wylie, May 9; to Lord Lyons, No. 205; Lord Lyons, No. 273; to Messrs. Crow and Wylie, June 20; Mr. Stuart, No. 155; to Mr. Stuart, No. 168; to Messrs. Crow and Wylie, September 5; Lord Lyons, No. 521; Mr. Wylie to Mr. Horsfall, March 19, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 232.

‡ Lord Lyons, No. 449, May 25, 1863; No. 510, June 8, 1863.

§ Page 188.

‖ Consul Lousada, Nos. 19 and 21; Lord Lyons, Nos. 458, 479, and 518.

No. 278.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 13.)

Doctors' Commons, July 11, 1863.

NETHERLANDS.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a note, dated the 17th June ultimo, from the Netherlands Minister at this Court, making inquiry as to the nationality of a Mr. Uhlenbeck, who was born in Ceylon in 1820, of Dutch parents, together with a letter, dated the 3rd July instant, on the subject from the Colonial Office; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Baron Bentinck's inquiry.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Uhlenbeck, having been born in one of Her Majesty's possessions, has the rights and privileges of a natural-born British subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 279.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 14.)

Temple, July 13, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 4th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Treasury inclosing a copy of an application from Messrs. Fletcher and Hull, on behalf of Messrs. Fawcett, Preston, and Co., for permission to recaulk the decks and sides of the "Alexandra," on the ground that she is taking daily and increasing damage by reason of the present hot weather, and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this application into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this application into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think permission may be given to Messrs. Fawcett, Preston, and Co. to recaulk the decks and sides of the "Alexandra," on their giving a written undertaking to the Collector of Customs at Liverpool not to endeavour to use such permission in any way to prejudice the pending claim of the Crown.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 280.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 15.)

Temple, July 13, 1863.

PERU.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th July instant, stating that with reference to our Reports noted in the margin,* and to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General dated 1st November, 1862, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that Her Majesty's Government have come to an agreement with the Government of Peru that the question as to the amount of compensation to be paid by the latter to Mr. Melville White should be referred to the arbitration of a friendly

---

* June 25, July 15, and November 12, 1861; see Reports for 1861, pages 133, 148, and 279.

1863

Power, and it is proposed that the Government of the Hanseatic States should be invited to undertake this responsibility.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that we would see from the note from the Peruvian Minister in this country, which was likewise inclosed (dated July 2, 1863), that M. Sanz has suggested that steps should be taken to record the terms on which the reference to arbitration should be made, and your Lordship was of opinion that this could best be done by the exchange of a note verbale between your Lordship and M. Sanz.

Mr. Layard further stated that your Lordship had accordingly directed the inclosed draft of such a note verbale to be drawn up and submitted for our earliest consideration, and he had only further to add that the mode in which your Lordship proposed to refer the question, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, to the Arbitrator had been adopted in view of the necessity to free Her Majesty's Government from all responsibility as regards Mr. Melville White's statements or assessment of damages.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the proposed note of your Lordship appears to us fit and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 281.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 15.)

Doctors' Commons, July 15, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 8th July instant from Mr. Joseph Battersby, stating that on the 19th of December, 1861, he despatched the British ship "Consul" on a voyage to Halifax, with an assorted cargo suitable for one of the southern ports of the United States; that the cargo was shipped for account and risk of his firm of William Battersby and Co. of Savannah; that the "Consul" was sent out to Halifax with the expectation that the war would not be of any continuance; that he has not had, nor has now, the slightest intention of running the blockade with the "Consul," which is utterly unsuited for such a trade; but that as the war does not seem likely to terminate soon, he is desirous of sending the vessel and cargo to Nassau, there to sell the cargo and seek employment for the ship; that he is, however, apprehensive that if he should do so, United States' cruizers may seize the "Consul," on the ground that the goods of a resident in the Confederate States are liable to seizure and condemnation, as enemy's property; and that Mr. Battersby therefore requests to be informed whether, if the "Consul" should proceed to Nassau, he may consider that she is legally safe from capture, and whether if she should be captured he may rely that Her Majesty's Government will see that he and his brother, as British subjects, are compensated by the United States' Government;—and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Mr. Battersby's application into consideration with reference to the Report of the late Queen's Advocate of the 22nd of October, 1861,* in the case of the "Aigburth," and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Battersby.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that an answer should be returned to Mr. Battersby to the following effect:—That inasmuch as Mr. Battersby belongs to a firm locally established in the Confederate States, his vessel would be liable to capture by the cruizers of the United States, as enemy's property, although it should be proved that she had no intention of breaking the blockade.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1861, page 247.

No. 282.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 17.)

Temple, July 16, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th June ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 482, 29th May), and a copy of the despatch from Mr. Vice-Consul Butterfield therein referred to, respecting the capture by the United States' cruizer "Sonoma" of the British schooner "Clyde," on the ground, as it is asserted, that her cargo was Confederate property.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit the correspondence respecting international maritime law (North America, No. 3), laid before Parliament last year, which contains the two despatches to which Her Majesty's Minister specially refers, and from which may be deduced the acknowledgment by the Government of the United States, of the doctrine of the IInd Article of the Treaty of Paris, that the neutral flag covers enemies' goods; and to request that we would take the case of the "Clyde" into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 3rd and 14th July instant, trasmitting further papers respecting this case.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the statement as to the cause of the seizure of the "Clyde" is one which, assuming it to be correct, appears to us to require the immediate attention of Her Majesty's Government.

It is the first intimation which Her Majesty's Government has yet received of any intention on the part of the United States' Government to adhere to the old practice with respect to enemy's goods found in neutral bottoms; and though it cannot be said that the United States' Government had expressly bound itself by a formal declaration in writing to adhere to the principles of the Declaration of Paris upon this subject, yet the language of Mr. Seward, in the correspondence referred to, had necessarily been understood by neutral States as a declaration that those principles would be acted upon by the United States during the present war.

It would not seem desirable to wait for the decision of the Prize Court in the case of the "Clyde," in order to ascertain the course which the United States' Government intend to pursue upon this very important point, but that Lord Lyons should be instructed to communicate directly with Mr. Seward upon the subject, and to represent that Her Majesty's Government feel they would have reason to complain if the ancient rule were acted upon by the United States' cruizers, or in their Prize Courts, after what has passed, without some reasonable notice of an intention to depart from the understanding which was supposed to have been established.

It would appear from the last despatch of Mr. Consul Butterfield that the Prize Court does intend to enforce the old law as to enemy's goods in neutral bottoms. We are therefore confirmed in the opinion which we have expressed to your Lordship in this Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 283.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 17.)

Doctors' Commons, July 16, 1863.

My Lord,

Denmark.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to my letter of the 15th ultimo, on the question of the nationality of Mr. Rainals, he was directed

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 549, June 16; Consul Archibald, No. 97, June 8; No. 104, June 29.

1863

by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen (Nos. 148 and 151), supplying the further information relating to this matter which I had requested might be obtained from him.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the former papers for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have further considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That it now appears that there is no such Treaty or Convention in existence as that which Mr. Rainals invoked in favour of his claim from exemption from the tax in question.

It is not denied that he was born in Denmark, and the opinion of the Danish lawyer so far coincides with that expressed by M. Hall (June 2, 1863, Inclosure 8 in No. 132) that the renunciation by Mr. Rainals of his rights as a citizen of Elsinore does not relieve him from the obligations of allegiance to the Crown of Denmark.

It is admitted that he obtained the Borgerbrev; and I have already expressed my opinion that he must, in the circumstances, be deemed to have taken the usual preliminary oath.

I infer also that he obtained this Borgerbrev on the footing of a Danish subject, and without the delay of five years which would have been necessary for a foreigner. It appears that though, by returning the Borgerbrev, he is replaced in his former position, he nevertheless remains subject to whatever obligations attach to a person born in Denmark, and subsequently resident there.

Looking, therefore, at the whole of the evidence before me, I cannot advise your Lordship that Mr. Rainals can claim, as a matter of strict right, exemption from the tax in question; though, as a matter of comity, regard being had to the position which he holds, such an exemption might, perhaps, have been reasonably conceded to him.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 284.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 18.)

SPAIN.

Doctors' Commons, July 18, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated 7th July, 1863, from Messrs. Littledale, Ridley, and Bardswell, setting forth the circumstances under which the Spanish Consul at Liverpool has called upon their client Mr. Inman, the managing director of the ship "New York," of Liverpool, to hand over to him in his capacity of Spanish Consul, the effects of Mr. Joseph Wotterding, who died at sea on board the "New York." That it is stated that amongst the effects of the deceased was a copy of his will in Spanish, and that the deceased was supposed to be a Spanish subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a volume in which I should find correspondence as to the right, under Treaty, of interference on the part of British Consuls in the Spanish dominions, and Spanish Consuls in Her Majesty's dominions, in cases of intestate property; and to request that I would take Messrs. Littledale's letter into early consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer to Messrs. Littledale should be to the effect that the Treaty invoked by the Spanish Consul applies to the case of Spanish subjects dying intestate in Her Majesty's dominions, and that Mr. Wotterding appears to have died testate; and if this be so, the request of the Spanish Consul is not founded upon the Treaty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 285.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 18.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 18, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th July instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 14th of May,* he was directed to transmit to me a further correspondence with Lord Lyons† on the questions arising out of the late Act of the United States' Congress relating to Habeas Corpus; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

The previous papers were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the despatch of Lord Lyons confirms the opinion which I had the honour to express in my former Report as to the necessity of a carefully written and recognized Memorandum, embodying the record of the engagement given by Mr. Seward to his Lordship, that the United States' Executive at least would consider, so far as their action was concerned, the provisions of the Treaties as not repealed by the express words of the Act of Congress. It appears to me that the decision of Taylor and Morton (2 Curtis, 434), cited in the able opinion of Mr. Carlisle, renders this precaution the more necessary. I collect from the statement of that case that the Court decided that an Act of Congress subsequent to a Treaty, and conflicting with it, did supersede and abrogate it, which appears plainly to contradict the construction which Mr. Seward put upon the law in his conversation with Lord Lyons.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 286.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 18.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 18, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th July instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 27th of May,‡ he was directed to transmit to me, with the previous papers, the further despatches and their inclosures which have been received from Lord Lyons (Nos. 516, 424, 446, 457, and 578), respecting the case of the "Antona," and the imprisonment of Mr. Grindle; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether any, and if so what, further instructions should be addressed to Lord Lyons in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the "Antona" has been condemned by default, nobody appearing to claim the vessel, it must be presumed that she was lawfully captured; and as your Lordship has already given full instructions to Lord Lyons upon the subject of the sale of vessels previously to a sentence of condemnation, and as Mr. Seward has, I think, undertaken, since the sale of the "Antona," that this practice shall not be repeated, it does not occur to me that there is any necessity to send further instructions to Lord Lyons in this matter.

With respect to the detention of Mr. Grindle, it is accounted for to a great extent by Mr. Seward as arising out of a peculiar emergency, and I observe that the right to detain him as a prisoner of war is not asserted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 154. † To Lord Lyons, No. 314; Lord Lyons, No. 569. ‡ Page 164.

1863

No. 287.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 21.)

Temple, July 21, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 4th of April,* he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 4th of July instant, from the Treasury, inclosing an application from the owners of the "Alexandra" for the restoration of that vessel to them, and for payment of the costs of the recent trial, together with a Report from the Solicitor of Customs, to whom this application had been referred; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the letter of the Solicitor to the Customs that even in the event of the ruling of the Lord Chief Baron at the late trial being holden to be erroneous, Her Majesty's Government would not be in a condition to adduce the same, or equally strong evidence against the ship, with that which was given at the trial; and we concur with him in thinking that if this should be so, it would be probably unadvisable to proceed to trial again. It is still, however, important in our opinion to proceed with the Bill of Exceptions, in order to obtain a definite settlement of the law: and in these circumstances, the question whether the ship should be retained in the mean time, or delivered up on proper terms to the claimants, appears to us to be one attended with considerable difficulty. If this question were to be determined on grounds unconnected with the particular evils which the Foreign Enlistment Act was intended to prevent, and without reference to considerations of policy, as between this country and the United States, we should think it desirable to avoid the heavy and accumulating claim for damages to which Her Majesty's Government may render themselves liable by a prolonged detention of the vessel, in the event (which is to be anticipated) of an ultimate failure to establish the title of the Crown; and at the same time we should think it most just, and most consonant with general principles, not unnecessarily to retain an interim possession, which (according to our present estimate of future contingencies) it may be necessary ultimately to relinquish without another trial, even in the event of the Chief Baron's ruling being held to be erroneous. If, therefore, the claimants were willing to give a bond, in a proper form, to restore the vessel or her value in the event of the still-pending litigation terminating in favour of the Crown, we should think (apart from the considerations which we shall next proceed to notice), that it would be proper to deliver her up to them on these terms; it being, of course, understood that the Crown should not be prejudiced in the litigation by that course.

Before, however, this course is determined upon (the question being a practical one, on which the discretion of Her Majesty's Government must be exercised), it seems necessary to weigh maturely the situation in which the Crown may be placed, in events which might possibly flow, as consequences, from such a course. It is possible, for example, that after being delivered over upon the terms above mentioned to the claimants, the "Alexandra" might be sent to sea from Liverpool, fully and unequivocally equipped as a vessel of war, and might (perhaps even while the question of law was being argued, and while a decision might be pronounced on that question favourable to the Crown) be actually and notoriously engaged in hostile operations against the United States. To provide against this, it might perhaps be made part of the terms of the delivery up of the ship, that the claimants should engage that she should not be thus employed, and that the Crown might retake possession if anything should be done inconsistent with the terms or spirit of such an engagement. But it is obvious that these are terms to which the owners would not be likely to accede, as their object must be, either to deliver the ship to the Confederate Government (if, as we believe, she was originally intended for them), or to sell her to some other willing purchaser; and it would not be consistent with such an object that they should enter into any undertaking as to her subsequent employment.

---

* Page 102.

In this choice of difficulties, it has occurred to us that a solution might possibly be found in a purchase of the vessel (subject to a proper engagement for repayment of the price in the event of a final judgment passing for the Crown in the pending litigation) by Her Majesty's Government; and we have reason to believe that in a letter which has been communicated by Mr. Horsfall to Lord Palmerston, the claimants have expressed their willingness to make such a sale. We cannot but think that such an arrangement would be highly desirable, if the ship, when so purchased, can be turned to any useful purpose.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 288.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 23.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, July 22, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence, as marked in the margin,* between the Treasury and the Foreign Office, respecting a vessel called the "Lord Clyde," which lately cleared at Cardiff, under circumstances which gave rise to a suspicion that she was intended to act hostilely against American commerce. That we should observe that sundry packages on board the "Lord Clyde" were opened and searched by the Custom-house officers, and that a claim for demurrage, &c., has been preferred by her owners in consequence. Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this claim into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, transmitting to us further papers relative to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, the demurrage claimed ought to be allowed and paid by Her Majesty's Government. It appears to have been supposed by the Customs authorities at Cardiff, and by the American Consul, that the export of articles contraband of war was a violation of the municipal law of this country, which it clearly was not.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 289.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, July 22, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th July instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 1st of May† upon the claim of Mr. Robert Bowden against the United States' Government, arising out of his capture on board the "Peterhoff," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers,‡ the draft of a letter which was addressed on the 5th of May to Mr. Reed, Mr. Bowden's Agent, founded upon our Report, and a letter which had been received from Mr. Reed, inclosing papers and stating particulars respecting Mr. Bowden's claim, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereon.

---

* Treasury, May 28; to Treasury, May 29; Treasury, May 30; to Treasury, June 1; Treasury, June 4 and June 25, 1863.

† Page 142.

‡ Mr. Bowden, April 22; to Mr. Bowden, April 23; Mr. Bowden, April 28 and May 1, 1863.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the calculation by which Mr. Bowden's claim is made to amount to 6,250*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* appears to us very doubtful, and too hypothetical to be relied upon. We should be glad to receive the assistance of some competent and disinterested merchant or person skilled in mercantile accounts before we make our Report to your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 290.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 23.)

Temple, July 22, 1863.

TURKEY.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a correspondence which had passed between the Foreign Office, the Board of Trade, and Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople,* upon the subject of a proposed alteration in certain fees levied by Her Majesty's Consuls in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte.

And also a draft of a proposed Order in Council intended to carry that alteration into effect; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the proposed draft is right and proper.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Mundy's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with a reply to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, relative to the proposed Order in Council regarding the contemplated alteration in certain fees levied by Her Majesty's Consuls in the dominions of the Sublime Porte, as it was important that the Order should be passed at the next Council, which would very shortly be held.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused the inclosed draft Order in Council, and are of opinion that it is right and proper for the purpose for which it is intended.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 290.

Draft of Order in Council.

WHEREAS by the 4th section of the Act of the sixth year of the reign of King George IV, cap. 87, intituled "An Act to regulate the payment of salaries and allowances to British Consuls at foreign ports, and the disbursements at such ports for certain public purposes," it is amongst other things enacted "that it shall and may be lawful for all Consuls-General and Consuls appointed by His Majesty, and resident within the dominions of any Sovereign, or any foreign State or Power in amity with His Majesty, to accept, take, and receive, the several fees particularly mentioned in the Tables to the said Act annexed, for and in respect or on account of the several matters, and things, and official acts and deeds particularly mentioned in the said schedules; and that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty by any Order or Orders to be by him made, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, from time to time, as occasion may require, to increase or diminish, or wholly to abolish, all or any of the fees aforesaid, and to establish and authorize the payment of any greater or smaller, or new or additional fees or fee, for or in respect of the several matters and things mentioned in the said schedules, or any of them, or for or in respect of any other matters or things, or matter or thing, to be by any such Consul-General or Consul done or performed in the execution of such his office."

And whereas by an Order in Council made on the 1st of May, 1855, it was ordered that certain fees mentioned in the Table thereunto annexed should be taken, and whereas one of the fees mentioned in the said Table was 10*s.* for a bill of health, and whereas it is expedient in certain cases to abolish the said fee so ordered to be taken, and to establish and authorize the payment of other fees in lieu thereof: Now therefore, in pursuance of the said Act, and in execution of the powers in Her Majesty in Council in that behalf vested by the said Act, it is hereby ordered by Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, that, in so far as regards British ships in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, the said fee of 10*s.* for a bill of health shall be abolished, and, in lieu thereof, the fees hereinafter mentioned shall and may be taken in respect of every such ship on each occasion of her entering or clearing at any port in the said dominions, namely, on her entry inwards 5*s.*, on her clearance outwards (including a bill of health if required) 5*s.*

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 291.

The Queen's Proctor to Mr. Layard.—(Received July 24.)

Doctors' Commons, July 23, 1863.

PERU.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, stating that you were directed by Earl Russell to transmit to me a collection of correspondence between his Lordship on the one part, and Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima and the Peruvian Minister in this country on the other, regarding the case of Mr. Melville White.

That the question between the two Governments is now practically limited to a decision as to the amount at which compensation should be assessed, for M. Sanz has admitted to Lord Russell that whilst his Government could not agree to the principle involved, he was ready to pay 1,000*l.* to Mr. White.

That Her Majesty's Government, acting on the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General, had assessed the compensation to be demanded for Mr. White at a much larger sum, but they have accepted the proposal of the Peruvian Government that the matter should be referred to the arbitration of a friendly Power; and steps would shortly be taken to request the Senate of Hamburgh to accept the responsibility.

That the course which Earl Russell considered would be most conveniently adopted to bring this matter, so far as Her Majesty's Government are concerned, under the consideration of the arbitrator would be as follows:—

1. A statement of the case, so far as the intervention of Her Majesty's Government and of Her Majesty's Legation in Peru are concerned, would be prepared and laid before the arbitrator.

2. Mr. White, as the party concerned, would be called upon to furnish a statement of his own case, and this statement Lord Russell would cause to be laid before the arbitrator, holding himself, however, free from all responsibility, both as to the facts therein set forth, and as to any amount of compensation which might be therein claimed.

That with a view to carry this arrangement into effect, you were to request that I would lose no time in preparing the statement No. 1 to be laid before the arbitrator on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to Earl Russell's directions, I have prepared, and have now the honour to transmit the case on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and beg to suggest that the same, if approved of, should be returned to me with

---

* Consul-General Cumberbatch and Sir E. Hornby, No. 15; to Consul-General Cumberbatch, No. 6; Consul-General Cumberbatch, No. 18; to Board of Trade, April 17; Board of Trade, May 1; to Consul-General Cumberbatch, No. 14; Consul-General Cumberbatch, No. 29; to Board of Trade, June 2; Board of Trade, June 20, 1863.

1863

directions as to submitting it to the Law Officers of the Crown, and procuring the same to be printed for the use of the Senate of Hamburgh.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. DYKE.

No. 292.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 24.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, July 24, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter dated the 11th July instant and its inclosures from Mr. Adams, respecting a steam-vessel of war which is stated to be in process of construction at Liverpool for the use of the Government of the so-styled Confederate States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our Report thereupon. And Mr. Layard was to add that copies of these papers had been forwarded to the Treasury and Home Office in order that such steps may be taken in the matter as can legally and properly be adopted.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letters of the 14th, 15th, and 17th instant, transmitting to us, for consideration, further papers and correspondence relative to this matter, and also to another vessel of a similar character.

In obedience to the commands of your Lordship we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to detain, or in any way interfere with, the steam-vessels in question.

Not only is there no reliable evidence that the vessels are destined to be employed in the service of the Confederate States, but there is the positive statement of the French Consul that the vessels are French property. The alleged superintendence of Captain Bullock, as deposed to, stops far short of proof of an intent that the vessels shall be employed to cruize against the United States, while the opposite view derives countenance and probability from the statements which have come to the ears of Mr. Edwards, the Inspector of Customs at Liverpool, to the effect that the destination of these vessels is the service of some foreign non-belligerent Government. (See his letter to the Commissioners of Customs of the 11th July.)

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 293.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 24.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, July 24, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches,* and their inclosures, respecting the revocation by the Confederate Government of Mr. G. Moore's exequatur as Her Majesty's Consul at Richmond; and also respecting the determination of that Government not to permit communication between Consuls in those States, and the "functionaries of their Governments residing within the enemy's lines;" and also stating that your Lordship does not see that the British Government can complain of the act of revoking Mr. Moore's exequatur, nor of the rule that Consuls in the Confederate States must not correspond with Her Majesty's Minister in the Northern States.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 537, June 12, 1863; No. 551, June 16, 1863; Consul Moore, No. 23, June 9, 1863.

Mr. Hammond was, however, to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and to report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordships commands we have taken these papers* into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that neither the revocation of the exequatur of Mr. Moore, nor the prohibition issued to British Consuls to correspond with Her Majesty's Representative in the United States, do, in the particular circumstances, constitute any valid or legal ground of complaint on the part of Her Majesty's Government against the Government of the Confederate States.

The Confederate States' Government has a right, in the state of its present relations to this country, to adopt this course of proceeding with respect to British Consuls.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 294.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 25.)

SPAIN.

Temple, July 24, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th of June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence marked in the margin† respecting the case of the British vessel "Anne Catherine," the master of which had been fined by the Spanish authorities at Huelva, in consequence of the accidental death of a Spanish soldier on board his vessel at that port; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what further steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That though it was undoubtedly competent to the Spanish Court to deal with the question of the forfeiture of the bail and to disregard the proceedings before the British Vice-Consul, we think the mode of inquiry warranted the remonstrance of Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid, but we do not think that any further steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 295.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

PERSIA.

Temple, July 24, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 19th of March last‡ upon the case of Mirza John Ibrahim, suspected of having committed a robbery on the British Legation at Tehran, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch on that subject from Mr. Thomson (No. 48), inclosing a copy of a statement made by Mirza John Ibrahim in answer to the charges brought against him, and to request that we would take these papers,

---

* Also letter from Mr. Layard, dated the 8th instant, containing further papers.

† Mr. Owen, October 30, 1862; Sir J. Crampton, No. 390, December 3, 1862; Consul Brackenbury, No. 26, November 28, 1862; to Consul Brackenbury, No. 3, November 10, 1862; Queen's Advocate, December 27, 1862; Sir J. Crampton, No. 55, February 22, 1863; Mr. Edwards, No. 42, May 18, 1863; Board of Trade, June 9, 1863.

‡ Page 79.

1863

together with the former ones therewith inclosed,* into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to add, by way of postscript, that since the above was written the despatch inclosed had been received from Mr. Alison (July 6).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as we can form an opinion upon the evidence laid before us upon so serious a charge, we think that the conclusion at which Mr. Thomson has arrived is correct; namely, that Mirza John Ibrahim received and used property which he must have known to be stolen: but that he cannot, upon the evidence of such discredited and discreditable persons as his servants now are proved to be, be considered guilty of having instigated the commission of the robbery.

The credentials afforded by Mr. Alison are no doubt worthy of consideration, but they can weigh very little against the positive evidence to which Mr. Thomson refers; and there is a fact, in itself perhaps not of a very grave nature, but relatively to the effect of credentials as to general character important, referred to by Mr. Eastwick (December 16, 1862, No. 4), and not, we believe contradicted, namely, that the portfolio of John Ibrahim was found to contain several engravings cut out from works belonging to the Mission Library.

What the award of punishment should be, and whether any locus pœnitentiæ on account of former services should be accorded to John Ibrahim, regard being had to the present diminution of the offence with which he was originally charged, are matters which perhaps might be best left to the discretion of Her Majesty's Representative at Tehran.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 296.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 25.)

Temple, July 24, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 572, June 22, 1863), respecting the case of Mr. J. Hardcastle, a British subject, who lately met with his death through being fired at by a sentry while incarcerated in the old Capitol Prison at Washington; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That so far as relates to the lamentable death of Mr. Hardcastle there seems good ground for believing that it is sincerely regretted by the United States' authorities, and that a proper and bonâ fide inquiry will be made into the circumstances with a view to the punishment of the person guilty of the homicide, if it should appear that the shot which caused it was fired without justifying cause.

We cannot, however, abstain from remarking that this unhappy occurrence makes it, in our opinion, only the more necessary for the United States' Government to offer some justification for the imprisonment of Mr. Hardcastle, which they do not appear to us to have yet done. As we understand the facts, he was permitted by the United States' authorities to cross the lines from the Confederate States openly, under a flag of truce, and he was then arrested for so doing as a prisoner of war, and was detained in a military prison where he met his death.

---

* Mr. Eastwick, No. 4, 1862; Mr. Thomson, No. 16, 1863.

Such treatment of a foreigner coming into the United States' territory under a flag of truce, and accused of no civil offence, strikes us as an apparent violation of good faith, and we are at a loss to understand how it can be justified.

We think, also, that the facts stated in the letter of Captain Mix (Inclosure 20 in Lord Lyons' No. 572) ought not to be suffered to pass without grave remonstrance. It would appear that in consequence of the building called the Carroll Prison being situate in a public avenue, and otherwise ill adapted to the purposes for which it is used, the sentinels guarding the outer walls of that prison have received orders to warn all prisoners to keep their heads within the windows, and if they persist in disobeying to fire their pieces.

Mr. Hardcastle's death was apparently owing to these barbarous orders, which (if the account given in the same letter be true, although the prisoner, whose head was put out of window, was not Mr. Hardcastle) were but too faithfully obeyed.

It is hardly possible that under such circumstances the sentinel can justly be found liable to any punishment; the blame seems really to rest with the superior authorities by whom such instructions were issued.

The whole case leaves upon our minds a very painful impression.

The liberty of a British subject has been interfered with without any serious cause, and in apparent breach of good faith. No prompt attention was paid to the representations of Her Majesty's Ambassador in his behalf, and in the end, his life was causelessly sacrificed by the accidental result of a tyrannical system of prison discipline, excused on the ground of the unsuitableness and the overcrowded state of the United States' military prisons, in which we fear other British subjects may be confined, on grounds not less slight and unsatisfactory than those which were alleged in the case of Mr. Hardcastle.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 297.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

Temple, July 24, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Memorial (dated the 22nd June) from Messrs. Barr and Williamson and Mr. Charles Mc Ewen, merchants of Glasgow, which had been forwarded to your Lordship by Mr. Dalglesh, M.P., respecting the case of the British barque "Hiawatha," which had been condemned by the United States' Prize Courts for breach of the blockade of the Southern ports, and that this case had already been reported on by Her Majesty's late Advocate-General, under dates of the 10th June, 5th July, and 31st October, 1861, and the 21st March, 1862, and that it had also been incidentally brought before us in connection with the complaints of Mr. Potts, which formed the subject of our Reports of the 2nd April and 20th May last, and that it is stated in the inclosed Memorial in which, as well as in the previous papers sent therewith, the case of the "Hiawatha" is fully set forth; that the Judgment of the Admiralty Court condemning the "Hiawatha" had recently been affirmed by the Supreme Court, and the memorialists therefore state that having failed to obtain relief in the Law Courts of the United States, they now ask for the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to bring this case before the United States' Government with a view of obtaining a remedy for the injury they have sustained.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the inclosed Memorial into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in regard to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we regret that we have not a copy of the Judgment of the Supreme Court in order to ascertain upon what grounds it proceeded. We assume, however, that they were substantially the same as those upon which the sentence of the Supreme Court was founded.

The Judge of that Court suggested that application should be addressed to the United States' Government asking upon equitable grounds for the release of the vessel. He must therefore have been satisfied of her moral innocence (so to speak), though he was or considered himself bound to enforce against her the strict law, without taking into consideration the official and diplomatic communications which had led the "Hiawatha" into the bonâ fide belief, however erroneous, that she was at liberty to depart with her cargo from Richmond, and though Lord Lyons pressed in vain these considerations upon the United States' Government after the decision of the Inferior Court.

We think that he should be instructed, now that every remedy afforded by Courts of Law has been exhausted, to urge again upon the United States' Government the peculiar hardship of the case of the "Hiawatha."

The Memorial of Messrs. Barr and Williamson appears to us temperate and well-reasoned, and might perhaps be submitted to the United States' Government, accompanied by observations from Lord Lyons. But this is a matter which would naturally be left to the discretion of his Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 298.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

Temple, July 24, 1863.

My Lord,

CHINA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd instant,* on the subject of the prohibition imposed on the export of arms and munitions of war from Hong Kong, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter which your Lordship had caused to be addressed on the 26th ultimo to the Colonial Office and India Office, requesting that instructions might be sent by the mail of that evening to the Acting Governor of Hong Kong and to the Governor of Singapore, enjoining them "to prohibit the export of arms, no matter to what quarter, unless for the ascertained use of the Chinese Government, so long as the existing differences between Great Britain and Japan are pending;" and to request that we would again take this question into our consideration, with especial reference to those instructions, and favour your Lordship with any further observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter addressed, by your Lordship's directions, to the Colonial and India Offices appears to us proper to have been sent. It does not occur to us to make any observations upon the general subject in addition to those contained in our former Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 299.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

Temple, July 25, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 583, June 26), respecting the case of Mr. John Macalister Vernon, a person declaring himself to be a British subject, who has been seized and detained by the United States' authorities in prison, under the circumstances set forth in the inclosed papers; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is clear that the mere fact of having been engaged in breaking or running the blockade does not entitle the United States' Government to treat any foreign subject as a prisoner of war.

As a contrary position appears to be asserted in this case, and to have been asserted in other cases, we think it important that this position should be distinctly laid down.

We have next to address ourselves to three other questions arising out of these papers:—

1. Whether Mr. Vernon be a British subject?

2. Whether he has claimed and exercised the privileges of a subject of the United States?

3. Whether, if the first question be answered in the affirmative, and the second in the negative, Mr. Vernon has not so conducted himself, and so identified himself with the subjects of the Confederate States as to render himself subject to the treatment of a belligerent by the United States?

With respect to the first and second questions it appears, upon the present evidence, that Mr. Vernon is a born British subject, and it does not appear that he has obtained naturalization in the United States, or that he has exercised any political privileges as a subject of the United States.

With respect to the third question, we are of opinion that the United States' Government are justified in treating him as a de facto belligerent. He has been for twenty-three years resident in the Confederate States; and though, during that period, he paid occasional visits to England, the whole evidence shows that he had no intention of returning to permanent residence in his native country, and certainly ever since the outbreak of the war he has identified himself in the strongest manner with the fortunes of these States, and was, at the time when he was taken on board a United States' man of war, actively employed in aiding the Confederate Government in procuring military stores and munitions, though he was to derive a commercial profit from so doing. He was, in fact, practically a willing citizen of the Confederate States engaged in rendering material assistance to the Government in the equipment of their army. He was de facto a subject of the Confederate States.

We do not think that, in these circumstances, his release can be claimed as a matter of right merely because he was born a British subject; but we think that Lord Lyons might be instructed to use, according to his discretion, any endeavour in his power to mitigate or shorten his captivity.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 300.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

Temple, July 28, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 607, July 3), respecting a promise to observe neutrality which is exacted by the United States' military authorities from foreigners visiting Key West. And to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

---

* Page 194.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter of Lord Lyons to Mr. Consul Archibald was, in the circumstances, right and proper. We think that the exaction of a promise so limited and guarded from foreign subjects, while in the dominions of the United States and under their authority, does not, in the present circumstances of the United States, constitute any violation of international law.

We have, &c.
For myself and the Attorney-General,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 301.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

Temple, July 28, 1863.

My Lord,

CHINA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that, before addressing to Sir Frederick Bruce an instruction founded on our Report of the 3rd ultimo, respecting the question of suing before British tribunals British subjects in the service of China for acts done by them in the exercise of the authority confided to them, your Lordship thought it better to ascertain whether the Colonial Office was able to furnish any information as to the power of the Supreme Court at Hong Kong to issue a mandamus to the Consular Courts in China, and to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from the Colonial Office,† stating that neither the Duke of Newcastle nor Sir Hercules Robinson are aware of the existence of any charter or other instrument conferring this power on the Supreme Court; and at the same time to transmit to us, in case it should contain any information bearing upon the point, a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce,‡ inclosing a copy of a Report respecting the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853, addressed to him in 1859 by the Acting Chief Justice of Hong Kong; and that these papers formed the subject of the Law Officers' Report of the 26th of November of that year.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any further observations which we might have to offer on the subject to which our Report of the 3rd ultimo relates.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the additional papers now submitted to us, do not, we think, render any change in our former Report necessary.

That they do, however, confirm our opinion that the power of mandamus is not possessed by the Supreme Court at Hong Kong.

We have, &c.
For myself and the Attorney-General,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 302.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

Temple, July 28, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 22nd May last,§ he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the accompanying further despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,* on the question of the appropriation of captured vessels before condemnation under the recent Prize Act of the United States' Congress. And to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the remonstrance of Lord Lyons appears to have elicited an engagement from the authorities of the United States that the whole matter will be gravely considered, and that in the meantime no further sales of the character objected to will take place, Her Majesty's Government are not at present called upon to send any further instructions upon the subject to Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
For myself and the Attorney-General,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 303.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

Doctors' Commons, July 28, 1863.

My Lord,

CHINA.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st of July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office (dated July 13), inclosing a copy of a despatch from the officer administering the Government of Hong Kong, respecting the arrival off that port of the Federal war-steamer "Wyoming," and asking for instructions, in the event of a similar case occurring again; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration with reference to the Rules of Neutrality issued by Her Majesty's Government on the 31st of January, 1862, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Governor of Hong Kong.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the fact of the anchorage of the "Wyoming" being nearer to the Chinese shore than to the shore of Hong Kong raises a question of some difficulty and embarrassment as to the application of the general rule of international law. Forming my opinion upon the map which accompanies the papers, as well as upon the statements in the papers, I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to insist, as a matter of strict right, that the place of anchorage adopted by the "Wyoming" is within those waters over which the jurisdiction of Her Majesty, in its relation to vessels of foreign independent States, extends.

But I do advise Her Majesty's Government that the Governor of Hong Kong should be instructed to put in force any local Ordinance such as that referred to in paragraph 10 of Mr. Mercer's despatch, which may prevent supplies being taken from Hong Kong to belligerent vessels anchored where the "Wyoming" was, other than such as are within the limits of the permission accorded by Her Majesty's Proclamation.

It would, I think (but this is, perhaps, a question for the exercise of discretion upon the spot), also be proper that the United States' Consul should be apprised of Her Majesty's Government's intention in this respect; and if existing local Ordinances should be insufficient for this object, it would be expedient that others should be framed which may be sufficient for it. It must also be observed that it would not be competent to the ships of war of either belligerent to lie off the mouth of the harbour of Hong Kong for the purpose of exercising hostilities against vessels entering into that port or going out of it. Such a proceeding and practice would be a plain violation of international obligations, and of the neutral rights of Great Britain.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Sir F. Bruce, No. 185, December 23, 1862.

† Colonial Office, June 24.

‡ Sir F. Bruce, No. 18, May 23, 1859.

§ Page 161.

* Lord Lyons, No. 386, May 8, 1863; No. 408, May 11, 1863; No. 528, June 12, 1863; No. 529, June 12, 1863.

1863

No. 304.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

Doctors' Commons, July 28, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 31st March and 11th of May* respecting the case of the "Magicienne," he was directed to transmit to me the papers as marked in the margin,† from which I should see that the owners of that vessel have accepted a proposal of the United States' Government, that that Government and some British authority should each designate a person to ascertain and agree upon the damages to be awarded:

That I should also see from the further papers‡ that this course has likewise been proposed by the United States' Government in the case of the "Mont Blanc," which formed the subject of my Report of the 12th March last.§ That Mr. Samuel Baker, acting for himself and his co-owner of the "Magicienne," states that they have appointed as their Agent Mr. Edwin Gerard, who was to proceed to Washington by the mail of last Saturday. and that Mr. Baker requests to be informed whether any other step is necessary on his part for the furtherance of the claim; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the reply which should be made to Mr. Baker, and also as to whether any special instruction should be sent to Lord Lyons beyond a direction to inform the United States' Government that the offer of that Government is accepted by the owners of the "Magicienne."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not occur to me that any other step is at present necessary to be taken by Mr. Baker for the furtherance of his claim. I presume that the Agent bears with him proper credentials, but I think it would be expedient that your Lordship should apprise Lord Lyons that Mr. E. Gerard is the referee selected by Mr. Baker.

There does not appear to be any provision made for the contingency of a difference between the referees as to the amount of damages which should be awarded.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 305.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 31.)

Temple, July 28, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th July instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 18th ultimo,‖ and to our previous Reports respecting the case of the "Peterhoff," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a letter dated the 5th July instant from Mr. Paget, M.P., inclosing a letter from Mr. Mundella, of Nottingham, asking to be informed what course he should take in order to obtain restitution of his property on board that vessel, with compensation for the losses he has sustained.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to us two further despatches from Lord Lyons upon the same case (Nos. 580 and 581, June 22), the first of which inclosed the report of the Special Commissioners on the discharge and examination of the cargo, and the second has reference to the reported refusal of the captain of the "Peterhoff" to testify with regard to the assertion that papers had been thrown overboard from that vessel, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship—

---

* Pages 95 and 149.

† Lord Lyons, No. 579; to Mr. Baker and Mr. Cox, July 11; Mr. Baker, July 13 and 16.

‡ Lord Lyons, Nos. 455 and 532.

§ Page 68.

‖ Page 183.

1st. With our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Mundella; and 2ndly. With such observations as we might have to offer upon Lord Lyons' further despatches.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Mundella should be informed that Her Majesty's Government have no power to interfere directly with the proceedings of the Prize Court at New York, but that they have given instructions to Lord Lyons to cause the case of the "Peterhoff" to be carefully watched, and that they have reason to believe that the Special Commissioners appointed by the Prize Court to examine the cargo have made their Report, and that the case is now being tried. It may also be expedient to state that there is an allegation as to throwing papers overboard by the captain, which allegation, uncontradicted, has always been considered by Prize Courts as a very unfavourable circumstance for the vessel.

With respect to the despatch of Lord Lyons, we have only to observe that the apprehension of his Lordship's informant as to the inference which would be drawn by the Prize Court from the refusal of the captain to explain a circumstance in itself so suspicious as the throwing overboard of papers is well founded.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 306.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 31.)

Temple, July 29, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th June ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 22nd and 27th of April and 29th May* respecting the case of the "Dolphin," he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the despatches which have since been received from Lord Lyons on this case (Nos. 410, 411, 427, 435, 481, 520, and 527). Mr. Layard was also to call our special attention to Lord Lyons' despatch of the 12th instant, which incloses an authenticated copy of the decision of the Prize Court at Key West, condemning the "Dolphin" and her cargo as prize of war; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused the sentence of the District Court, have referred to the authorities therein cited, and have considered what appear to have been the admitted facts and circumstances of the case. We are not prepared to arraign the justice of that sentence. The principle of decision laid down in the introductory part of the Judgment is unexceptionably correct; it being expressly admitted that "if there was no intention on the part of the owner that the vessel should proceed with the cargo to a port of the enemy, there would be no ground whatever to justify the capture or condemnation of either of them." The question was properly treated as one of fact, viz., whether the vessel had or had not a bonâ fide neutral destination. It does not appear that the owners of the "Dolphin" applied for leave to establish, by further proof, the bonâ fide destination of the vessel to Nassau, or to explain the grave suspicion arising from the false entry as to the rifles and swords, and from the third and last letter as contrasted with the two former letters which were found on board. It seems that the Judge has granted a reasonable time for appeal to the condemned vessel. The former averments as to the vessel being seized in neutral waters, and as to the ill-treatment of the crew, do not appear to be substantiated.

---

* Pages 125, 134, and 165.

We are clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government are not at present called upon to interfere in this case.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 307.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 31.)

GREAT BRITAIN.

My Lord, Temple, July 29, 1863.

IT may be in your Lordship's recollection that we were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th of January last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of the 16th of that month,* expressing our concurrence in your Lordship's suggestion that in addition to certain amendments to the Foreign Enlistment Act proposed in our Report of the 12th of the same month,† a co-ordinate power should be given to the Secretary of State for the Home Department to seize a vessel infringing the provisions of that Act; and Mr. Hammond was accordingly directed by your Lordship to request that we would frame a Bill to be proposed to Parliament during the then approaching session for giving the force of law to those amendments.

With reference to this subject we have now the honour to report—

That we had made some progress in the preparation of a draft Bill for this purpose, when it came to our knowledge, from papers laid before Parliament early in the session (North America, No. 3, 1863, page 48), that Her Majesty's Government had arrived at the conclusion that it was not necessary to propose any alteration in the existing law; and that a communication to that effect, and intimating that no further proceedings need for the present be taken upon the subject, had been made by your Lordship to Mr. Adams, early in February.

Under these circumstances we abstained from proceeding to complete the draft which we had been instructed to prepare; and the session of Parliament having now come to an end, it has appeared to us proper to make this Report upon the subject, in order that, if we should still be desired to proceed further in this matter, we may be favoured with your Lordship's instructions to that effect.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 308.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 31.)

JAPAN.

My Lord, Temple, July 29, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th June ultimo, stating that, with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 27th January, 1862,‡ upon the question of visiting with additional punishment persons who might return to Japan in disregard of a Consular sentence banishing them from that country, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former paper,§ a further correspondence which had passed on this subject between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Legation in Japan.‖

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, in requesting us again to take this matter into our consideration, he was to call our attention to the reasons assigned by Mr. Winchester for considering that Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan ought to be armed with power to inflict additional punishment upon such persons—an opinion in which Mr. Winchester is supported by Sir Rutherford Alcock; and if we should also concur in that opinion (in which case your Lordship presumed we would advise that a similar power should also be conferred upon Her Majesty's Consuls in China and upon Her Majesty's Consul in Siam), your Lordship further requested that we would have the goodness to prepare drafts of three short Orders in Council applicable to China, Japan, and Siam respectively, and containing a provision for meeting the case similar to that which has been introduced into the Levant Order in Council of the 9th of January last.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that copies of that Order in Council, and of the Japan Orders in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, and 4th February, 1861, were sent therewith; and that the Orders in Council relating to China are published in Hertslet, vol. ix, page 210, and vol. x, pages 732 and 1073; and the Order in Council relating to Siam in vol. x, page 577.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Winchester and Sir Rutherford Alcock; and that we think the Consuls in Japan, China and Siam ought to be armed with power to inflict additional punishment upon persons deported and returning after deportation to these countries. We have therefore prepared the additional Orders in Council mentioned in your Lordship's letter, and annexed them to this Report.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 309.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 1.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, July 31, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th instant, stating with reference to the Report of the Attorney and Solicitor-General of the 6th of January last, addressed to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from the Colonial Office,† inclosing, with a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, a copy of an Act of the Legislature of that Colony, providing for the better management of the local fisheries, to which are appended Regulations made by the Government and Council for carrying out the provisions of the Act; and to request that we would take this Act and the Regulations annexed to it into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether, in our opinion, they contain anything at variance with the Treaties between this country and the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Act and Regulations in question do not contain any provisions at variance with the Treaties between Great Britain and the United States.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 23. † Page 14. ‡ Page 16.

§ Mr. Alcock, No. 89, September 27, 1861.

‖ To Sir R. Alcock, No. 20, February 18, 1862; Consul Winchester, No. 26, May 17, 1861.

* Colonial Office, December 3; to Colonial Office, December 12, 1862; Colonial Office, January 17; to Colonial Office, January 26, 1863.

† Colonial Office, July 17, 1863.

No. 310.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 1.)

Temple, July 31, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our information, a letter dated the 16th July instant, from Mr. Mason, inclosing a list of vessels which had arrived at Nassau from American blockaded ports, from the 18th of July, 1862, to the 2nd of June, 1863.

We have perused the same, and have the honour to report to your Lordship—

That Mr. Mason, in furnishing the list of vessels in question, intends, no doubt, to suggest the inefficiency of the existing blockade by the forces of the United States; but that question, if taken up, would have to be dealt with as a whole, and upon evidence free from any reasonable suspicion of bias; and we presume that for the present the plan of respecting the blockade by the British Government will be persevered in.

We see, therefore, no reason to depart from the advice which we have previously given to Her Majesty's Government on this subject.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 311.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 3.)

Temple, July 31, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 27th ultimo and 9th instant,* and also to our previous Reports on the question of the liability of British subjects to military service under the recent Conscription Act of the United States' Congress, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 555), inclosing copies of a despatch from Mr. Consul Archibald, and of three letters addressed to him by British subjects, who, having declared their intention to become United States' citizens, have since been made liable to military service by the Conscription Act, and the President's Proclamation of the 8th of May. And Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these cases into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these cases into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the cases referred to by Lord Lyons do not call for any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Upon the general subject, we adhere to the opinion expressed in our former Reports; and the special circumstances applicable to the two classes of cases mentioned in the inclosures accompanying Lord Lyons' despatch are so far from having a contrary bearing that they afford additional reasons for that opinion. Those who have been permitted to acquire land in the United States, on the faith of a declaration that they intended to become citizens, and who could not have acquired it without such declaration, have (in that respect) become partakers of the special privileges of citizenship; and it is certainly not unreasonable, in the abstract, for any nation to require the owners of land, acquired under such circumstances, to share the military burdens of citizens.

The other class of cases, of which Mr. Scott is an example, is still less meritorious.

Mr. Scott's own account of the reason why he declared on oath his intention to become an American citizen, and to renounce his British allegiance, is that a war was at that time expected to break out between Great Britain and the United States. So that, if such a war had actually broken out (and this, it is to be observed, was after the commencement of the present civil war, namely, at the time of the affair of the "Trent"), it was his intention to adhere to the United States against his own Sovereign; and, nevertheless, he now asks his Sovereign to interfere in his behalf with the Government of the United States, in order to relieve him from a burden (then unforeseen) which the United States has since imposed upon him, in consequence of that declaration.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 312.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 5.)

Temple, August 4, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th July ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, No. 606, July 3rd, respecting the refusal of the Custom-house authorities at New York to clear a vessel, the "John Freeman," which had been chartered by Mr. Joseph N. Harvey for the purpose of conveying live stock at Bermuda, under a contract with Her Majesty's Government, such refusal being based upon directions issued by the United States' Secretary of War in pursuance of an order of the President of the 20th of November last, prohibiting the exportation of arms, ammunition, or munitions of war, and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That inasmuch as the prohibition is imposed by the United States' Government equally upon all persons, whether citizens or foreigners, and inasmuch as it is within the abstract competence of every State, in the case of severe domestic necessity, both to issue such a prohibition and to bring it without previous notice into immediate operation, we do not think that Her Majesty's Government can insist, as a matter of right, upon its relaxation in the particular instances mentioned. At the same time we think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to express the regret of Her Majesty's Government at a proceeding attended with so much inconvenience to Her Majesty's troops, and one which the terms of the prohibitory Proclamation had given them no reason to anticipate or provide against. Whether more than this should be done must depend (we think) upon the course which Her Majesty's Government may have pursued in dealing with any remonstrances or claims to compensation made to them on behalf of citizens of the United States under similar circumstances. One such case (relating, we think, to a cargo of saltpetre, detained in India under the Proclamations issued at the beginning of 1862, when war was apprehended with the United States in consequence of the "Trent" affair), was formerly referred to and reported on by us, but we are not aware whether Her Majesty's Government did or did not ultimately make compensation in that case. If they did so, then we think Lord Lyons may properly and consistently be instructed, in the present case, to express the expectation and conviction of Her Majesty's Government that the United States' Government will not fail to make that compensation to the individuals concerned which is just and equitable in a case in which the necessities of the Government compel it to have recourse to a law practically retrospective, and severely affecting the interests of the subjects of a friendly State.

We speak of this prohibition as practically retrospective, because it was so suddenly brought into operation as to prevent the exportation on board the "John Freeman" of live stock previously purchased for exportation, and ready for immediate shipment, in fulfilment of a prior contract with Her Majesty's

---

* Pages 190 and 200.

* Further letter from Mr. Layard, July 29, 1863, with additional despatch.

1863

Government. It cannot be seriously contended that the words "arms, ammunition, and munitions of war," as occurring in the President's Order of the 21st of November, 1862, were capable of being construed, on any principle of interpretation, as extending to sheep and cattle, or indeed to live stock of any kind. The letter, therefore, of the Secretary of War of the United States dated the 13th May last (which we understand to have been since ratified by the President and brought into operation on the 30th of May, without previous notice to the public), must be regarded as an entirely new order, prohibiting, for the first time, the exportation of live stock from the United States.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 313.

The Queen's Proctor to Mr. Layard.—(Received August 5.)

Doctors' Commons, August 5, 1863.

PERU.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that you were directed by Earl Russell to transmit to me the correspondence noted in the margin[*] between his Lordship and the Peruvian Minister, from which I should perceive that Lord Russell had consented to extend the terms of reference to arbitration in Mr. Melville White's case so as to include an examination into the general merits of the case.

That a modification therefore becomes necessary in the case which I had prepared to be submitted to the Arbitrator on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and you were accordingly to return that document to me, together with the previous correspondence, and to request that I would at my earliest convenience prepare and forward a revised draft.

In obedience to Earl Russell's directions I have prepared, and have now the honour to transmit, a revised draft, extending the terms so as to include an examination into the general merits of the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. DYKE.

No. 314.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 6.)

Temple, August 5, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 556) inclosing copies of despatches from Consuls Kortright and Bernal, asking for instructions as to the title to British protection of certain classes of persons residing in the United States, and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these despatches into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answers which should be returned thereto.

The previous despatches to which Lord Lyons referred were also inclosed for reference,[†] they forming respectively the subject of the Law Officers' Reports of the 4th of November, 1861, and 31st January last.[‡]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these despatches into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That two cases are submitted for our consideration:—

The first, that put by Mr. Bernal, is the case of a son born in England, but of a British father, subsequently naturalized in the United States, which son has attained his majority in the United States, according to the lex loci, but has not exercised any rights of a citizen.

We are of opinion that, having regard to the principles of international law the minor child follows the domicil of the father, and to the facts that, in this case, the father was naturalized by the law of the United States, and that the child, after attaining majority, has continued his domicil in the United States, and is considered as naturalized by the law of the United States, the son must be considered, for the purpose of the present inquiry, as a naturalized United States' citizen, and not entitled to claim, as against the Government of the United States, the protection of Her Majesty's Government.

The second case, that put by Mr. Kortright, is that of a son attaining his majority in the United States, born of a British father living in the United States, but not naturalized, neither father nor son having made any declaration of intention to become citizens.

Having regard to the law of England as to persons born in Her Majesty's dominions, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot insist, as against the United States' Government, that such a person shall be considered by them as a British subject, and exempt from the liabilities incident to the status of a United States' citizen.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] To M. Sanz, June 30; M. Sanz, July 2; to M. Sanz, July 18; M. Sanz, July 22; to M. Sanz, July 27; M. Sanz, July 29, 1863.

[†] No. 523 of 1861, and No. 11 of 1863.

[‡] See Reports for 1861, page 269: and ante, page 37.

No. 315.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 8.)

Temple, August 7, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th ultimo,[*] he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,[†] the annexed further correspondence respecting the case of the "Margaret and Jessie,"[‡] and that we should observe that your Lordship has been furnished by Mr. Mason with an original protest made by the Master and crew of the "Margaret and Jessie," setting forth the circumstances, both as to time and place, under which she was chased, fired into, and sunk, by an United States' man-of-war, and also with twelve affidavits, made by passengers on board that vessel, and by residents on the Island of Eleuthera, confirming the declarations made in the protest.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that your Lordship had informed Mr. Mason, and also Lord Lyons, that as Mr. Seward had promised that if it should appear, on inquiry, that any act of hostility or power was committed on the occasion in question within the marine jurisdiction of Great Britain, the act would be disavowed and redress be promptly given, Her Majesty's Government would await the result of that inquiry.

Mr. Layard was, however, pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take into our consideration the further papers transmitted to us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the evidence laid before us in these papers appears to put beyond all doubt the facts of a very grave violation of international law, and of Her Majesty's territorial rights and jurisdiction.

We think it is a case which Lord Lyons should be instructed to press for immediate redress. The fact (which appears certain) that the shot and shell of the United States' steamer struck repeatedly the shore, and objects on the shore, of Her Majesty's territory, makes it very difficult to understand how the captain of that vessel could have honestly informed Mr. Seward, that "he did not chase the 'Margaret and Jessie' within British jurisdiction."

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Page 197.

[†] Colonial Office, July 3, and Inclosures.

[‡] Lord Lyons, No. 559; Mr. Mason, July 6; to Lord Lyons, No. 394; to Mr. Mason, July 10; Mr. Mason, July 16; Lord Lyons, No. 638.

1863

No. 316.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 11.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, August 10, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating, that with referrence to the case of the "Virginia" or "Japan," which formed the subject of our Report of the 30th of April last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us an extract of a note (dated the 7th July instant) from Mr. Adams, calling attention to the circumstance that that vessel had continued, until very lately, to be the property of a British subject.

That your Lordship had lost no time in communicating this extract to the Home Office and the Treasury, and Mr. Layard inclosed to us the letters which had been received from those Departments in reply; and was to request that we would take this correspondence into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, and also as to the answer which it will be proper to return to Mr. Adams.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the recent cancellation, at the request of Mr. Thomas Bold, of the British register of the "Japan," furnishes no legal evidence of Mr. Bold's having remained the owner of the vessel until the time of such cancellation, or of the application to have it effected. The entire evidence of ownership rests on admission—the written admission of Mr. Bold, contained in his note to the Collector of Customs, at Liverpool, dated the 23rd of June, 1863, and inclosing the certificate of registry of the "Japan" as a British ship. But that admission, importing (as, indeed, the registry had done) that Mr. Bold owned the vessel at the date of registry, is coupled with the qualifying statement (which cannot be rejected from the admission) that in the meantime he had "conveyed" the vessel to an "alien." But as to who or of what nation the alien was, or when the conveyance was made, Mr. Bold's minute is silent; and the date of the return of the certificate of registry to the Collector at the port whence it was issued is no proof of the date of actual transfer of the property in the ship.

It is further to be observed that, to whomsoever, technically, the vessel may have belonged she was, we presume, when engaged in "committing ravages upon the commerce" of the United States' (Mr. Adams' letter to your Lordship of the 7th of July, 1863), a cruizer in the Confederate service, sailing under the flag of the Confederate marine, commanded by officers commissioned by the Confederate Executive; in short, a part of the Confederate navy. But, to acts of force committed by a vessel of this kind against the commerce of the United States, Her Majesty's Government, which has admitted that the Confederate States are lawful belligerents, cannot attach the incident of private personal responsibility. They are acts of public war; and, according to the law of nations, can only be so dealt with. In this view, Mr. Bold stands clear of the "extensive ravages" to which it is said the commerce of the United States has been subjected; and that equally whether, if the truth could be arrived at, it should be found that the ship was "conveyed," previous to her entering upon a course of hostilities, or that during some part of these hostilities the strict property remained in Mr. Bold; who in that case might, or might not, be consenting to the use to which his ship was applied.

We therefore think that your Lordship should answer the letter of Mr. Adams, to the effect that your Lordship is advised by the Law Officers of the Crown that no evidence has, as yet, been brought to their knowledge which would justify any criminal prosecution of Mr. Bold; and that the vessel itself, whatever be its character, is not within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 139.

No. 317.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 17.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, August 15, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd August instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th ultimo,* respecting the revocation by the Confederate Government of Mr. G. Moore's exequatur as Her Majesty's Consul at Richmond, and also respecting the determination of that Government not to permit communication between Consuls in those States and the functionaries of their Governments residing within the enemy's lines, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 24th July ultimo from Mr. Mason, inclosing a copy of a despatch from Mr. Benjamin, the Confederate Secretary of State, in which Mr. Mason was instructed to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the objectionable manner in which Mr. Cridland had been appointed Acting British Consul at Mobile, and to intimate that that gentleman could not be permitted to exercise Consular functions there. The circumstances under which Mr. Magee was dismissed by Her Majesty's Government from his position as Acting Consul at Mobile are also dwelt upon, and Mr. Benjamin, after stating that President Davis had in these facts seen renewed reasons for adhering to his determination above referred to, expressed the hope that Her Majesty's Government would choose some other mode of transmitting its orders and exercising its authority over its Agents within the Confederacy.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to us a Memorandum showing the course heretofore pursued by the British Government with reference to the appointment of Consular Agents in countries not acknowledged by Great Britain as independent States, and the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposed to address to Mr. Mason, suggesting, in answer to his letter, that it would be in conformity with what has been done in other cases, and with the amity professed by the so-styled Confederate States towards Her Majesty and the British nation, if arrangements could be made for correspondence between Agents appointed by Her Majesty's Government to reside in the Confederate States and the authorities in those States, and to request that we would take this proposed letter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the proposed letter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that your Lordship's letter is fit and proper to be sent. We have ventured to suggest one verbal alteration.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 318.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 17.)

FRANCE AND SPAIN.

Doctors' Commons, August 15, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid (No. 19, July 31, 1863), respecting a demand that has been made by the French Ambassador there for the extradition of a person named Paul Gailhard Fisse, stated to be a condemned French criminal, who has claimed the protection of Her Majesty's Mission at Madrid, on the ground that he is a naturalized British subject. Also a letter and its inclosures from the Home Office, stating the circumstances under which Fisse obtained letters of naturalization in this country, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether or not this person should be protected by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires against the demand for his extradition which has been made by the French Ambassador at Madrid.

---

* Page 212.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that this person being a born French subject was naturalized de facto in England upon a false affidavit as to his residence in this country, and that the falsehood must have been deliberate and intentional. It would also seem from the letter of the French Ambassador that he was naturalized under a false name, "Fisse" being added to his real name of "Gailhard" for the purpose of concealment. It appears that at the time of his de facto naturalization, he had been pronounced, though so long ago as in 1852, by a competent Court of his own country guilty of forgery, and had been sentenced to twenty years' hard labour; that at the time of this sentence he was in Madrid; that on the 3rd of January last the French Government had made a demand upon the Spanish Government for his extradition; that he escaped to England; obtained letters of naturalization dated 11th May, 1863, and a passport dated 23rd May, 1863, both many years subsequent to the sentence of the Criminal Court, and some months subsequent to the demand for extradition.

I humbly advise your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government ought not to protect this person against the demand of his native Government. These letters of naturalization were obtained by means of a false affidavit; and I think it worthy of consideration whether they should not be cancelled as having been so obtained. Moreover, they were obtained after he had been found guilty of a crime which, according to the Treaties between England and France, and France and Spain, had given France a right to demand his extradition. I do not think that this right could be taken away by subsequent letters of naturalization fraudulently obtained.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 319.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 15, 1863.

NEW GRANADA.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th of August instant, stating that with reference to the Report of my predecessor of the 1st of September, 1859, respecting the claims of Messrs. Cotesworth and Powell against New Granada, he was directed to transmit to me a letter, dated the 11th of August instant, and its inclosure, from that firm, stating the circumstances under which they ask for the official support of Her Majesty's Government to the claim they are preferring against the Government of New Granada for indemnity for the losses entailed upon them by the illegal acts of the New Granadian judicial authorities at Barranquilla.

That I should see, by referring to the previous correspondence, that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires has been hitherto only authorized to afford his unofficial support to the agent of Messrs. Cotesworth and Powell during the progress of the case through the Granadian Courts; but as those proceedings are now terminated, he was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the facts stated by them are sufficient to warrant the official interference of Mr. Griffith on their behalf in the present stage of the matter, and if so, how far he should be instructed to interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that Messrs. Cotesworth and Powell have exhausted all the means of redress afforded by the Courts of Columbia, and that claims, just in themselves, have been defeated by the admitted iniquity of the Judge before whom they were duly and properly brought for adjudication, and that this Judge has actually been degraded on account of his misconduct. The case, therefore, I think, has in some respects a different complexion from that which it wore when my predecessor in office reported upon it. I think that Her Majesty's Government may properly instruct Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to give official support to the agent of Messrs. Cotesworth and Powell in his application to the existing Government for redress of a wrong which they cannot, as it appears, deny was caused by a scandalous perversion of justice in the Tribunals of the State. At the same time I think that the official support should be at present limited to a representation on behalf of Her Majesty's Government to the effect that they are confident that the existing Government of the United States of Columbia will, in accordance with the spirit of the document of the 11th of January, 1863, issued from the Department of the Interior, decide this claim "in conformity with justice," and that they will not fail to recognize the international duty of repairing a wrong inflicted by the maladministration of justice upon the subjects of a foreign and friendly State. Mr. Griffith might also be instructed generally to assist the agent of Messrs. Cotesworth and Powell in obtaining access to the Government, or in producing their proofs, or the like; exercising, of course, his own discretion upon the spot as to the mode and extent in which it may be expedient and proper to give such assistance.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 320.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 19.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 17, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th August instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 30th of June* upon the case of the "Minnie," he was directed to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a letter dated the 6th August instant from Mr. Fisher, containing a further statement relative to the capture of that vessel, and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether it contains anything to induce me to alter or modify the opinion expressed in my previous Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Fisher does not induce me to alter or modify the opinion expressed in my former Report. The sale of the vessel by the United States' Prize Courts, for the reason assigned, was in accordance with the practice of the Prize Court in England.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 321.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 22.)

My Lord, Temple, August 19, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us, with reference to our former Reports respecting the question of the liability of British subjects to military service under the recent Conscription Act of the United States' Congress, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 664, July 24th), inclosing a correspondence relative to the mode in which foreigners residing in the United States are to establish their claims to exemption from such service; and to request that we would take into consideration the Regulations which have been drawn up by the United States' Government (Inclosure No. 16), as well as the Circular Instruction addressed by Lord Lyons to Her Majesty's Consuls in the Northern States (Inclosure No. 17), and advise your Lordship whether any further facilities should be asked for to enable British subjects to exempt themselves from any draft, present or future. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that it does not appear to your Lordship that the case of persons who have declared their intention to renounce allegiance to the Queen, and who have not availed themselves of the opportunities they have had to leave the United States since the time when Congress sanctioned the draft, is deserving of much favour, and that the strict question of right is therefore chiefly to be regarded.

---

* Page 191.

1863

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us that any further facilities should be asked for on behalf of British subjects generally in this matter.

We agree generally with the opinions expressed by Lord Lyons in his despatch, July 24, 1863 (No. 664), and we do not think that any remonstrance should be made to the United States' Government upon the subject of their refusing to consider Consular certificates as conclusive evidence of the claim of the holder to exemption from conscription.

We have also the honour to agree with your Lordship that the case of persons who have declared their intention to renounce allegiance to the Queen, and who have not availed themselves of the opportunities which they have had of leaving the United States' territory, is not entitled to any favourable consideration, and that, in this instance, the question of strict right is principally to be regarded. Any cases of which the circumstances may be peculiar and exceptional may (of course) be considered and dealt with according to their own particular circumstances, as suggested in our former Reports.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 322.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 20.)

Doctors' Commons, August 20, 1863.

TURKEY.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th of August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 336), stating the particulars of a claim brought against the Porte by a British subject named Dionisio Hippodimatipoulo, on account of a breach of contract, and reporting the steps which have been taken in the matter up to the present time; and to request that I would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with Sir H. Bulwer that the Commission issued in this case must be considered as having had for its object the final settlement of this claim.

It is impossible to conceive that the Turkish Government themselves intended or meant to convey to the English Embassy the impression that after that Commission had reported, the matter should be referred to a Judicial Tribunal, or to doubt that if the Report had been favourable to the Turkish Government they would have insisted upon its being considered as final and conclusive of the whole matter. This view is strongly supported by the fact that they actually have accepted the award of the very same Commission upon a similar case in which the award was favourable to them. I am of opinion that the Turkish Government cannot now lawfully deny the competence of this Commission to make the award in question. I am further of opinion that there were no errors in point of form which could vitiate the proceedings of it. That as to the general principles upon the Law of Contract, for which reference was made to the French code, they were not peculiar to the municipal law of France, but were maxims of general jurisprudence, necessarily arising from the reason of the thing, and essential to the good faith of all covenants; they moreover appear either to have formed the bases of the Turkish law upon the subject, or to have been at least largely incorporated with it.

If the question, therefore, were connected with the ordinary relations of two European States, and if the principles of public and private law, as between such States, were to be strictly applied to it, I should have no doubt that it was the right of Her Majesty's Government to call upon the Turkish Government to enforce the award of its own Commission. But it is impossible to read Sir H. Bulwer's letter, and not to be aware that such a course might, in the peculiar circumstances of the Ottoman Empire, work a practical injustice to the Turkish Government, however much they may be to blame in the matter; and I think that the best course which Her Majesty's Government could pursue, would be to adopt in part the suggestion of Sir H. Bulwer, that is to say, to represent to the Turkish Government that though Her Majesty's Government are, strictly speaking, entitled to press for the execution of the award as it stands, yet regard being had to the possibility of some misapprehension having existed as to the extent of the powers of that Commission, Her Majesty's Government consents that a further Commission shall issue, but limited to inquiring—

1. Whether the sum awarded was or was not founded on a just calculation as to the supposed losses of the parties; and if not, to decide upon what basis the calculation should proceed, and rectify it accordingly.

2. That in case of disagreement, provision should be made for invoking an umpire.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 323.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 20.)

Doctors' Commons, August 20, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose a letter, dated the 4th August instant, from Mr. R. Atkin, Master of the British ship "Dennis Hill," complaining of treatment he states he has sustained at the hands of the United States' authorities at New York, in the case of a charge of assault preferred against him by William Broome, formerly a seaman on board the "Dennis Hill;" and requesting that Her Majesty's Government would make a representation to the United States' Government for the purpose of procuring compensation for himself and his chief mate for the losses they have sustained; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration and have the honour to report—

That it has, I believe, often been a subject of grave consideiation whether there should not be a Treaty between Great Britain and the United States authorizing the judicial authorities of each country to take cognizance of offences committed on board ships belonging to the other country while upon the high seas. But no such Treaty, I think, exists; and in the absence of it it was not competent to the Judge of the United States to try this case of an alleged offence committed by a British sailor on board a British ship upon the high seas. But I think it would be proper that your Lordship should instruct Lord Lyons to require from the Consul at New York a report of the actual circumstances of this case, and whether, in fact, any such jurisdiction as complained of has been exercised; and if so, upon what grounds.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 324.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 22.)

Temple, August 20, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 24th ultimo,* respecting the iron-clads in course of construction at Messrs. Lairds' yard at Birkenhead, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* two notes from Baron Gros and Mr. Adams, and a correspondence which has passed between this Department (the Foreign Office) and the Treasury thereupon;† and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we see any reason to alter or modify the opinion recorded in our former Report, that Her Majesty's Government ought not to detain or in any way interfere with the steam-vessels in question.

---

* Page 212.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 13th and 14th instant, inclosing to us a further Report, dated the 12th August instant, from the Commissioners of Customs respecting these vessels; and also a deposition of Thomas Sweeney, and a copy of a letter, dated the 14th August, from Mr. Dudley, the United States' Consul at Liverpool, reporting the arrival at that port of Colonel Geo. H. Bier, a lieutenant in the Confederate Navy, with his wife, a man by the name of Joseph N. Barney, and two engineers, with the intention, as asserted by by Mr. Dudley, of going out as officers in the iron-clads; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would also take these papers into our immediate consideration, and advise your Lordship as to the steps which Her Majesty's Government can legally and properly adopt in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these several papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That they do not induce us to alter or modify the substance of the opinion which we had the honour to express in our former Report.

If, indeed, the question were, whether Mr. Price Edwards had satisfactorily explained the grounds on which, in his letter to the Commissioners of Customs, under date the 11th July last (adverted to in our former Report), he stated his belief not only that these two vessels were "built for a banker at Paris," but that this banker was paying for them, "on behalf of a foreign Government, and not America;" or, whether the account of the nature and extent of the communications of the French Consul at Liverpool with M. Bravay, the "merchant" of Paris who represented himself to be interested in these vessels, given in the letters of Baron Gros (dated the 27th July) and of Mr. Wilding (dated the 24th July), is entirely consistent with the statements reported by Mr. Edwards (in the postscript to his letter of the 8th July), to have been made to him by the French Consul (namely, "that he," the French Consul, "had aided the owner with respect to the fitments of one of the two ships, and was to provide a crew for her, and would prepare the necessary papers for her departure when ready for sea"), we should be unable to answer either of those questions in the affirmative. But the facts remain, that M. Bravay, a French merchant, residing at Paris, is represented to be the person for whom these ships have been built, and that he has personally appeared and acted in that character at Liverpool; that there is no evidence against his claim, and nothing to affect M. Bravay with any illegal act or purpose; and that Mr. Price Edwards, the responsible Agent of the Board of Customs at Liverpool, still reports it to be his own opinion and belief that these vessels "were not built for the Confederates, but for Frenchmen;" and still asserts the substantial correctness of his former report of the conversation between himself and the French Consul.

Under these circumstances, and having regard to the entire insufficiency of the depositions forwarded to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Adams to prove any infraction of the law, we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere in any way with these vessels.

There is, in fact, no evidence capable of being presented to a Court of Justice of any intention on the part of any persons in this country, that either of these vessels should be employed in the belligerent service of the Confederate Government against the United States; even if it would have been proper (had such evidence been forthcoming) to act upon the assumption that the law recently laid down by the Lord Chief Baron in the case of the "Alexandra" is incorrect, or that his Lordship's ruling is inapplicable to vessels of this description: a point on which it may be better to reserve the expression of our opinion till such a case arises.

---

* Mr. Adams, July 11; to Mr. Adams, July 13; Mr. Welby, July 13; to Treasury and Home Office, July 13; Treasury, July 14; Mr. Adams, July 16; Treasury, July 17; to Mr. Adams, July 17, 1863.

† Mr. Adams, July 25; Baron Gros, July 27; to Treasury, July 28; Treasury, August 4, 1863.

With respect to the further letters from Mr. Layard, dated 13th and 14th of August, they appear to us to contain nothing but hearsay evidence and common gossip in the ship-builder's yard and on board the steamer which conveyed Mr. and Mrs. Bier, upon which it would be impossible to advise Her Majesty's Government to place any reliance.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 325.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 22.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, August 20, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th ultimo. stating that with reference to our Reports of the 8th of May and 7th of July last,* respecting the case of the "Adela," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, two further despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 586 and 587 of the 26th June), in one of which was inclosed an opinion filed at an earlier stage of the proceedings by Mr. Marvin, the Judge of the Prize Court at Key West; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would reconsider the case of the "Adela," with reference to this opinion of Judge Marvin, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's second letter of the 27th ultimo, transmitting to us, by direction of your Lordship, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 630), inclosing copies of further papers respecting the case of the "Adela" for our consideration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the preliminary Judgment giving an opportunity for further proof in the case of the "Adela," we have to observe that it was consistent with the due administration of prize law.

The stress laid by the Judge upon the missing paper packages was not improper, however the fact itself may be accounted for.

With respect to the final sentence of condemnation, we have to observe that it appears from the evidence before us (though we have unfortunately not the Judgment itself) that the most material portions of that kind of proof, which the Judge intimated he should expect to be given, in order that the vessel might escape condemnation, were not produced at the final hearing of the case.

The bill of lading, the copy invoice, and the policy of insurance, were produced; but the power of attorney given by Mr. Forwood and his co-owners to the agent at Liverpool as to the disposal of the vessel, and its destiny after reaching Nassau, was not produced, and Mr. Forwood had no copy of it.

The provisional letter of instructions sent by him to the consignees at Nassau was not produced, and Mr. Forwood had no copy of it.

The private agreement with some of the officers (the existence of which was denied by the master, but which is proved by Mr. Forwood, as it had been by Carpenter) was not produced; it had been "handed to our agents," Mr. Forwood says, and he had no copy of it.

Yet, in the circumstances, this was a document of the last importance in order to establish the innocence of the ship.

The evidence of Benson, the chief officer, at the time of capture was well known, and, if believed, it was to the effect that a bonus was to be paid over and above the monthly wages "for each voyage in running the blockade after her arrival at Nassau;" and that an additional three months' pay was guaranteed in case of capture; and that he believed the ship was going from Nassau to Charleston, to which place he had a private letter, as well as to Savannah, and which letters he burnt on the morning of the capture.

Mr. Forwood, indeed, verbally denies this part of the agreement; but he admits that the aptitude of the "Adela" for running the blockade was discussed by the owners, and that there was a private agreement in writing. All the crew profess to be ignorant of the future destiny of the "Adela" after her arrival at Nassau.

---

* Pages 147 and 200.

The master, Walker, was ignorant, or swore that he was, that Mr. Forwood was a co-owner, though Benson appears to have known it.

Walker did not know what interest any of the shippers or consignees had in the merchandize; he did not know the names of the shippers, nor of the owners, nor to what country they belonged.

The statement, also, of Benson as to the letters addressed to Charleston and Savannah, which he destroyed, was confirmed, with additional circumstances, by the second officer, Carpenter, who did not, indeed, mention the addresses of the letters, but said that Benson threw overboard two letters on the morning of the capture, which were afterwards picked up by one of the men, and were, as he believed, afterwards put in the fire by Benson.

The final sentence, we presume, was founded on the basis laid in the preliminary Judgment, namely, that all the circumstances, including Benson's positive testimony, established the fact that the "Adela" left England with the intention of breaking the blockade.

It must be remembered that the opportunity of clearing up the very suspicious circumstances which belonged to the case at the first hearing, after the evidence of Benson, was rather an act of favour towards the "Adela," and, at all events, was an act which, according to the well-known rules of prize law, admonished the owners in the most emphatic manner as to the consequences of not producing evidence to remove these suspicions, more especially if documentary proof was, or ought to have been, in the hands of the owners, or of their agents, which might have gone far towards establishing (if the fact were really so) the innocence of the vessel.

The whole case shows how little reliance can be placed upon the representations of the proceedings of the United States' Prize Court which are so often made by interested parties in this country.

We cannot advise your Lordship that the sentence was unwarranted by the rules of evidence and the practice of Prize Courts.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 326.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 22.)

My Lord, Temple, August 20, 1863.

UNITED STATES

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 30th of April last,* and to our previous Reports respecting the case of Mr. Laurent, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, the accompanying further despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 506, 535, and 573), from which we should perceive that Mr. Laurent at length obtained his liberty through being exchanged by the United States' authorities for one of their own men taken prisoner by the Confederates; and that he has addressed to Lord Lyons from Havana, a letter claining on indemnity of 20,000*l.* for his imprisonment; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take Mr. Laurent's letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Layard was also to add that your Lordship had not received from Mr. Laurent the statement of claim which he informed Lord Lyons he should forward to the Foreign Office.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Laurent's claim into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the fact that all Mr. Laurent's troubles arose from his own perjury in having, more than once, either sworn or signed a declaration practically equivalent to an oath that he was an American citizen, in order to obtain command of an American merchant-ship, and that the United States' authorities were, as we have already reported, justified in requiring him to rebut the presumption arising therefrom that he was a citizen, we do not think it incumbent upon Her Majesty's Government to demand any indemnity for his imprisonment.

---

* Page 140.

Exception might perhaps have been taken to his exchange as a Confederate prisoner, while the question of his citizenship was still unsettled; but as, in this way, he has practically recovered his liberty at an earlier period than might otherwise have been the case, it would doubtless be unadvisable to make this alone a ground of complaint.

With respect to the detention of the letters from prisoners to Lord Lyons, it may reasonably be expected from the letter of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons that there will be no further occasion for complaint upon this subject.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 327.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 26.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 24, 1863.

SPAIN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 17th August instant, stating that, with reference to the Report of my predecessor of the 2nd October, 1861,* respecting the case of the "Criticado," he was directed to transmit to me two despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid (Nos. 114 and 124), reporting that the Superior Court at Seville has confirmed the decision of the Court at Cadiz, as to the illegality of the capture of the "Criticado;" and stating that the ship and cargo have, in consequence, been restored to the owners. That I should perceive that the agent of these parties has now put in a claim for indemnity for losses sustained by the detention of the vessel and her cargo for twenty-three months, amounting to 397,132 reals vellon, or about 4,152*l.* 14*s.* 8¼*d.*; and that, with reference to this claim, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires furnishes information on the points to which my predecessor referred as requiring explanation. And Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers, together with the previous correspondence, into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in supporting the claim to indemnity now put forward by the owners of the "Criticado;" and if so, whether their account of damages can be adopted as the basis of any representations that I may advise Her Majesty's Government to make to that of Spain in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me clear that the "Criticado" intended to smuggle her cargo into Spain. The deliberate falsehood of the master as to the date of his sailing; the place where the vessel was taken when the easterly wind, which had been blowing for several days subsequently, would, if her destination really had been Bayonne, have brought her nearer to that port than Cadiz; the tobacco which she carried, and which, it would seem, could not have been legally imported into France, and which appears to have been directed to persons at Cadiz (see Señor Collantes' letter, February 26, 1262); the inability of the master to read or write; the absence of charts and of requisite provisions for a voyage from Gibraltar to Bayonne; the report which had reached her captor,—are all circumstances pointing to this conclusion.

The Spanish Courts, however, have decided that she was unlawfully seized. According to the more usual practice of Courts, her acquittal would have been followed by the award of reasonable costs and demurrage damages. And I think that Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid should be instructed to inquire, from the proper authority, why this consequence did not follow from the sentence; and if the answer should be that the Court had no power to decree costs and damages, then I think that he should state that Her Majesty's Government decline to accept this answer as satisfactory, though, in the present case, for special reasons, they forbear to press for the indemnity which it would be competent to them to demand; for I agree in opinion with my predecessor that (all the circumstances to which he refers considered) it does not seem expedient that Her Majesty's Government should demand an indemnity in this case, since it appears morally certain that the vessel was not engaged in a lawful voyage. I ought, however, to add that I do not know what course Her Majesty's Government pursued in the cases of the "Ferry Boat" and the "Julian," to which the Report of my predecessor makes reference. If in these or similar cases Her Majesty's Government have thought it proper, notwithstanding the illegal destination of the vessel to demand compensation on the sole ground of the unlawfulness of the seizure out of Spanish waters, though the vessel, at the time of the capture, was hovering off the Spanish coast, I see no reason why the same course should not be pursued in the present case; but if this question be still open, I adhere to the opinion which I have had the honour to express.

---

* See Reports for 1861, page 233.

1863

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 328.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 26.)

My Lord,

Temple, August 25, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 22nd of August, 1862* (in which we stated that we were disposed to think that the decision of Judge Betts in the case of the British barque "Empress," proceeded upon a correct view of the principles of public law applicable to the case; but that if any error in judgment had been committed, it would be open to the owners to have the error rectified in the Superior Court), he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 119, July 19), inclosing printed copies of the decision of the United States' Circuit Court reversing the Judgment of the inferior Court, on the ground that a vessel may approach a blockaded port to ascertain the state of the blockade, if she does so in good faith.

And to request that we would take this decision into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon, both generally and as regards the particular case of the "Empress."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the decision of the Superior Court is in our opinion equitable, and in the circumstances just. Whether the doctrine of the Superior Court in the case of the "Hiawatha," as to the proper construction of the President's Proclamation, be correct or not (and in the opinion of the Attorney and Solicitor-General it is so), that doctrine is not impeached by the decision in the case of the "Empress." The Judgment in this case really turned upon the belief of the Court in the good faith of the vessel, and the absence of any intention to break the blockade. In such cases, inquiry at the mouth of the blockading port has been always holden lawful by our Prize Courts.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 329.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 26.)

My Lord,

Temple, August 25, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 9th of February last* respecting the two boys of colour, Stirrup and Edwards, who were carried off from the Bahamas in an American vessel in March 1861, and sold into slavery, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the subsequent correspondence, as marked in the inclosed list, from which we would perceive that one of these boys, Stirrup, has been recovered and restored to his family, while the other, Edwards, is still held in slavery in the State of Georgia.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 204.

That the following are the points upon which it would seem that a decision is now required:—

As regards Stirrup, whether compensation can be claimed for him. (See Colonial Office letter of July 11.)

As regards Edwards, whether an endeavour should be made to purchase his freedom. (See Lord Lyons' No. 487 of May 29.)

And as regards both of these lads, whether some steps should not be taken by Her Majesty's Government to bring to justice the master of the American vessel in which they were carried off from their homes. (See Colonial Office of July 3, 1863.)

Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these several points into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the several points mentioned into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to Stirrup, we are of opinion that no compensation can be claimed for him. The acts of kidnapping and detention were the criminal acts of individuals, committed without the sanction of the Government, either of the United States or of the Confederate States, so that neither Government was primarily implicated in the transaction. Nor has anything hitherto occurred to entail a responsibility which did not originally exist.

2. As regards Edwards, there seem to us to be very grave difficulties of principle in the way of the proposal to "purchase his freedom." The least, perhaps, of these objections is, that if the transaction assumed the form of a purchase of the young man himself from a person claiming to have a right of property in him as a slave, it would be contrary to the letter (though not to the spirit) of the Slave Trade Act. 5 Geo. IV, cap. 113, sec. 2. A graver objection seems to be, that if the identity and place of detention of the young man were established (which it must be before any such transaction could take place), Her Majesty's Government would have a clear and unquestionable right to demand his delivery up, without any ransom, from the persons administering the Government of the Confederate States, and to bring the power of this country to bear, if necessary, for the purpose of enforcing that demand. Under any other circumstances, it could hardly be thought consistent with the dignity of this country to permit a British subject, kidnapped within British territory, to be forcibly detained in captivity in any other country to which he might have been unlawfully taken, and upon which the power of Great Britain could possibly be brought to bear: and we are by no means prepared to admit that the present anomalous condition of the Confederate States (as a Power recognized by Her Majesty in the character of a belligerent, though not of an independent nation), is a sufficient reason why redress should not be exacted for this or any other such enormous wrong, if perpetrated within their territory upon British subjects.

The Government of the Confederate States have justifiably declined to communicate with Her Majesty's Government through Consuls accredited to the Government of Washington; but we apprehend that it is in the power of Her Majesty's Government, and that it is in fact (as the present case shows) absolutely necessary to establish during the present state of things some other suitable means of communication with the Confederate authorities, for all legitimate purposes; and we should recommend that in preference to the payment of money for the redemption of a British subject from unlawful captivity, a demand should be made upon the Confederate Government (in such a manner as to make it understood that the case is one which Her Majesty's Government regard in a serious light) for their co-operation in the discovery and release of Edwards, and for the punishment of the person by whom he was stolen from the Bahama Islands, if that person be within the Confederate jurisdiction.

It is not, we conceive, at all necessary, in order to support the principle of such a demand, so far as the liberation of Edwards is concerned, that Her Majesty's Government should be able to invoke the authority of any local law.

---

* Page 47.

We may, however, observe that by the Act of Congress of the 20th of April, 1818 (3 Hertslet, 475, sec. 5), which we presume is still law in the Confederate States, neither the importer, "nor any person or persons claiming from or under him," is capable of holding "any right, interest, or title whatsoever in or to any negro, mulatto, or person of colour, imported or brought into the United States, or the territories thereof, in violation of the provisions of that Act;" and the case of Edwards is unquestionably within that section.

3. The punishment of the offending captain remains a question apart from and beyond the liberation of the kidnapped and enslaved boys. The act of kidnapping having been committed within British territory, the offender, whatever be the country of his birth or allegiance, is liable to be apprehended, tried, and punished, wherever and whenever he may be found within British jurisdiction. We have already advised that the offence of kidnapping does not come within the Extradition Treaty between the United States and Great Britain; and that if the captain were known to be within the United States territory, his surrender, for the purpose of trial, could not be demanded under such Treaty. We observe it stated, however, in the despatch of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, that the crime of kidnapping is "piracy;" but although it is made so by the law of England, in certain cases (not indeed by the common law, but by the Slave Trade Act, 5 Geo. IV, cap. 113, sec. 9), and also by the statute law of the United States (see the Act of Congress of the 15th of May, 1820, 3 Hertslet, 482), there is no provision in the Slave Trade Treaties between Great Britain and the United States to the like effect; and under these circumstances we think that the word "piracy," as used in the Extradition Treaty of the 9th of August, 1842, must be construed to mean piracy by the law of nations (which mere kidnapping is not), and not to include crimes to which that designation may have been extended, in either country, by special enactment.

Apart from extradition, which involves a trial in the country of the offence, we think that Her Majesty's Government, in regard of the sufferers being British subjects, is entitled, on the part of the Government of any friendly State, to the use of reasonable efforts within the limits of the local law to bring the offender to punishment. Since therefore the criminal act of Clark, though committed in the Bahamas, is a crime in the United States, according to the law there prevailing, the United States' Government might, in fairness, so bring the offender to trial if he were found within their jurisdiction; and there appears to be no reason to doubt that they would do so.

With reference to the Confederate States, the case is the same if Clark should be found (as is more probable) within their jurisdiction, and if the impediments at present existing in the way of communication on public matters between Her Majesty's Government and the authorities of those States were (so far as necessary for this and similar purposes) overcome or removed.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 330.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 31.)

Temple, August 29, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, as marked in the margin,* respecting the case of a British steamer, the "Victor," which was captured by the United States' cruizer "Juniata," and taken into Key West for adjudication, but which appears to have been since released; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th instant, transmitting to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons, relative to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this case is undoubtedly one of a most serious character. As far as we can judge from the representations contained in the papers before us, it would certainly appear (and a similar inference may be drawn from Commander Stevens' own Report) that the "Juniata" lay in wait for the "Victor" in a neutral harbour, and followed her from thence with the intention of capturing her, which she accomplished. It further appears from the representations of the master and officers of the "Victor," confirmed by the Report of Consul Crawford (and of which we see no reason to doubt the truth, although the contrary is alleged by Commander Stevens), that the "Victor" was captured within neutral jurisdiction.

It seems also to be proved, and scarcely disputed, that her crew were treated not only as prisoners of war (which was unjustifiable), but even as felons, which (if the expression may be allowed) was still less justifiable.

While, on the one hand, there has certainly been on many occasions much exaggeration in the complaints of British crews captured by United States' cruizers; on the other hand we find it difficult not to believe that, whatever may be the intentions entertained and orders issued by Mr. Seward, with respect to the observance of neutral rights, and generally of international law, they have not been practically obeyed by United States' cruizers under the command of Admiral Wilkes; and we cannot, bearing in mind former cases, give implicit credence to the simple denial of that officer, or of those under his immediate command, that the wrongs complained of by the crew of this vessel have not in substance, or in great degree, been inflicted.

It is clear from the letter of Señor Tassara to Mr. Seward, that a similar impression with respect to the conduct of the United States' officers has been made upon the mind of the Spanish Minister, and if Mrs. Beckwith's statement, reported to the Spanish Minister at Washington in Señor Cubell's letter of the 18th of June, was really made by that lady (to whom a motive for deliberate untruth could hardly be imputed), it is difficult to doubt that the representations as to the place of capture, now made by Commander Stevens, are wilfully untrue.

We are not informed on what ground, or under what circumstances, the "Victor" has been released by the Prize Court, and this is a matter of great importance, as to which we should be glad, when the intelligence arrives, to be apprized, especially as notice of appeal appears to have been given on the part of the captors.

At present the promises of Mr. Seward are fair and just both to Señor Tassara and Lord Lyons; it remains to be seen whether they are faithfully performed. Lord Lyons appears to be aware of the general importance of the case, and of the particular points as to which redress should be demanded.

We think that he should be apprized that Her Majesty's Government are determined that the wrongs complained of shall be promptly investigated and redressed. And with respect to the treatment of the crew, that it cannot be too clearly proclaimed to or understood by the United States' Government, that Her Majesty's subjects happening to be the crew of a vessel captured on suspicion of breaking a blockade are not to be treated as prisoners of war, and still less to be subjected to confinement which injures their health, and indignities which degrade their character.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Consul Archibald, No. 102, June 29; No. 116, July 13; Lord Lyons, No. 650, July 17; Mr. Crawford, No. 29, July 2; Lord Lyons, No. 651, July 17; No. 661, July 20; Consul Archibald, No. 127, July 20; Lord Lyons, No 676, July 28, 1863.

1863

No. 331.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 1.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 31, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and a correspondence with the Colonial Office,* on a question raised by the United States' gun-boat "Rhode Island" having anchored in Mathewtown Roadstead, Bahamas, without any previous communication with the local authorities; and to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Proclamation was in perfect accordance with the right of Her Majesty as an independent Sovereign, and with her obligations as the Queen of a neutral State.

Indeed, this is a position which does not appear to be controverted by Mr. Seward or the United States' Government, and certainly the conduct of the belligerents during this war, both in the waters of Her Majesty's dominions, and of the Crown of Spain and Denmark, has borne ample testimony to the expediency and necessity of such a Proclamation.

There appear to be three classes of Bahama Islands which require distinct consideration as to the application to them of the law laid down in the Proclamation:—

1. The Island of Nassau, in which the Governor is resident.

2. The "out Islands," which contain certain officers of the rank and character of revenue collectors and police magistrates.

3. Islands or cays in which there are no such officers.

In terms and in theory the Proclamation clearly applies to all the Islands. But I agree with the remarks of Lord Lyons in his despatch (July 14, 1863), that, practically speaking, the enforcement of the prohibition contained in the Proclamation with respect to the third class is impossible, while, nevertheless, any mention of these islands which might be construed to sanction the use of these ports and roadsteads, without the permission of the Governor, would be most inexpedient.

I think, therefore, that nothing should be, at present at least, specifically mentioned or published as to this third class. It is with respect to the first and second class that the question of enforcing the injunctions of the Proclamation really and practically arises.

By the terms of this Proclamation no ship of war or privateer of either belligerent is permitted to enter the ports of the Bahama Islands, "except by special leave of the Governor of the Bahama Islands, or in case of stress of weather;" and there can be no possible doubt that in every case but the excepted one, the obtaining such special leave is a necessary preliminary condition on the part of the belligerent to entering any one of these ports.

I should have thought, but for the letter of the United States' Consul, that it could not have been seriously suggested that the necessity of this condition was dispensed with on account of the non-residence of the Governor in the particular island into the port of which the ship of the belligerent desired to anchor.

The delegation of his authority in this respect by the Governor to a subordinate officer resident in the island is manifestly a grace and favour to the belligerent. If he chooses to think that the application to an inferior officer detracts from his dignity, he is not obliged to make it; but he cannot, on this account, have any right whatever to set at nought both Her Majesty's Proclamation, and his obligations as a belligerent, by anchoring in the port without any permission at all.

I have the honour to agree with the Duke of Newcastle that, apart from some uncontrollable necessity, springing from some sudden emergency, it is difficult to conceive that a belligerent can anchor in the ports of the "out Islands" with any other object than that of making an unneutral, and therefore an unlawful use, of a neutral port.

I also humbly agree with his Grace as to the general inexpediency of vesting any discretion in subordinate officers upon these important questions of international law, but it seems impossible to avoid doing so a certain extent in the particular circumstances of these Islands.

I venture to doubt the expediency of formally or at all reopening the general question of the Proclamation with either belligerent: the law is well known to and ought to be observed by both. It might perhaps have been fairly understood that cases of such emergency as sudden illness, or dearth of provisions, must of necessity be treated as exceptions to the rule, though stress of weather alone happens to be mentioned.

But as to these points, no harm can, and some advantage probably will, ensue from such a supplementary Proclamation as his Grace suggests; while, with reference to the graver question, I think it would be desirable to publish distinctly the prohibition to anchor in the "out Islands" ports, except with the special leave of an officer to whom the Governor had delegated his authority in this matter, and who would be instructed to exercise his discretionary powers with reference to the presence or absence of those circumstances of unavoidable necessity which have been referred to.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 558 and 636; to Colonial Office, July 13 and August 3; Colonial Office, August 17, 1863.

No. 332.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 1.)

MEXICO.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 31, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris inclosing an extract from the "Moniteur" with reference to a recent order of the French Commander-in-chief in Mexico, that enemy's property should be sequestrated, and announcing that instructions had been given by the French Minister of Marine to the French Naval Commander in Mexico to blockade, from the 25th of this month, certain specified ports of Mexico, with the alleged object of suppressing the hostile guerilla bands which are stated to prey upon, and to support themselves by means of, the dues levied at certain places on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico; and to request that I would take this announcement of the "Moniteur" into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether any, and if so what, steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government with reference to the measure in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this notice into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the sequestration of enemy's property and the blockade of the Mexican ports are belligerent rights which it is competent to the Emperor of the French duly to exercise, and which call for no remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 333.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell,—(Received September 2.)

UNITED STATES.

Temple, August , 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying further papers respecting the case of the "Margaret and Jessie," viz., a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 4th August instant, inclosing a copy of a despatch with other documents from the Governor of the Bahamas, and a letter and its inclosures from Mr. W. Wilson, the commander of the "Margaret and Jessie," in which, on behalf of the owner of that vessel, he prefers a claim against Her Majesty's Government on account of the attack made upon her by a United States' cruizer within the maritime jurisdiction of the British Crown; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have already reported to your Lordship our opinion upon the merits of this case as between the Government of the United States and the Government of Great Britain; and we think that adequate (and, if possible, prompt) reparation ought to be obtained from the Government of the United States, in the shape of such a pecuniary payment as will enable Mr. Trenholm to receive, through the instrumentality of Her Majesty's Government, reasonable compensation for the loss sustained by him. But we do not think that Her Majesty's Government can be advised to adopt, without much more investigation, Mr. Trenholm's own estimate of that loss at the enormous sum of 69,138*l*.

The demand which Mr. Wilson makes upon Her Majesty's Government (and which is less distinctly implied in the extraordinary heading of the claim under Mr. Trenholm's signature) seems to be that Her Majesty's Government should, in the meantime, and before recovering any compensation from the Government of the United States, take upon themselves the liability to make good Mr. Trenholm's loss, as if they had committed, and not been aggrieved by, the act of violence which has been done in this case.

We are of opinion that while Mr. Wilson is informed that Her Majesty's Government are taking, and will not omit still to take, such steps as they deem to be required for the honour and dignity of Great Britain, and which they trust will result in their obtaining for Mr. Trenholm from the Government of the United States adequate compensation, he should also be informed that they peremptorily decline to recognize the principle of the pecuniary responsibility of Her Majesty's Government, for which, in his letter, he appears to contend. Mr. Trenholm is, under the circumstances, entitled to the same protection from Her Majesty's Government which would have been extended to one of Her Majesty's own subjects, or to the subject of any neutral Power. He cannot be entitled to more.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 334.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 4.)

Temple, September 3, 1863.

TUNIS.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th of August instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 18th of December last,* on the draft of a Convention between Her Majesty's Government and the Bey of Tunis, for enabling British subjects to hold immovable property in that Regency, he was directed to acquaint us that the draft having been presented to the Tunisian Government, they have proposed some amendments in Articles IV and XVII, as settled by us. He was also pleased to transmit to us the draft of Convention which was under our consideration, together with a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis (No. 27), inclosing copies of the Articles in question as altered by the Tunisian Government; and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion whether there is any objection to the Articles as so amended.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these Articles into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think there is no objection to the amended Articles IV and XVII of the proposed Convention, unless Her Majesty's Government should be of opinion, as a matter of policy, that it is inexpedient to introduce into a Convention of this kind any stipulations tending to place the maintenance of the present Constitutional Laws of Tunis on the footing of international engagement, which the Tunisian Government voluntarily proposes to do by its amendments in the XVIIth Article.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 312.

No. 335.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 9.)

Temple, September 8, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to that part of our Report of the 22nd of April last* which relates to the unneutral use made by United States' cruizers of the ports of neutral Powers, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence, as marked in the margin,† which has since passed upon the subject between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the assurances contained in Mr. Seward's note to Lord Lyons of the 29th ultimo (July), (inclosure in Lord Lyons' No. 690 of the 3rd instant (August), and also as to the bearing which the doctrine laid down in the instructions to which Mr. Seward refers has upon the cases of the "Dolphin" and "Peterhoff."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the correspondence submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of Mr. Seward (29th July, 1863, inclosure in Lord Lyons' No. 690) appears to us to lay down correctly the principles of international law applicable to the unneutral use of neutral waters and ports.

Nothing can be more distinct than the admission made by Mr. Welles, in the terms of his instructions of the 28th February last, to Commander Craven (as stated in Mr. Seward's letter), that "a capture of a neutral vessel, made after standing off and on a neutral harbour or mouth of a river, or lying in wait within it for the purpose, although actually made beyond the neutral jurisdiction, would not be recognized as valid;" and that even the right of search cannot properly be exercised under such circumstances. This is an admission of great importance, which in future communications between the two Governments must not be lost sight of.

It remains to be seen whether these proper orders of the United States' Government will be really carried into execution by the naval officers, whose conduct will of course be vigilantly watched.

With respect to the application of the principle of these orders to the cases of the "Dolphin" and the "Peterhoff," we have to observe that we have not now before us the Judgment pronounced by the Prize Court in these cases, or the evidence on which it was founded; but if evidence was properly laid before that tribunal that the captors of those vessels had lain in wait for them in a neutral port, and from thence made chase after and captured them, or if such were admitted by the captors to be the fact, we should certainly be of opinion that there was adequate reason, on that ground alone, for an application to the United States' Government for the restoration of those vessels to their owners, in accordance with the doctrine set forth in the letter of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons.

The question, however, with regard to those two vessels and the particular circumstances of their capture is entirely one of fact: and we infer from the papers before us that the United States' Government and Admiral Wilkes have never admitted the fact to be that in either of those cases the capture was made by means of any unneutral use of Danish waters, in violation of the principle of the instructions given by Mr. Welles to Commander Craven, on the 28th February last. In all the communications which have passed between Mr. Seward and Lord Lyons on this subject, Mr. Seward seems to have confined himself to the general question, and to have avoided entering into any explanations with respect to the particular cases of the "Peterhoff" and the "Dolphin;" but it would seem that a correspondence took place between Admiral Wilkes and the Danish Governor of St. Thomas (of which some account is given in Mr. Welles' letter to Mr. Seward of the 8th June), in the course of which Admiral Wilkes, while disclaiming "the idea of using that harbour to make preparations for captures, or of infringing upon the neutral territory of St. Thomas," offered explanations as to "the circumstances under which certain captures, deemed objectionable were made;" referring evidently to the cases of the "Peterhoff" and the "Dolphin," and to another case specified in the Danish Governor's reply. These explanations (as Lord Lyons observed in his letter to Mr. Seward of the 16th of June) have not as yet been communicated to his Lordship or to Her Majesty's Government, and we cannot therefore do more than conjecture their nature from the answer of the Danish Governor, dated the 16th of May, of which a copy is before us. From this it certainly appears that the explanation offered (although the Governor observes that he had been "in some points under a different impression from the one which would result from that explanation") was, in substance, accepted as satisfactory; and we collect that Admiral Wilkes had, in fact, given the Governor his positive assurance "that in all these cases he had made it a point not to infringe on Danish rights, and the interests of that place (St. Thomas), which required that no prosecution of outgoing vessels should be immediately commenced from that harbour by any man-of-war."

---

* Page 126.

† Lord Lyons, No. 370, May 5; to Lord Lyons, No. 299, May 23; Lord Lyons, No. 547, June 16; to Lord Lyons, No. 378, July 3; Lord Lyons, No. 690, August 3, 1863.

Under these circumstances, although a conviction still exists in our own minds (both from the Reports of the British Naval Officers, and from the very manner in which the question of fact has been avoided in Mr. Seward's communications with Lord Lyons) that the "Vanderbilt" and the "Wachsetts" did really commence their proceedings, with a view to the visitation and capture of the "Peterhoff" and the "Dolphin" respectively, within the Danish waters, we are apprehensive that there may be great difficulty in now making good any demand upon the United States' Government for the restoration of those two captured vessels on that ground, unless the facts necessary to raise the point were substantiated by the evidence before the Prize Court, so as distinctly to constitute, in each case, part of the defence in which the Court had to adjudicate; and, in deciding whether such restoration shall be demanded or not, it may perhaps be prudent to bear in mind that the right to insist upon reparation for an unneutral use of neutral waters, with a view to a capture afterwards actually made on the high seas, beyond neutral limits, is, in strictness, that of the neutral State whose waters were violated, rather than that of the State whose vessel has been captured; and if the Danish Government has accepted as satisfactory the explanations offered to them upon the question of fact, it may be very difficult now to maintain that the same question ought to be re-opened as between the United States' Government and Great Britain, unless there be evidence properly raising the point for judicial determination by the Prize Court.

Upon the merits of the case of the "Dolphin" (apart from this particular question, which, as we were led to infer, had not been raised before the Court) we have already expressed our opinion that the sentence of condemnation was well founded.

Upon the merits of the final sentence in the case of the "Peterhoff," not having yet seen the evidence or a copy of the Judgment, we are not at present in a situation to express any definite opinion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 336.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 9.)

Temple, September 8, 1863.

TURKEY.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Francis (Nos. 56 and 64), acting as Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople during Sir E. Hornby's absence, and from Sir Edmund Hornby relative to the claims of exemption from serving on juries made by British subjects employed in the Imperial Ottoman Bank, and by other persons in the service of the Turkish Government; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be taken in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand the Imperial Ottoman Bank to be a trading Corporation, employed, not exclusively, but as a branch of its business, in conducting certain financial business of the Ottoman Porte—discharging, in fact, functions analogous, in this respect, to those discharged by the Bank of England in its relation to the English Government, though with this difference, that the Porte employs the Ottoman Bank as its Agent for all the ordinary receipts and payments of the public Exchequer, while the agency of the Bank of England for the British Government is confined to the management of the National Debt.

The persons employed in this Ottoman Bank are, we think, the servants of that Corporation, and are not, strictly speaking, persons "holding appointments in the Civil Service of the Porte." As we understand the facts, the Government of the Porte neither appoints, nor removes, nor pays, these persons. We think, therefore, that they cannot claim exemption from serving as jurors under the terms of the present Order in Council. If their liability to serve as jurors be likely to cause any serious interruption of the financial business of the Porte, the difficulty may be removed by a supplementary Order in Council.

With respect to the mechanics employed by the Ottoman Government, we are of opinion that they are not exempt from the liability to serve as jurors.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 337.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 10.)

Doctors' Commons, September 9, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter (dated the 17th August ultimo) from Messrs. Richardson, Spence, and Co., inclosing a copy of the protest relative to the capture and destruction by the "Florida" of the American vessel "Red Gauntlet," the freight of which and a portion of her cargo belonged to Messrs. Richardson and Co., and that they request to be informed if they can obtain redress through Her Majesty's Government. And Mr. Layard was to request that I would take Messrs. Richardson and Co.'s letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the propriety of returning an answer to it in the same terms as Messrs. Brown, Ripley, and Co., and others were answered, who made similar applications to Her Majesty's Government with reference to property destroyed by the "Alabama;" and Mr. Layard was pleased to inclose a copy of the answer returned to Messrs. Brown, Ripley, and Co. (dated the 29th November), which was concurred in by the Law Officers in their Report of the 28th of November last.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken Messrs. Richardson, Spence, and Co.'s letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 297.

That I am of opinion that Messrs. Richardson should be answered in the same terms, mutatis mutandis, as Messrs. Brown, Ripley, and Co. were answered with respect to their application to Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 338.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 11.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 9, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston (No. 9, April 18), respecting the treatment to which two British subjects, William Henrick and John A. Lee, have been subjected by the military authorities in the State of Texas; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these cases into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government should take any steps on behalf of Henrick and Lee.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these cases into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Consul Lynn does not state whether Galveston at the time of Henrick's imprisonment was or was not under martial law. But, assuming this not to have been the case, he appears to have been fairly tried and acquitted by the civil tribunal, and his being placed in irons to have been the result of his disobedience to prison discipline. The subsequent arrest of Henrick on the 4th of March by military authority and his compulsory return to Houston remains unexplained, owing, it should seem, to the absence of General Magruder, to whom Mr. Lynn has written from Houston.

I think that, with respect to Henrick's case, Mr. Lynn should be directed to state whether at the time of the former and last arrest Galveston and the adjacent district were or were not under martial law; to obtain an answer to his letter from the General; and having ascertained the offence with which Henrick may be charged, to take whatever steps may be necessary to procure him a fair trial. In the event of the General's refusing to answer the letter, Mr. Lynn should make application, in moderate and prudent language, for the release of Henrick, to the Minister of the Confederate Government who holds the office of Secretary at War.

With respect to the case of Lee, Mr. Consul Lynn appears to have taken the proper step in his application to General Holmes, and should be directed to report the answer of the General to your Lordship.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 339.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 11.)

My Lord, Temple, September 11, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 13th of March, 21st of March, and 27th of April,* respecting the case of the "Springbok," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the correspondence which had since passed upon the subject; and Mr. Layard was to call our more particular attention to the despatches from Lord Lyons and Mr. Consul Archibald reporting the condemnation of the "Springbok" and her cargo, and that they have been ordered to be sold, and to letters received from Mr. Begbie and Messrs. Barter and Co., urging Her Majesty's Government to take up the case of this vessel; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as we have before us only the bare Decree, and neither the evidence nor the Judgment, giving the reasons of the Court in extenso, we are enabled to form any opinion as to the propriety and justice of the sentence of condemnation.

It certainly was not the sentence, which the previous statements respecting the case, and the papers connected with the vessel, which we had seen, would have led us to anticipate: but it is possible, that in this, as in some other cases, those statements may have been delusive; and there can be no doubt that if the reasons of condemnation stated in the face of the Decree were supported by the evidence, the sentence was correct.

The papers, according to the Decree, were holden to be simulated, the destination to have been a blockaded port, and the goods contraband, upon what grounds we do not know; nor have we the advantage of being informed of the opinion of the Counsel for the owners, as to the merits of the case.

We observe that Mr. Begbie, in his letter of the 20th of August, 1863, states that the vessel and cargo were actually and bonâ fide bound solely for Nassau, "and there the cargo would have been discharged and the vessel dismissed, her charter being at an end, and this no evidence disproved. The phrase, "the vessel dismissed," is rather singular; but if it be true (as stated in Messrs. Barter and Co.'s letter of the 21st of August), that after discharging at Nassau, she was to have loaded back to the United Kingdom, or to have proceeded to one of the West India Islands to load a cargo of sugar for England, and to go "nowhere else," there would certainly appear to have been no just ground for her condemnation.

It appears that an appeal has been duly entered, and is in course of prosecution.

The sale of a vessel, after a sentence of condemnation, is in accordance with the practice of our own Prize Courts.

At present, we cannot advise your Lordship that there is any ground for official interference, or for not awaiting the result of the appeal, which is the usual and proper course for obtaining a reversal of a sentence alleged to be erroneous; but with the evidence, the Judgment, and the opinion of the owners' Counsel before us, we should be in a better condition to offer our advice on the subject.

It is hardly necessary to add, that the suggestion of examining witnesses on oath in this country is wholly inadmissible.

The Prize Court alone has jurisdiction over the subject matter; and, like all other Courts of Justice, must be presumed, unless the contrary can be shown from its own proceedings or from the evidence before it, to have discharged its duty properly.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since this Report was prepared, we have also received and considered Mr. Layard's letter of the 7th instant, and its inclosure; which, however, require no addition to or alteration in our Report.

R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 340.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 12.)

Temple, September 11, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our several Reports

---

* Pages 69, 80, and 137.

1863

respecting the case of the "Peterhoff," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with a volume containing the previous correspondence, the papers as marked in the margin,* consisting of despatches from Lord Lyons and Mr. Consul Archibald, reporting the condemnation of the "Peterhoff" and her cargo, and that an order had been issued by Judge Betts to sell both vessel and cargo; and also a letter from Mr. Spence, dated August 20th, urging Her Majesty's Government to interfere to prevent the sale of the "Peterhoff," pending an appeal to the Supreme Court; and a letter, dated August 17th, addressed by Mr. Mundella to the Duke of Newcastle, protesting against the condemnation of the "Peterhoff," and of his goods which were on board of her; and to request that we would take these several papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to add, for our information, that your Lordship has instructed Mr. Consul Archibald to procure and send home a copy of the evidence on which the Decree of condemnation was based.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the absence of the evidence upon which the sentence of condemnation was founded, we cannot advise your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government ought at present to address any official remonstrance upon this subject to the Government of the United States. And we think it right to state than unless the evidence were clearly and unequivocally inadequate to sustain the sentence, we should be disinclined, upon principle, to recommend your Lordship to interfere in the matter until the Appellate Court had pronounced its Judgment upon the case. During the last war between Great Britain and Russia it frequently happened that sentences of the Prize Court in the first instance were reversed or modified by the Appellate Tribunal; and we believe that in no instance in which an appeal was pending did Her Majesty's Government interfere at the instance of a neutral State to stay the proceedings in Court. And during the present war, the Appellate Tribunal of the United States has, certainly in one instance if not in more, reversed the sentence of the Court below.

With respect to the sale of this vessel, after the sentence of condemnation, we have already reported to your Lordship that this practice is in accordance with that of the English Prize Courts; and that this power of sale was expressly confirmed by the last English Prize Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 341.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 12.)

Temple, September 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to our letter of the 20th of August, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that it having been reported to your Lordship that M. Bravay had stated that the iron-clads at Birkenhead were being constructed for the Egyptian Government, your Lordship telegraphed to Mr. Colquhoun, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, to know whether that statement was correct.

That your Lordship received from Mr. Colquhoun in reply a telegram referring him to a despatch written by Mr. Colquhoun in February last, in which mention was made of M. Bravay having asserted that he had received a verbal commission from the late Pasha to procure two iron-clad vessels for him, and further particulars were promised by post.

These particulars had not yet arrived, but your Lordship had received that afternoon a further telegram from Mr. Colquhoun stating as follows:—

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 667 and 689; Consul Archibald, Nos. 146, 148, and 155.

"The Viceroy has positively refused to accept the iron ships, and they remain on Bravay's hands."

Under these circumstances, and with reference to the state of forwardness of these vessels, as described in the accompanying papers, just received from the Treasury, he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would again take this subject into our consideration, and advise your Lordship as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's further letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further letter, and its inclosures, from the Treasury relative to the vessels being constructed in the Mersey, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the other papers on this subject, forwarded to us in his previous letter of that day's date.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further papers now submitted to us confirm us in the opinion that no legal grounds have yet been shown to exist on which Her Majesty's Government can interfere with either of the two vessels in question.

That these are very formidable war-vessels is unquestionable. But Her Majesty's Government are clearly without any legal power to seize or detain them on that account only. If ordered or purchased by M. Bravay (or by any other person), either for any foreign non-belligerent Government, or on his own private account by way of speculation, and with a view to a subsequent sale to any customer whom he might find willing to take them off his hands, they would not be liable to seizure under the Foreign Enlistment Act, according to any construction which that Statute has ever yet been thought capable of receiving. It now appears that M. Bravay represented himself, so far back as February last, to the Egyptian Government to have been verbally commissioned by the late Pasha of Egypt to procure two such vessels for him; and that those two vessels now "remain in Bravay's hands" (according to the terms of Mr. Colquhoun's last telegram), because the present Viceroy "has positively refused to accept them." The inference seems unavoidable, that they have at least been bonâ fide offered to the present Viceroy by M. Bravay: and whatever that gentleman (if he is the true owner) may now contemplate doing with them, it is undeniable that these circumstances have no tendency to support any charge of a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We observe that Mr. Morgan, in his letter to the Collector of Customs at Liverpool of the 29th August, states that the Messrs. Laird "placed him in a position to state his belief that, if the Government are not in possession of the names of the owners, the Messrs. Laird would readily furnish such information upon an official application in writing being made to them for it." We feel some difficulty in saying that, where the question is, whether the law has been or may not be violated, and whether it may not hereafter become the duty of Her Majesty's Government to put it in force, any "official application," for information of this kind, could properly be made (unless invited by himself) to a person who, if any offence has been committed, or is contemplated, may be implicated therein. If any such inquiry is made in the present case, it should be in a very guarded and quite general form, viz., whether Messrs. Laird are willing to afford any information to Her Majesty's Government upon the subject; and it should be explained (if made) by reference to the tenour of Mr. Morgan's communication. There would, undoubtedly, be some inconvenience in knowing from Messrs. Laird themselves whom they are dealing with as the owners of these ships; and the fact that they have intimated their willingness to answer any such inquiry, if made of them officially and in writing, would undoubtedly be made use of against the Government if (without making such inquiry) they were hereafter to take any proceeding with reference to those vessels.

We cannot conclude this Report without inviting your Lordship's particular attention to the circumstance, that while, under the 150th section of the Customs Law Consolidation Act (16 and 17 Vict., cap. 107), "the following goods may, by Proclamation or Order in Council, be prohibited either to be exported or carried coastwise—arms, ammunition, and gunpowder, military and naval stores, and any articles which Her Majesty shall judge capable of being converted into or made useful in increasing the quantity of military or naval stores," no similar power appears to have been conferred by the Legislature upon the Crown to prohibit the exportation of ships of war, or ships which Her Majesty shall judge capable of being converted into ships of war. By the common law Her Majesty would doubtless have sufficient power to prevent ships of war from leaving this country, so that they might fall into the hands of an enemy, when Great Britain was herself belligerent, or in imminent danger of war. But the 150th section of the Customs Consolidation Act is not limited to any such emergency; and if (as would appear to be, on every ground, reasonable) the power given by that section had been extended to ships of war, it might have furnished an easy and convenient method of avoiding many of the difficulties which now arise, both from the uncertainty of the construction of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and from the necessity of obtaining legal proof of the purpose and intent with which a vessel is equipped or fitted out.

1863

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since the above portion of our Report was written, we have received the three letters of Mr. Layard of the 3rd and 7th September respectively, with their inclosures. They appear to us not to vary materially the legal complexion of the case, or to call for any modification of our foregoing remarks. The deposition of Sweeny shows that the "No. 294" is in a state of very considerable forwardness; but the officers of Customs had already reported to the same effect, and the nearness of completion for sea is foreign to the true legal question under the Foreign Enlistment Act. The same observation applies to the representation of the United States' Consul that the same vessel was, on the 3rd instant, taking coal on board.

W. A.
R. P.
R. J. P.

No. 342.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 14.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, September 12, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 16th July, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Colonial Office dated the 19th August ultimo, respecting the claim of John Stirrup to be compensated on account of his illegal abduction from the Bahamas and subsequent enslavement in the Southern States; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take the same into consideration, together with the papers on this subject previously sent to us, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the outrage in this case was perpetrated by an individual without the authority, direct or indirect, of his own Government, and was commenced in the territory of a foreign State, though completed and continued in that of of his own.

We have already had the honour to report our opinion that although the relations of the Government of the Southern States with Great Britain are those of an unrecognised de facto Government only, the Southern Government is nevertheless bound to take proper measures for the purpose of bringing to justice the offender, if found within the limits over which it exercises de facto authority.

The further question of demanding pecuniary compensation from this unrecognised Government for the act of a subject opens other and more difficult considerations.

They range themselves under two heads:—

1. Those that relate to the character of the offence, and of the redress properly due for it.

2. Those that concern the peculiar relations subsisting between this country and the Southern States.

With respect to the first head, it is suggested by the Duke of Newcastle that the law of evidence prevalent in the Southern States, which shuts out the testimony of the victim against his oppressor, ought to be considered as bearing upon the question of pecuniary compensation.

We entirely agree with his Grace in condemning such a law as barbarous and contrary to natural justice, though it is unfortunately not now for the first time prevalent in a country which gives a legal sanction to the existence of slavery. We also agree with his Grace in thinking that the Government of Great Britain is not bound to recognize that law as applicable, in any question between the two Governments, to the case of a coloured British subject who was never resident, by his own free will, within the jurisdiction in which that law prevails, and on whose behalf redress is sought for his violent deportation to and forcible detention in the territory subject to that law. It has not, however, yet been made apparent that, if redress were properly sought, this law of evidence would necessarily be applied to such a case by the Courts of the Confederate States, nor that, if it were so applied, other evidence of the identity and abduction of the youth Stirrup, admissible by the local law of those States, might not be obtained from the Bahamas which would be sufficient for the purposes of justice. If there were no such objectionable law of evidence, all that the Confederate Government could be required to do would be to prosecute criminally the kidnapper Clarke, and if that Government were to cause a criminal prosecution to be instituted against the kidnapper which resulted in his conviction and imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and without fine or condemnation in damages, or even if he were fairly tried and acquitted in due course of law (otherwise than as a mere consequence of the exclusion of Stirrup's own and other coloured evidence), we do not think that Her Majesty's Government could insist upon further steps being taken.

It is true that in a case in which the punishment of an offender would be a sufficient satisfaction as between Government and Government, it may be competent for the Government whose subject has been wronged to require pecuniary satisfaction, if proper means of bringing the offender to punishment are not provided by the law of his own country, or if (being provided) they are not properly put in force, when it would be in the power of the Government of the offender to enforce them. But it would be too much to assume, per saltum, and in the first instance, that the Government of the injured party can call upon the other Government to make pecuniary satisfaction, instead of taking criminal proceedings against the offender, merely because it may be possible, or even probable, that a prosecution, if instituted, might fail, by the exclusion of evidence which ought not to be excluded, or by the operation of a particular rule of evidence which the Government of the injured party might justly decline to recognize as an answer to its demands.

It is also true that Stirrup might probably be able (unless defeated by any special laws to the prejudice of persons of colour) to recover damages from Clarke, in an action for false imprisonment; but we do not think it possible (at all events before such a remedy has been tried and the ground of its failure shown), that the Government of the Confederate States should be called upon to make good such damages when it has neither done nor authorized the wrong, nor (as yet) done anything to justify or shield the offender.

With regard to the second consideration arising out of the existing relations between Great Britain and the Southern States, we have to observe that while, on the one hand, the absence of formal recognition does not entitle the Southern States to do, or authorize to be done by their subjects, wrong to the subject of another State, it does entitle them to require that any official intercourse with them should flow through a proper, though not a regular diplomatic channel, that is to say, through some person authorized pro hac vice and for this purpose, at least, to treat with them as a de facto Government. We do not see why any practical difficulty should prevent an application for pecuniary compensation; but we do not think that, in the present circumstances, such an application ought to be made by Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.

(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1863

No. 343.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

Temple, September 16, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th August ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 7th July,* respecting the case of the "Blanche," he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 719, August 11th), inclosing a copy of the rejoinder of the United States' Government to the observations which his Lordship was instructed to address to Mr. Seward in the sense of our Report; and to request that we would take this rejoinder into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the further course to be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in this case, and whether Her Majesty's Government ought to endeavour to procure rebutting evidence from the owners of the "Blanche."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to regard Mr. Seward's reply (August 4, 1863) in any other light than that of a determination to evade, if possible, the just demand of Her Majesty's Government for compensation to the owners of the "Blanche" and her cargo. To these persons it is evidently no substantial redress that the admitted wrongdoer, Captain Hunter, has been censured and dismissed from the service by his Government for a deliberate and gross violation of international law.

Mr. Seward places his refusal to accede to the demands of Her Majesty's Government on two grounds:—

1st. He alleges that this outrageous and indefensible proceeding on the part of an officer of the United States imposes no obligation upon that Government to indemnify those upon whom this officer, acting in the name and under the flag and authority of the Government, has inflicted a very grievous injury.

This appears to us to be a proposition which no neutral State capable of protecting its subjects can be expected to admit. With respect to the actual burning of the vessel, as well as the other facts of the case, we have had the honour to express ourselves very fully in various former Reports, and especially in our Report of the 7th July last.

We retain the opinion which we expressed in that Report.

Mr. Seward must know that Her Majesty's Government could not, with any regard to the dignity of Her Majesty, have taken any part in the proceedings of the Court-martial holden by the United States upon the conduct of its own officer. It was obvious from the first that there would be conflicting statements as to who the persons were who actually did set fire to the vessel; but we adhere to the opinion which we then expressed, that the true cause of the vessel being set on fire, whoever did the act, was manifestly the unlawful aggression of Captain Hunter, and for that act, and the consequences of it, his Government is, in our opinion, responsible. The original protest (see Mr. Consul Crawford's despatch of the 13th October, 1862, No. 38) ought (though it does not state who set fire to the ship), in the peculiar circumstances of this case, to satisfy any Government that the act was either that of the wrongdoer himself or the consequence of his aggression.

We do not advise Her Majesty's Government that, having regard to all the circumstances, and the lapse of time, they are under any obligation to seek for fresh evidence from the owners or crew of the "Blanche" upon this point; although if there were reason to believe that such evidence might be obtained, it might be desirable to see how far its production would tend to fortify the just demands of Her Majesty's Government. The second position on which Mr. Seward rests his refusal to indemnify the victims of this outrage, involves considerations of the most serious and important character. The second position is indeed partly and ostensibly one of fact, but principally, and in truth, one of law. Mr. Seward insists that the Government of the United States is entitled to treat this vessel, either as a United States' ship, or at least as a Confederate vessel never validly transferred to any British owner, saying, that "the 'General Rusk' was notoriously an American vessel; that it is not satisfactorily shown in the case, that the title in her has ever been in good faith and lawfully vested in any subject of Great Britain; and that transfers similar to that in the case of the 'Blanche' were pronounced fraudulent by a Judge of the United States in the case of the 'Emma' and the 'Florida.'" We have not these Judgments to refer to; but it is difficult to suppose that they can affect the demand of Her Majesty's Government in this particular case. In those cases the question of the title to those ships arose, we presume, before the Prize Courts, competent to adjudicate thereon, according to the rules of Prize Law applicable, when ships captured on the high seas are claimed against the captors on the ground of transfers from belligerent to neutral. Such transfers during war are not generally unlawful, but Prize Courts are entitled to require strict evidence of their bona fides in all respects. But the present is not a case of lawful capture or destruction, or one in which the United States' Government is entitled to throw upon the registered British owner the burden of establishing, by any evidence ultra the documents which have been produced, the validity of his title. No American Prize Court has any jurisdiction in this case. Even if the "Blanche" were Confederate property, it would be the duty of the Spanish Government, in the due observance of the obligations of neutrality, to protect her Confederate owners from the loss consequent upon the unlawful attack upon her within Spanish waters; and it would be no answer to the demand for redress of the Spanish Government, that if captured beyond those waters she might have been condemned as good prize. In point of fact, however, the attack was made upon her while she was sailing under the British flag, with a lawful British register. The title of her British owners is (and according to law ought to be) recognized as valid by Her Majesty's Government, and no evidence whatever has been produced on the part of the United States' Government to throw the slightest doubt upon it. It is for the United States' Government (if they can) to displace, by sufficient evidence, the title of the registered owner, valid according to British law; and which, till displaced, gives that owner a right to British protection: the attack upon the ship having been confessedly unlawful, to whomsoever she might belong. Mr. Seward is, therefore, entirely mistaken in supposing that the case of Her Majesty's Government requires them to trace the earlier history of the title to this ship, or to produce (though probably there might be no difficulty in doing so, if the "General Rusk" was in fact a Federal vessel, captured by the Confederates) the sentence of any Confederate Prize Court by which she was condemned.

It is true that "no such sentence or judgment has been thus far shown to have been passed, and no such Court has shown to exist." But neither has it been shown that this vessel ever belonged to any citizens of the States adhering to the United States' Government, or to any other person than to Mr. W. L. Smith, of Galveston, by whom she was transferred on the 31st of July, 1862, by regular bills of sale, to Mr. Wigg, her British owner. "Notoriety" (whatever Mr. Seward may mean by that word) cannot be accepted by Her Majesty's Government in lieu of proof. So that it is for Mr. Seward, and not for Her Majesty's Government, to lay the ground, by proof of the necessary matters of fact, for the discussion, in this case, of the question of the validity of a sentence of condemnation by a Confederate Prize Court, if it be really intended to raise that question. We cannot, however, but remember that Mr. Seward (while himself observing that no such facts at present appear in this case, and that it is "not necessary to decide the question," which he erroneously says Her Majesty's Government have intimated as arising in it) does, nevertheless, plainly enough, intimate that he is prepared, if necessary, to maintain the position that the United States' Government are entitled to deny the competency of all Confederate Prize Courts, and the validity of all their sentences in all questions as to the title to ships, arising between the United States and any neutral Governments.

Stripped of all ambiguous and superfluous language, the position is truly and simply this:—That the United States' Government having demanded and obtained from all neutral States the peculiar rights incident during a state of war only, and to a belligerent only, and having exercised these rights to the great annoyance and distress of neutral commerce, now declare that they will not discharge the corresponding duties of a belligerent, now deny that their enemy has any right to establish a Prize Court, and declare their determination not to respect any title to property condemned by that Court, though it be a title universally recognized by all civilized States, and though neutral States have a right to insist on the existence of such a Court in the territory de facto occupied by the Confederate States. Upon these principles it is manifest that the maintenance of a blockade, the search, visit, and condemnation of neutral ships, put in practice by the United States, instead of being lawful acts, are so many acts of unjustifiable violence, insult, and wrong. We think that upon this point there should be sent, without delay, to the United States' Government as strong and full a remonstrance as can be framed. And we humbly venture to suggest that (in the event of this position being still maintained) it would be very expedient that in a matter of such grave and common importance to all neutral States, some communication on the subject should pass between the Governments of those States, especially of France and Spain, with the view of preparing and promulgating some joint declaration to the effect that neutral States will not accord the status of a belligerent, and the right to visit on the high seas, try, and condemn neutral vessels, to the United States' Government, unless it recognizes the usual obligations which, according to international law, accompany and balance those rights, unless they also concede to their enemy the status of a belligerent for all international purposes, and as to all matters that relate to the necessary intercourse of neutral States with that enemy, pre-eminent among which is the recognition of a duly constituted Prize Court, the existence of which the neutral has a right to demand at the hands of every belligerent.

---

* Page 198.

1863

We would add that it will be highly desirable in this particular case of the "Blanche," that the demands of Her Majesty's Government should continue to have the concurrence and the energetic support of the Government of Spain.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 344.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 19.)

Doctors' Commons, September 18, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 30th of March last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, four despatches and their inclosures, from the Acting British Consul at Charleston,† reporting the result of his communications with the Confederate authorities on the subject of the schooner "Harkaway;" and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken into consideration these despatches and their inclosures, and have the honour to report—

That it now appears that this vessel was not proceeded against in the Confederate Prize Court at all, and that the title of the owner, arising out of a decree of condemnation and sale by the United States' Prize Court, has not been disputed, but, on the contrary, is expressly acknowledged by the Confederate authorities, both executive and judicial.

Judge Campbell is quite right in saying that, as this was a proceeding in the Instance (or ordinary) Court of Admiralty, in what is technically called "a cause of possession," that the owner ought to have put in an answer setting forth his title, as founded on the Decree of the United States' Prize Court, and the sale under the order of that Court.

These documents, if proved, he observes in his Memorandum, would put the title beyond the reach of controversy; and, both in his Memorandum and letter, he most expressly and satisfactorily recognizes the validity of such a title, according to the principles of international law, and promises indemnity on the part of his Government for the seizure of the property by impressment.

---

* Page 91.

† Acting Consul Walker, No. 71, May 20; No. 73, May 22; No. 82, June 26; No. 93, July 8, 1863.

It appears to me quite proper that Mr. Consul Walker should furnish the Counsel for the owner with a copy of this despatch. The documents required by the Confederate Court, and not produced, are official copies of the warrant for the sale of the vessel, and the return of the sale by the Marshal of the United States' Court.

Mr. Consul Walker invokes your Lordship's aid to obtain these documents from the Court at Key West, and I think, in the particular circumstances, this aid should be granted, and that proper instructions should be given to Her Majesty's Consul at Key West to obtain them; and if he cannot obtain their direct transmission to Mr. Consul Walker, to inclose them to your Lordship for the purpose of such transmission.

I cannot conclude this Report without observing that, apart from any consideration of the particular circumstances of this case, there is much value in this distinct recognition by Judge Campbell of the obligation of a belligerent to respect a title founded on the sentence of a belligerent Prize Court—a recognition which at present seems to stand in favourable contrast to the decisions of the United States' Prize Court at Key West, and the recent declaration of Mr. Seward on the same subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 345.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 19.)

Temple, September 19, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th July,* respecting the case of the schooner "Clyde," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† the correspondence, as marked in the margin,‡ which has since passed upon this case, and was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and more particularly the answer of Mr. Seward upon the point of "enemies' goods in neutral bottoms," and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the protest and complaint of Mr. Wood, passenger on board the "Clyde," he does not appear to have suffered any personal ill-treatment, but, on the contrary, to have been forwarded to his destination. His chronometer and other property ought, and of course will be restored to him. Proper instructions should be given as to this matter, but we do not think that his individual case, taken per se, founds any claim for compensation.

The other question arising out of this case deserves the very serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government, namely, the question as to the recognition by the United States' Government and Prize Courts of the doctrine contained in the Declaration of Paris, that the flag covers the cargo except in cases of contraband.

Though the history of this important part of international law has lost much of its practical interest, nevertheless, regard being had to the strange discrepancy between the declaration of the Executive Government of the United States, and the practice of one, at least, of their Prize Courts, it is, perhaps, not unimportant to observe that during the whole course of the wars growing out of the French Revolution, the Government and Prize Courts of the United States acted upon the principle that enemies' property was liable to seizure on board a neutral ship, and that their highest authorities, executive and judicial, declared that to be the settled doctrine of general international law.

It appears from the letter of the Solicitor at Key West, employed on

---

* Page 205.

† Lord Lyons, No. 482; Consul Archibald, No. 97; Lord Lyons, No. 549; Consul Archibald, No. 104.

‡ To Lord Lyons, No. 419; Lord Lyons, Nos. 704, 714, 715, 728, 729; to Lord Lyons, No. 480; Colonial Office, August 20.

1863

behalf of the "Clyde" (Inclosure B in Colonial Office despatch of the 20th August):—

First, that the captor seized the "Clyde" solely on the ground that Confederate property was on board of her.

Secondly, that "the Court" (at Key West) "has uniformly ruled" that a neutral flag does not protect enemies' property.

Thirdly, that the Judge has adhered to this ruling in the case of the "Clyde," and, releasing the vessel, has detained the cargo until it could be shown what portions of it were not Confederate property.

It is true that he had not then received any official intimation of the views and intentions, on this subject, of the United States' Government, as declared in Mr. Seward's letter to Lord Lyons (13th August, Inclosure in Lord Lyons' No. 729), a copy of which, Mr. Seward says, is to be sent to all prosecuting officers of the Government.

Mr. Seward did not believe the accuracy of the report that the vessel had been seized on the ground of her having enemies' property on board, and he must, therefore, have been ignorant of the decisions of the Prize Court at Key West; not unimportant, however, as we learn, from the letter of the Solicitor above cited, that the harbour was crowded with prizes.

We infer, from the letter of Mr. Seward, that he admits that the Government of the United States publicly pledged themselves at the breaking out of this war, that they would adhere to the new doctrine laid down in the Declaration of Paris; and it seems to follow, that if the United States' Government are satisfied as to either of the two facts, namely, that this vessel was seized, and that her cargo had been adjudicated upon, or detained, in direct contravention of this doctrine, they are bound both to restore the cargo (the ship having been already restored), and to make proper compensation for the wrong which they must admit to have been done.

We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to communicate these facts, apparently capable of being indisputably established, to Mr. Seward, and to express his confidence that the United States' Government will do what justice and good faith plainly require.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 346.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 21.)

Temple, September 21, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us two despatches from the Acting British Consul at Mobile (Nos. 18 and 20), and a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Charleston (No. 91), relative to Judgments pronounced by Judge Jones and Judge Magrath, under which British subjects established in the Confederate States are being forced into the ranks of the Confederate army; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the principle which we had the honour to submit to your Lordship in our former Reports on this subject, namely, that to aliens who have not by some public act assumed the character, or accepted the political rights and obligations purposely incident to the character of citizens, a reasonable time should be allowed in order that they may exercise the option of leaving the country or remaining in it, subject to the new obligation of obeying new laws enacted during a state of war for the purpose of exacting from all residents compulsory military service, and the existence of which the foreigner cannot be presumed to have anticipated when in time of peace he took up his temporary abode in that country.

This principle has been fairly acknowledged and acted upon by the United States, and it is (as we conceive) generally accepted throughout Europe; and we think the Confederate States ought not to depart from it. It is not only just in itself, but we think a departure from it would involve a gross breach of good faith towards those British subjects who, in reliance upon the protection secured to them by the Treaties between Great Britain and the United States, were induced, before the commencement of the present civil war, to take up their residence in the Southern States. To exact from such persons military service, under any circumstances, would be, in our opinion, quite indefensible; but to do so in a civil war, and on behalf of a de facto Government engaged in the attempt to establish its own independence by an armed insurrection, is still more flagrantly opposed to all the known principles of international law and justice.

In the particular case of Farraday, who voluntarily served in the Confederate navy, there is clearly no ground for the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government. With respect to the other cases (if such there be) in which the persons enrolled have long been aware that military service would be a necessary consequence of their prolonged sojourn in the Southern States, and who had opportunities of leaving, have, nevertheless, voluntarily remained in them, we do not think that Her Majesty's Government are called upon to interfere.

In cases where any attempt to leave the country has been bonâ fide made, and prevented by circumstances over which the persons had no control, we think that urgent remonstrances should be addressed by Her Majesty's Government to the Confederate authorities, and every practical endeavour made to procure their liberty.

We desire to add that the authorities of the Confederate States, by exacting military service in the present civil war from subjects of Her Majesty, who have not by their own acts disentitled themselves from claiming the benefit of that character, as against the Confederate Government, appear to us not only to be wrong-doers towards the individual British subjects concerned, but also to be guilty of violating Her Majesty's neutrality in a manner inconsistent with the right of Her Majesty to have the obligations of allegiance due to her by this class of her subjects recognized by the de facto Government of the Confederate States; and we think that Her Majesty's Government would be fully justified in resenting such a violation of the rights of the British Crown.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 347.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

Doctors' Commons, September 22, 1863.

HANS TOWNS.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Hamburgh (No. 54), reporting the case of the son of a British subject named C. J. Bosdet, who claims exemption from service in the Hamburgh contingent of the Federal army; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Mr. Bosdet is legally entitled to the protection of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that Mr. Charles James Bosdet is the eldest son of a Mr. Bosdet, a British subject, who caused himself to be made a citizen of Hamburgh in 1843, who has ever since resided there, and is now residing there with all his family but his eldest son. That Mr. C. J. Bosdet was born in Hamburgh, and resided there till he was 22 years old.

1863

I am of opinion that in this state of circumstances the Government of Hamburgh did not act ultra vires in summoning him to serve as a soldier in the Hamburgh contingent of the German Federal army. He was a citizen by birth, the son of a duly naturalized and domiciled citizen. The whole question appears to have been put upon its proper footing by Viscount Palmerston, in the case of Mr. Terry; and I think the principle of that decision embraces the case of Mr. Bosdet, although he has lately left Hamburgh, and declared his intention of not returning to that city. The Decree of the Senate of Hamburgh is of course inoperative without the jurisdiction of the State, but the enforcement of the Decree within that jurisdiction, should Mr. Bosdet place himself within it, would not constitute any ground for the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 348.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 22, 1863.

NETHERLANDS.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. D. F. Duff complaining of the conduct of a notary in Holland, who is administering an estate out of which a sum of 200*l.* is due to Mr. Duff, and requesting the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in obtaining payment of this sum; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether this is a proper case for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not think that this is a proper case for the interference of Her Majesty's Government. It is true that a notary public is an officer appointed by the Government, but it is not alleged, and I have no reason to believe, that his misconduct (if he has misconducted himself) is not a matter for which he can be made responsible before the proper tribunals of justice in Holland. If indeed this be not the case,—if his character of notary exempts him from the jurisdiction of any legal tribunal, and renders him amenable only to the Government, there might perhaps be a ground for the interference which Mr. Duff requests.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 349.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 24.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 24, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Mason relative to the alleged equipment in this country of vessels of war for the service of the so-styled Confederate States, and to request that we would take the same into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have considered the draft above referred to, and we are of opinion that, with the addition of a few words which we have ventured to make in the margin, a letter in the terms of that draft may properly be sent by your Lordship to Mr. Mason.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 350.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 25.)

My Lord, Temple, September 25, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th of November last,* and to our previous Reports on the question of the restrictions imposed by the United States' Government on the trade between New York and the Bahamas, he was directed to transmit to us the correspondence which has since passed upon the subject between the British Government and that of the United States, and which is to be found partly in the printed papers recently presented to Parliament (copy of which was sent to us), and in the manuscript despatches which accompanied Mr. Layard's letter;† and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take this further correspondence into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th September, transmitting a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 15), inclosing a copy of the answer returned by the United States' Government to the further remonstrance addressed by Lord Lyons to that Government, respecting the interference exercised by the United States' Government with the trade between New York and the Bahamas.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with Lord Lyons (No. 699) that, so far as the question of cancelling the bonds is concerned, the particular grievance complained of may be considered to be now redressed.

We retain the opinion which we have expressed at great length in our former Reports, with respect to the original unlawfulness of requiring such bonds to be entered into by British merchants, and the inconsistency of such a proceeding with the Treaty obligations subsisting between Great Britain and the United States; and we continue to think that the real object and tendency of this measure is to innovate upon the established principles of international law, and to supply the deficiencies of an inadequate blockade by domestic legislation extended beyond the due limits, to the injury of the rights of neutrals under Commercial Treaties.

We may observe that, in spite of Mr. Seward's disclaimers as to this latter point, it is impossible, after reading the several Reports of Mr. Barney to Mr. Chase (that of the 23rd of June last, as well as the two at pages 32 and 39 of the printed papers, No. 14, 1863), and Mr. Seward's own note to Mr. Stuart of the 18th August, 1862 (ibid., page 31), to doubt the direct connexion between this measure and the blockade. It does not occur to us that we can add any observations to those which, upon this subject, we have already had the honour to address to your Lordship in our former Reports.

That the last replies of Mr. Chase and Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons appear to us to be insufficient and unsatisfactory, so far as they express the determination of their Government still to insist on bonds, by which the carriers of goods on shipboard for bonâ fide delivery to consignees at Nassau will be made responsible for any subsequent acts of these consignees with respect to such goods. That we still conceive the exaction of such bonds to be a denial to British subjects concerned in the trade with the Bahamas, of the rights secured to them by Treaty; and that we do not think it is any justification to say that if the subjects of the United States were to engage in the same trade, similar bonds would be exacted from them also. But that to enter into our reasons for this opinion, would be in effect to repeat the arguments set forth in our former Reports, which do not appear to us ever to have received any satisfactory answer from Mr. Seward.

We have, &c.
(Signed) WM. ATHERTON.
ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* See Reports for 1862, page 290. † North America, No. 14; Lord Lyons, Nos. 679 and 686.

1863

No. 351.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 25.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 25, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Charleston (No. 78, June 6th), inclosing, with other papers, a petition addressed to the Queen by a British subject, named Joseph Sweeney, in which he sets forth the circumstances of his arrest and imprisonment for twenty-four days in the common gaol at Marion, in South Carolina, and prays that a compensation of 50,000 dollars may be obtained for him; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that the petitioner had been in the Confederate military service; how or why he was so is wholly unexplained; but he appears to have endeavoured to conceal the fact from Her Majesty's Consul. It appears also that in the opinion of the Consul he was by his own petulant and foolish conduct, the real author of his own misfortunes.

I am of opinion that this is not a case in which Her Majesty's Government are called upon to interfere.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 352.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 25.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 25, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosure from Mr. Walker, the Acting British Consul at Charleston (No. 94, July 9), respecting the case of Mr. Thomas R. Duncan, a British subject, who is stated to have been arrested at Nashville on the 10th of last June, and after a confinement of three days in the State Penitentiary of Tennessee, to have been conducted beyond the pickets of the United States' forces, and ordered not to return on pain of being considered and dealt with as a spy; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Duncan sympathises with the cause of the Confederate States, and that he has been employed by a Confederate quartermaster to assist him in balancing his accounts, are facts which Mr. Duncan admits.

I should have liked to have known more of the circumstances in which Mr. Duncan rendered this aid (apparently so foreign to his professional engagements as an actor) to the Confederate officer.

However, accepting the story of Mr. Duncan as primâ facie true, and assuming that he has really conducted himself as he states, his case is one which calls for explanation from the Government of the United States; and a consideration of the question as to his being entitled to any indemnity should, I humbly advise, be postponed until the answer of the United States' Government be received.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 353.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 28.)

My Lord, Temple, September 28, 1863.

ITALY AND GREAT BRITAIN.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. White, Broughton, and White, requesting that a proper officer from your Lordship's Department might be instructed to attend a Commission to be held by Mr. Kinnear, on the 2nd of October, in a suit between certain parties named Udny, and to produce the documents specified by them.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that a similar application was made in January 1862, by Messrs. Bristow, in the same suit. This was referred to us: and, in conformity with the opinion expressed in our Report Mr. Hertslet, the Librarian of the Foreign Office, attended before the Commission in London appointed to collect evidence.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he had inclosed the correspondence on which our Report was founded; that, as regards the present application, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that only three out of the nine papers specifically required were found in the records of the Foreign Office; and that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose those papers, and to request that we would take the matter into our earliest consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be taken with respect to the present application of Messrs. White, Broughton, and White.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the copies of the three letters which have been found in the Foreign Office may be produced by Mr. Hertslet before the Commission on the 2nd of October, and that Mr. Hertslet may be permitted to say that the other papers are not to be found in the archives of the Foreign Office.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. J. PHILLIMORE.

No. 354.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 1.)

My Lord, Temple, September 29, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 17, August 28, 1863), relative to a claim for damages against the United States' Government, put forward by Mr. Wheelwright, as agent for the master and owner of the British schooner "Echo," which was captured, and afterwards released, by the United States' authorities; and to request that we would take this claim into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is very difficult, without seeing the Judgment of the Prize Court and the reasons by which it was supported, to advise as to the impropriety or propriety of the sentence.

As far as we can judge (which we can do but imperfectly from the papers before us), this vessel ought to have been released with damages. We do not understand why, upon any principle of international law, the absence of a Consular certificate as to the ownership of a part of the cotton (which is not contraband) should have affected the question, unless the Prize Courts at Key West (as it appears to have done in other cases) proceeded upon the old rule of international law as to enemy's property in neutral bottoms. We do not at present think that in the circumstances of this case, the neglect to appeal would be a necessary bar to the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government; but we humbly advise that, before deciding on that point, further information should be obtained, including the sentence and reasons of the Judge, and the opinion of the Counsel who conducted the case for the owners of the "Echo."

1863

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 355.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 1.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Temple, September 29, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 5th ultimo,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further papers relative to the liability to the conscription of—(1) British-born children of British parents who have become naturalized citizens of the United States during the minority of such children; and (2) the children born in the United States of British parents who have maintained their nationality; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any further observations which we might have to offer on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us that these papers call for any observations on our part additional to those which we have had the honour of embodying in our former Report. We agree in substance with the opinions expressed on this subject by Mr. Attorney-General Bates.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 356.

TURKEY.

Report on Claim of Mr. Tiano on Messrs. Bello & Piso, September 29, 1863.

[See Appendix.]

No. 357.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 3.)

TURKEY.

My Lord, Temple, September 30, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. J. C. Mc Coan, inclosing on behalf of M. Falkeisen, Russian Vice-Consul at Brussa, a copy of the Judgment recently obtained by him in the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople against Mr. Sandison, Her Majesty's Consul at Brussa, together with a copy of the plaint on which the Judgment in question was given; and with reference to the inability of the Supreme Consular Court to assist Mr. Falkeisen to obtain possession of his house at Brussa which is occupied by Mr. Sandison.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which which may properly be taken in this matter.

---

* Page 226.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the circumstances of this case, which show a clear wrong inflicted by the misconduct of Her Majesty's Consul upon the Russian Vice-Consul, which the Consular Court is, for technical reasons, unable fully to remedy, we think that the interference of your Lordship is not improperly invoked, and that it will be proper that Her Majesty's Consul should be apprised that he must without delay give up the house in question to the Russian Vice-Consul, whose equitable property it is now, by the result of the late judicial proceedings, proved to be; and that unless he do so your Lordship will be compelled to dismiss him from his office of Consul, as it is not right or expedient that one of Her Majesty's Consular Agents should be maintained in his office while he persists in wrongfully withholding from a foreigner, and the Vice-Consul of one of the States with which Her Majesty is in relations of amity, property which, according to the usage of the European residents in the Turkish dominions, and according to the terms of the express contracts between these parties themselves, undoubtedly belongs to him.

We have, &c.
For the Attorney-General and myself,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 358.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 3.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, with reference to my Report of the 24th of April,* together with the previous correspondence, the accompanying further papers respecting the case of Captain Sherwin;† and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of Mr. Seward does not appear to me satisfactory. He now justifies the arbitrary imprisonment of Captain Sherwin, on the ground that he was not a British subject of good character; and he presumes that he was not a British subject at all; that he commanded United States' merchant-vessels, which none but a United States' citizen may do; and that by taking certain passengers on board he made himself an aider and abettor of rebels.

I think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to make a further application to Mr. Seward to the following effect: that Her Majesty's Government cannot express satisfaction at any part of the reply of Mr. Seward, except that part which represents that his Government are willing to receive further evidence on the subject of the complaint of Captain Sherwin. That Her Majesty's Government have to observe that Captain Sherwin is a born British subject, born at Workington, in Cumberland; that he has never been naturalized, or taken any oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States; that he is therefore entitled to the protection of Her Majesty's Government, unless he has so misconducted himself as to have forfeited that title; that Her Majesty's Government can find no evidence of his having done so. That Mr. Seward asserts that he has commanded two American vessels, and therefore must have declared himself to be a citizen of the United States. That this turns out to be a complete error on the part of Mr. Seward, as the certificates relating to those vessels (which certificates ought to be forwarded to Mr. Seward) distinctly prove. That Mr. Seward appears to be equally in error as to the place of the purchase, and the reason of the sale of the "Dixie." It was bought according to the statement of Captain Sherwin in Philadelphia, with the intention of being sold in Havana; but this is a matter which really in no way affects the † Lord Lyons. No. 675; to Captain Sherwin, August 20; Captain Sherwin, September 19, 1863.

---

* Page 129.

1863

justice of Captain Sherwin's claim. That Captain Sherwin positively denied that he had any knowledge of the political character of the passengers whom he took upon the "Dixie." That there is no evidence to the contrary, that Her Majesty's Government are aware of. That the facts that he was detained twelve months in prison on a charge which could not be substantiated, and that he was released without trial, are uncontroverted; and that in this state of facts, Her Majesty's Government must strongly press on Mr. Seward, that to reply as he has done, that because there is a civil war in the United States, it is lawful for his Government to arrest and imprison for a whole year the subject of a foreign State upon a suspicion, which that Government is ultimately obliged to abandon, because it cannot be legally established, is a reply which Her Majesty's Government hope that Mr. Seward will, upon further consideration, be aware that no foreign State conscious of its duties towards its subjects, and capable of discharging those duties, can accept as satisfactory.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 359.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 7.)

Doctors' Commons, October 6, 1863.

My Lord,

TURKEY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the acompanying papers, as marked in the margin,* having reference to an application which had been made to Her Majesty's Consul at Trebizond, by his Russian colleague, to cause the detention, in order that she might be searched, of a steamer called the "Chesapeake," sailing under British colours, and supposed to be laden with ammunition for Circassia; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion, both as to the course which the Consul pursued on the occasion, and also upon the instructions which have been sent to him from the Embassy at Constantinople, for his guidance, should any case of a similar nature occur again.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Consul at Trebizond took a correct view of his duty; and that the instructions of Sir H. Bulwer to him are, in substance, reasonable and proper.

It is obvious, however, that the Consul should be advised to act with very great caution and discretion, even in these exceptional cases in which his assistance is invoked by the proper territorial authorities.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 360.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 9.)

Doctors' Commons, October 8, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 52, September 13, 1863) respecting a claim preferred against the Government of the United States, by Mr. George Burrows on account of his imprisonment at Memphis in 1862; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Mr. Stevens, September 6, 7, and 10; Sir H. Bulwer, No. 421, 1863.

That there can be no doubt upon the evidence of the papers before me, that Mr. George Burrows has been grossly ill-treated, and is entitled to compensation from the United States' Government. His goods were seized, his trade destroyed, his health injured, his person imprisoned without trial or hearing upon evidence, now admitted to be utterly untrustworthy, and furnished by a detective officer who is about to be tried for his general misconduct. The United States' authorities are entitled to demand reasonable proof that Mr. Burrows is a British subject. The answer of Mr. Seward that there is no fund at present voted by Congress, wherefrom to defray the costs of a just compensation for injuries inflicted by the public officers of the United States upon innocent subjects of foreign States, is, of course, not an answer that can per se be accepted by the Governments of such States, though being coupled with the intimation that such a fund will be obtained from Congress at its next sitting, it furnishes a reason for waiting a reasonable period for the payment of such compensations.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 361.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 9.)

Doctors' Commons, October 8, 1863.

My Lord,

CHILE.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Thomas Henwood, requesting your Lordship's interference to obtain for him redress for the alleged false imprisonment and cruel treatment of himself and his wife by the Chilian authorities of Sota; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether this is a case which calls for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not think this is a case which calls for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government. It is clear that the character of the Henwoods is not good. The story of Thomas Henwood is repudiated by his own referee, and the Consuls at Talcahuana and Santiago have both considered the case and declined to interfere in it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 362.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 9.)

Doctors' Commons, October 8, 1863.

My Lord,

MEXICO.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence, as marked in the margin,* respecting the seizure of the British vessel "Caroline Goodyear" at Matamoros by a French ship of war, on the ground that the arms which she is stated to have had on board were intended for the Mexicans, and that the "Caroline Goodyear" was therefore lawful prize.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon, and also whether Her Majesty's Government should take any, and if so what, steps in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Mr. Goodyear, September 1; to Lord Cowley, No. 1,088; Mr. Grey, No. 40; Admiralty, September 28, 1863.

That this vessel appears to have been seized by the French blockading force off the Boca del Rio, and to have had a cargo of arms on board ostensibly destined for the belligerents whose coasts the French force was blockading.

The vessel was, therefore, lawfully seized, and ought to have been sent for adjudication before a proper French Prize Court.

Such a Court, I presume, the French Consul at Vera Cruz has been duly commissioned to hold.

It is true that the letter of General Bec, and other documents, seem to prove that the arms were really destined for the Confederates, and such evidence may, probably, satisfy the Prize Court that the vessel ought to be released.

It is to be observed that in any case Mr. Goodyear's vessel carried contraband of war to a belligerent, and was intended to break a blockade.

I do not see any ground for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 363.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 12.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 9, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 48, September 11th) relative to the capture by an United States' cruizer, off the bar of the Rio Grande, of the British brigantine "Atlantic," and to her subsequent recapture from her prize crew; and also a letter (dated the 30th September ultimo) from Mr. Hart, the owner of the "Atlantic," requesting to be informed whether he is entitled to redress for losses sustained in consequence of this occurrence, as well as on account of the capture of this vessel on a previous occasion; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this case does not, in my opinion, require the interposition of Her Majesty's Government. The crew of the "Atlantic" have rescued themselves and their ship, and, being in a neutral port, are of course safe from belligerent operations. Whether the vessel was wrongfully or rightfully seized, much depends upon a fact which, regard being had to the close vicinity of Texas to the place of seizure, is certainly not clear at present, viz., whether she was or was not at the time in Mexican waters. That is a matter which cannot now be judicially ascertained, as the vessel has forcibly released herself from the possession of the captor. Having taken the law into her own hands, she cannot now require Her Majesty's Government to inquire into the question whether the captor acted contrary to the law or not.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 364.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 12.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 9, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th October instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 30th May last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the inclosed correspondence regarding the case of a British seaman taken out of an American vessel at the Havana, by Captain Barnard, of Her Majesty's ship "Nile," on the ground that he was a deserter from the British Navy; and also the draft of the reply which your Lordship proposes to return to the last communication upon the subject from the Spanish Minister at this Court; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether your Lordship's proposed reply is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the letter of your Lordship to the Spanish Minister is perfectly right and proper to be sent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 168.

No. 365.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 12.)

FRANCE.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 10, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures, received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Paris, on the subject of a complaint addressed to the British Embassy by Mr. Thomas Lavergne against certain judicial proceedings which had been instituted against him at Pau at the instance of his wife; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether there is anything in the statement therein contained to call for further interference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That though it is not easy to understand the reasoning which induced the Court at Pau first to admit that it had no jurisdiction in the case of a French wife married to an English husband, and then that it had authority to make the husband pay the wife 500 francs each month as alimony for neglect of marital duties, still I think there is no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government. If Mr. Lavergne chooses to marry a French wife, and take up his domicil in France, he must be subject to the law of that country upon the relations of husband and wife.

I presume also, that Mr. Lavergne may appeal from the sentence of which he complains, of which I observe it is not stated that his advocate disapproved.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 366.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 16.)

FRANCE.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 15, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Paris (No. 79), inclosing a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Nantes, in which he requested to be informed whether he would be justified in solemnizing certain marriages, in which the condition of one month's residence within the Consular district, required by the Act 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68, can only be fulfilled by one instead of by both the parties to the contract, and whether, if he is justified in performing such marriages, he may make a corresponding alteration in the Declaration marked D, required by the Act referred to; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. Consul Barrow.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer to the question of Her Majesty's Consul at Nantes must be governed by the provisions of 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68; that by sections 2 and 6 of that statute the residence of both parties for one calendar month previous to the celebration of the marriage by the Consul, whether with or without license, is rendered necessary, and that your Lordship has no power to authorize the Consul to dispense with this requisition of a residence of both parties.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 367.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Reeeived October 19.)

United States.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 19, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that your Lordship had found it necessary to give orders for the seizure of the steam-rams building at Birkenhead.

That the state of completion of one of those vessels, the arrival of a great part of the crew of the "Florida," the facility for escape, as shown by the letters of Captain Inglefield of the "Majestic," and the recent experience of the departure of the "Alabama" on a pretended trial trip, rendered this step urgently necessary.

And that he was now directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe that these vessels were (in contradiction to the opinion of Mr. Edwards, to which we naturally gave great weight in a former Report) built for the Confederates and their agent, Captain Bullock; that they were bought nominally for the Pasha of Egypt by M. Bravay, a French merchant; that the Pasha of Egypt at once declined to have anything to do with them; that, in spite of this refusal to purchase the vessels, their equipment and fittings were hurried on with unusual speed; that as the time approached when they would be ready for sea a great number of men forming part of the crew of the "Florida" arrived at Liverpool; that M. Bravay refused to sell the vessels to the British Government, and maintained that he was bound to send them to the Pasha of Egypt, who had positively refused to take them.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship desired him to call our particular attention to the following questions, as being of urgent importance at the present moment:—

1st. The vessels being, as stated, under seizure and in possession of the officers of the Customs, what answer should be given to parties who should inquire under what authority the seizures have been made? whether the answer should be "Under the Foreign Enlistment Act," or more generally, "Under the authority of the Commissioners of Customs acting under the orders of Her Majesty's Government," or "Under the orders of the Board of Treasury," or what other answer? And further, what parties are to be considered entitled to make inquiry and to receive an answer?

2ndly. Whether the vessels, being now under seizure and in charge of the Customs supported by a force of Marines, the workmen employed by Messrs. Laird should be allowed, if those gentlemen desire it, to continue on board and proceed with the completion of the vessels.

That Messrs. Laird, as we should see by their letter of Thursday previously to the seizure being actually effected, acquiesced in Custom-house officers being placed on board one of the vessels with authority to seize her under certain circumstances, which circumstances have since occurred, and their subsequent letter of the 9th instant, since the seizure was effected, would appear to imply a similar acquiescence. Under these circumstances, they would seem to a certain extent, to have been assenting parties to the seizure, and may, perhaps, be thereby precluded from maintaining an action against the Government, if the result of the proceedings to be hereafter taken for the condemnation of the vessels to the Crown should not uphold the seizure, although if the workmen were removed and the work of completion interrupted the case might be otherwise.

3rdly. What steps should now be taken for maintaining the seizure and securing condemnation?

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these matters into our consideration without delay, and report our opinion upon the several points stated by him, and generally on the whole case, at our earliest convenience.

And that we should judge whether it might not be desirable to report separately upon the first and second points, which would seem more especially to call for immediate attention.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion, with respect to the first question submitted to us, that the answer to parties who have a right to make the inquiry should be, that the seizure has been made by the orders of Her Majesty's Government, under the authority of the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

With respect to the second question, we are of opinion that it would be expedient to allow the workmen of Messrs. Laird to continue on board and proceed with the completion of the vessels, taking care to preserve evidence of the exact condition of the vessels at the time of seizure, and also letting it be understood by Messrs. Laird that whatever they may do is upon their own responsibility, and that Her Majesty's Government are not to be regarded as giving any sanction thereto, which may prevent them from offering evidence hereafter of anything which may be so done.

With respect to the third question, we are of opinion that the Solicitor to the Customs should be instructed forthwith to obtain the utmost amount of legal evidence, both as to the general facts, such as were proved in the case of the "Alexandra," and as to the particular circumstances of these vessels, which must of course be appraised before the filing of the information in the usual manner.

Attention should be particularly directed to the proof of those matters of which the Government have received information from their agents abroad, and especially from Consul Colquhoun and Captain Hore, for which purpose it may not improbably be necessary that a Commission should issue for the examination of witnesses in Egypt, France, and elsewhere.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since preparing this Report we have received Mr. Hammond's letter bearing date the 15th instant, and its inclosures, with reference to which we propose to make a further Report.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 368.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 19.)

United States.

Lincoln's Inn, October 19, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters and their inclosures from the Admiralty and Colonial Office, dated respectively the 26th and 29th September ultimo, relative to the proceedings at the Cape of Good Hope of the Confederate vessels-of-war "Georgia," "Alabama," and her reputed tender "Tuscaloosa;" and to request that we would take the various questions raised in these papers, and especially the opinion given by the Acting Attorney-General of that Colony with regard to the latter vessel, into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to make thereupon.

1863

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd October instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 30th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 29th September ultimo, from Mr. Adams, relative to the proceedings of the "Alabama" off the Cape of Good Hope, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with papers on this subject then before us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report:—

That, so far as relates to the capture of the "Sea Bride" made by the "Alabama," it appears, as we understand the evidence, to have been effected beyond the distance of three miles from the shore; and as we have already had the honour to report to your Lordship, that distance must be accepted as the limit of territorial jurisdiction according to the present rule of international law upon that subject. It appears, however, that this prize, very soon after her capture, was brought within the distance of two miles from the shore; and as this was contrary to Her Majesty's orders, it might have afforded just grounds (if the apology of Captain Semmes for this improper act, which he ascribed to inadvertence, had not been accepted by Sir Philip Wodehouse) for the interference of the authorities of the Cape Colony upon the principles which we are about to explain.

Secondly, with respect to the "Alabama" herself, we are clearly of opinion that neither the Governor nor any other authority at the Cape could exercise any jurisdiction over her, and that, whatever was her previous history, they were bound to treat her as a ship-of-war belonging to a belligerent Power.

Upon the third point raised with regard to the vessel called the "Tuscaloosa," we are not able to agree with the opinion expressed by the Attorney-General of the Cape Colony, that she had ceased to have the character of a prize captured by the "Alabama" merely because she was, at the time of her being brought within British waters, armed with two small guns, in charge of an officer, and manned with a crew of ten men from the "Alabama," and used as a tender to that vessel, under the authority of Captain Semmes.

It would appear that the "Tuscaloosa" is a barque of 500 tons, captured by the "Alabama" off the coast of Brazil on the 21st of June last, and brought into Simon's Bay on or before the 7th of August, with her original cargo of wool (itself, as well as the vessel, prize) still on board, and with nothing to give her a warlike character (so far as appears from the papers before us) except the circumstances already noticed.

We therefore do not feel called upon, in the circumstances of this case, to enter into the question whether, in the case of a vessel duly commissioned as a ship of war, after being made prize by a belligerent Government, without being first brought infra præsidia or condemned by a Court of Prize, the character of prize, within the meaning of Her Majesty's Orders, would or would not be merged in that of a national ship of war. It is enough to say that the citation from Mr. Wheaton's Book by the Colonial Attorney-General does not appear to us to have any direct bearing upon this question.

Connected with this subject is the question as to the cargoes of captured vessels, which is noticed at the end of Sir Philip Wodehouse's despatch of the 19th August last. We think that, according to the true interpretation of Her Majesty's Orders, they apply as much to prize cargoes of every kind which may be brought by any armed ships or privateers of either belligerent into British waters as to the captured vessels themselves. They do not, however, apply to any articles which may have formed part of any such cargoes, if brought within British jurisdiction, not by armed ships or privateers of either belligerent, but by other persons who may have acquired or may claim property in them by reason of any dealings with the captors.

We think it right to observe that the third reason alleged by the Colonial Attorney-General for his opinion assumes (though the fact had not been made the subject of any inquiry) that "no means existed for determining whether the ship had or had not been judicially condemned in a Court competent of jurisdiction;" and the proposition that, "admitting her to have been captured by a ship of war of the Confederate States, she was entitled to refer Her Majesty's Government, in case of any dispute, to the Court of her States, in order to satisfy it as to her real character," appears to us to be at variance with Her Majesty's undoubted right to determine, within her own territory, whether her own orders, made in vindication of her own neutrality, have been violated or not.

The question remains, what course ought to have been taken by the authorities at the Cape, first, in order to ascertain whether this vessel was, as alleged by the United States' Consul, an uncondemned prize, brought within British waters in violation of Her Majesty's neutrality; and secondly, what ought to have been done if such had appeared to be really the fact? We think that the allegations of the United States' Consul ought to have been brought to the knowledge of Captain Semmes, while the "Tuscaloosa" was still within British waters; and that he should have been requested to state whether he did or did not admit the facts to be as alleged. He should also have been called upon (unless the facts were admitted) to produce the "Tuscaloosa's" papers. If the result of these inquiries had been to prove that the vessel was really an uncondemned prize, brought into British waters in violation of Her Majesty's orders made for the purpose of maintaining her neutrality, it would, we think, deserve very serious consideration whether the mode of proceeding in such circumstances, most consistent with Her Majesty's dignity and most proper for the vindication of her territorial rights, would not have been to prohibit the exercise of any further control over the "Tuscaloosa" by the captors; and to retain that vessel under Her Majesty's control and jurisdiction until properly reclaimed by her original owners.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 369.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 20.)

AUSTRIA.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 19, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna, relative to a question raised by the Registrar of Wills and Deeds at Dublin as to the validity of an affidavit taken before the Secretary of Embassy at Vienna; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to understand upon what grounds the Irish Registrar refused to register this deed.

It was clearly competent to the Secretary of the Embassy at Vienna to administer the oath in question, under the provisions of 18 & 19 Vict., cap. 42; and we think that an inquiry should be made through the proper channel, having for its object to ascertain why the Registrar declined to acknowledge the validity of an oath taken before the Secretary of the Embassy.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 370.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 21.)

UNITED STATES.

Lincoln's Inn, October 21, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th October instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 10th instant on the subject of the iron-clads under seizure at Liverpool, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith further correspondence respecting those vessels to be considered with the other papers then before us.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's second letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to send us, confidentially, a copy of a despatch received from Her Majesty's Consul-General in Egypt respecting M. Bravay's communications with the Viceroy of Egypt on the subject of the iron-clads.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, transmitting a copy of a letter dated 19th October instant from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing copies of two letters from Messrs. Laird, respecting the seizure of these vessels, and requesting to be allowed to take one of them on a trial trip. He was also pleased to inclose, for our complete information, in regard to what has passed with reference to these vessels, some further correspondence with the Board of Treasury.*

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's second letter of the 19th instant, transmitting a further paper relative to the iron-clads at Liverpool.†

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant stating that, with reference to his letter of the 19th instant, inclosing a letter from the Treasury, with the letters of Messrs. Laird therein referred to, in which they apply for permission to make a trial trip with one of the iron-clads now under seizure, and without the presence on board of a guard to ensure her being brought back into port, he was to transmit to us a draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes to address to the Treasury in reply, and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's second letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us, with reference to the latter part of our Report of the 19th instant, that your Lordship will be ready at once, and at any future time, to require the presence in England of Mr. William Grey, Secretary of Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, and of Captain Hore, if we should wish to have any personal communication with them. That as regards Mr. Colquhoun, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, your Lordship would not wish to bring him over to England from Egypt until the trial comes on, and therefore if the evidence to be obtained from Egypt is desired before that time, a Commission might be sent. That there is a Legal Vice-Consul in Egypt, Mr. Albany Fonblanque, who might, if necessary, be employed on such a Commission, if Mr. Colquhoun should be incapacitated as a witness from being so.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's third letter of the 20th instant, transmitting a copy of a letter from Messrs. Townshend and Jackson, of Birkenhead, to the Solicitor of the Treasury, respecting the exertions made by the builders to complete one of those vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with reference to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, and to the papers previously sent to us, we wish to take this opportunity of observing that Her Majesty's Government appear to be in a position to justify the seizure of these vessels by sufficient evidence that they were originally intended for the Confederate States, and, if this fact should be established, we think it will be for the Messrs. Laird or M. Bravay to show, if they can, that there was such a real and bonâ fide transfer of the original contract to Mr. Bravay as gave him an independent control over the vessels and their destination; in which case the further question would arise whether M. Bravay, in fitting them out at Liverpool, had a fixed intention that they should be employed in the Confederate service. This question depending, as it in great measure may, upon moral and circumstantial evidence, makes it important to exclude, if possible, the supposition, which Mr. Colquhoun's letter of the 6th October still leaves in some degree open, that M. Bravay may really have contemplated a sale of these vessels to the Turkish, through the Egyptian Government, and it is very desirable that the communications between M. Bravay and the Pasha of Egypt should be brought to some definite conclusion, with respect to which our present information is not satisfactory, having regard more especially to the statement that the Pasha desired the designs of the vessels to be sent out to him for inspection.

With respect to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, and the inclosed draft of your Lordship's proposed letter to Messrs. Laird, we are of opinon that the latter is right and proper to be sent. It might have been possible, consistently with the principle upon which Messrs. Laird are permitted to remain on board and complete the vessels, to allow a trial trip under sufficient precautions, without prejudice to the title of the Crown by seizure, and that course might have been recommended, if regard were principally paid to the risk of damages in the event of the seizure not being upheld. But, in all the circumstances of the case, we are not prepared to express any dissent from the conclusion at which your Lordship appears to have arrived.

With regard to Mr. Hammond's second letter of the 20th instant the communication therein contained had better in our opinion be reserved for future consideration, together with the whole subject of the evidence to be produced in support of the recent seizure.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 371.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 22.)

UNITED STATES.

Lincoln's Inn, October 21, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, for our information, a despatch which had been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 82, September 28, 1863), inclosing a copy of a note which had been addressed to him by Mr. Seward, having special reference to the case of the steamer "Emma," but containing, at the same time, a satisfactory assurance that no captured neutral vessel will hereafter be appropriated by the United States' Government before condemnation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter of Mr. Seward is quite satisfactory upon this important subject and in harmony with the practice of our own Prize Courts.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 372.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 24.)

TURKEY.

Doctors' Commons, October 24, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter dated the 10th October instant, from the Inland Revenue Office, respecting the circumstances under which the Ottoman Consul-General at Manchester claims to be exempted from the payment of assessed taxes. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a memorandum which has been drawn up at the Foreign Office bearing upon the subject; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in the matter.

---

* Treasury, October 15; to Treasury, October 16.

† Sir A. Paget, No. 218, October 15.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th October, transmitting three volumes of MS. correspondence (Turkey 1815, 1819, and 1820: Nos. 89, 93, and 96) containing the King's Advocate's Reports, and other papers relating to the claims of the Ottoman Consul-General at Manchester to exemption from payment of assessed taxes.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That unquestionably the privilege claimed by the Consul of the Porte is not inherent in his office, which is not of a diplomatic character, and does not enjoy the immunities incident to offices of that character. But the claim in this instance is put forward as founded upon the express provisions of a Treaty; and upon the consideration of this claim three questions appear to arise: First, was it within the competence of the Crown, without the sanction of Parliament, to contract such an obligation by Treaty? Secondly, did the original Treaty profess and intend to confer the immunity which is claimed? Thirdly, has this Treaty been abrogated by any subsequent Convention? With respect to the first and second questions, they appear to have already received an affirmative answer from His Majesty's Law Officers. For it appears that on the 14th of February, 1820, His Majesty's Government were satisfied, upon the Report of the Law Officers (who, or at least one of them, His Majesty's Advocate, had previously entertained a different opinion), that the Consul of the Ottoman Porte was entitled to the privilege of exemption from the payment of taxes; and I assume (and if there be any doubt as to this point, it should be clearly ascertained) that as a matter of fact this privilege has been accorded to him up to the present time. With respect to the third question, I am of opinion that the provisions contained in the VIIIth Article of the Treaty of Dardanelles (5th of January, 1809) are not abrogated by any provisions in the subsequent Treaties of Balta Liman (16th August, ~~1858~~) and Kanlidja (29th April, 1861). 1838

Upon the whole question, I do not dissent from the opinion expressed by the former Law Officers. It is certainly not competent to the Crown, without the sanction of Parliament, to make Treaties of Reciprocity, the execution of which would infringe the Common or Statute Law of the land; but this is not, I think, a Treaty of that kind. It is true that Treaties of this kind make the country with which they are made pro tanto the lawgiver to this country, and may give rise—though not necessarily I think—to awkward questions relating to the favoured nation clause with other States. Nevertheless, if it be satisfactorily proved that the Consuls of Her Majesty in Turkey are now enjoying the immunity which the Ottoman Consul now claims, I do not see how, consistently with good faith, it can be denied to him.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 373.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 24, 1863.

My Lord,

Peru.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 18th ultimo upon the statement of Her Majesty's Government respecting the claims of Mr. Melville White, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a translation of the counter-statement on behalf of the Peruvian Government, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship, at our early convenience, with our opinion, whether it contains anything which calls for a reply on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and if so, what that reply should be.

A printed copy of the statement of Her Majesty's Government was sent therewith in case we should wish to refer to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us that the statement of the Peruvian Government requires any reply on the part of Her Majesty's Government. It seems to us to admit that the Peruvian Government proceeded throughout upon mere hearsay of the loosest and most frivolous character, and to contain no real answer to any of the material facts on which Captain M. White has founded his claim for compensation.

It manifestly misrepresents the tenor and effect of the final sentence in Captain White's case; but on this point that document (which is printed in the Appendix to the case of Her Majesty's Government) will speak for itself.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 374.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 26, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters from the Admiralty inclosing copies of Reports (dated the 24th October instant) received from Captain Inglefield on the question as to allowing the workmen to continue on board the iron-clads which have been seized at Birkenhead, and to request that we would take the same into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion, at our early convenience, with reference to the course which should be adopted in respect to the ill-feeling displayed by the workmen in Messrs. Laird's yard, as stated in these Reports.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed a draft of a letter which had that day been addressed to the Admiralty, from which we should see that your Lordship has expressed your willingness to be guided by Captain Inglefield's opinion as to the continuance of the work on these vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer returned to the Admiralty by your Lordship appears to us to be quite proper, and in accordance with our former advice.

With respect to the ill-feeling displayed by the workmen in Messrs. Laird's yard, it does not appear to us that any measure is necessary to be taken, beyond those precautions against any outbreak, which (as we presume), the authorities upon the spot must be prepared and able to take.

So far as relates to any attempt to retake possession of the vessel, we collect, that Captain Inglefield is confident of his means of preventing such an attempt, if made; and if any other breach of the peace should be attempted (which we hardly anticipate), we think it must be dealt with by the civil authorities in the usual way.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 375.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 26, 1863.

My Lord,

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, with reference to his letter of the 24th instant, a copy of a further letter from the Admiralty, together with a copy of the letter from Captain Inglefield of Her Majesty's ship "Majestic" therein referred to, by which we should see that serious apprehensions are entertained lest an attempt should be made to run away with one or both of the iron-clads now under seizure at Birkenhead, and to request that we would take this matter into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion at our earliest convenience as to the course which under the circumstances set forth in the inclosed papers should be adopted.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he, at the same time, inclosed a letter from the Treasury, covering a further application from Messrs. Laird to be allowed to make a trial trip with the iron-clad No. 1; and that your Lordship would be glad to have our opinion on this point also.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is of course for Her Majesty's Government to exercise their discretion as to the existence of sufficient practical reasons for displacing the workmen and removing these vessels from their present position at Birkenhead, a course which we should not have recommended except in circumstances of an extraordinary character.

Assuming, however, that Her Majesty's Government are satisfied of the existence of such reasons, we are of opinion that it is competent to them to direct those vessels to be detained in any place which the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs may think fit to order under sec. 223 of 16 and 17 Vict. cap. 107 (the Customs Law Consolidation Act), which is incorporated by reference into the Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo. III, cap. 69, sec. 7.* Before doing so, however, or at least as nearly at the same time as possible, we think that such a notice, in writing, of the seizure and of the grounds thereof as is contemplated by section 226 of the same statute should be given (if this has not already been done), by the seizing officer, to Messrs. Laird, and also by letter, to be sent in due course by post, to M. Bravay. With respect to Messrs. Laird's renewed application for a trial trip, we presume that your Lordship sees no reason, especially considering the circumstances disclosed by Captain Inglefield's letter, to alter your former determination; and, therefore, that the answer to that application will be in the negative.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 376.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 26.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 26, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence† respecting a screw-steamer vessel called the "Canton" which is in course of construction in the yard of Messrs. Thomson at Glasgow, and which is alleged to be intended for the service of the so-styled Confederate States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should see from the Report of the Collector of Customs at Glasgow, that the vessel in question is stated to be building for Mr. Pembroke of Austin Friars, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be proper to ask Mr. Pembroke whether he will state for what purpose the vessel is being constructed.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 24th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of that day's date he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further letter and its inclosures respecting the case of the "Canton."*

---

* The ground stated should be, "a violation of the seventh section of the Foreign Enlistment Act."—R. P. (for self and colleagues).

† Mr. Adams, October 17; to Treasury and Home Office, October 19; to Mr. Adams, October 19; to Admiralty, October 19; Treasury, October 22; Admiralty, October 23.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the description of this vessel given in Mr. Underwood's letter of the 15th instant is such as to make it clearly proper that Her Majesty's Government should use all legitimate means to ascertain her true character and destination; and as it is stated by Mr. Hart in his letter of the 23rd instant to Sir Archibald Alison, that Mr. Thomson "appears quite ready to show the building contract, and give any information of which he is possessed," it appears to us to be, perhaps, desirable that all the informotion which Mr. Thomson is able and willing to give, should be obtained before any application is made to Mr. Pembroke. Subject however to this remark, we see no objection to the the course proposed by your Lordship of inquiring from Mr. Pembroke whether he is willing to state for what purpose this vessel is being constructed.

We take notice that Mr. Underwood refers to the Scotch law as affording greater facilities than the English for conducting a preliminary investigation into cases of this kind, and as authorizing "an inquiry and interrogation under oath of the party immediately implicated." Your Lordship will doubtless be advised upon this and all other points arising in cases of the same kind in Scotland by the proper Law Officers of the Crown for that part of the United Kingdom.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 377.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 27.)

Foreign Office, October 26, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 11th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 180, September 26, 1863), inclosing copies of the proceedings in the United States' Prize Court in the case of the "Peterhoff," and was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the proceedings in this case, and have the honour to report—

That a perusal of the evidence does not induce us to change the opinion which we have had the honour to express, as to the inexpediency of any official intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government in the present stage of this case.

The evidence is certainly not "clearly and unequivocally inadequate to sustain the sentence," but on the contrary, in various particulars tends to sustain it; such as the false swearing of the master, or at least the palpable equivocation and disingenuousness of his evidence, the throwing overboard of papers, the contents of which are said to be unknown, at the moment of capture; the incredible and conflicting suggestions (in the absence of a true explanation which the claimants might have obtained) as to their contents, and the character of certain portions of the cargo, to say nothing of the letter of Messrs. Bennett and Wake (pages 139, 151, of printed evidence) which we presume was made evidence in the cause.

We have not, however, before us any Judgment in extenso, but little more than a formal Decree of the Judge of the Prize Court.

We cannot, therefore, tell with certainty upon what particular portions of the evidence, or what specific facts, he founded that Decree.

---

* Home Office, October 24, 1863.

We presume, however, that a case of so much importance and so elaborately argued, has been, or will be, accompanied at some time or other by a further and more reasoned Judgment. Therefore, without expressing any positive opinion that the sentence was unquestionably right, we are clearly of opinion that it is not one which Her Majesty's Government ought to make the subject of an exceptional official intervention with the Executive of the United States, but for which the claimants, who consider themselves aggrieved, should resort to the usual and proper remedy of an appeal to the Supreme Court.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 378.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 27.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 26, 1863.

MEXICO.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from the British Vice-Consul at Vera Cruz (No. 26, September 7th), inclosing a notification by the Commander-in-chief of the French naval forces, announcing the blockade on the 6th ultimo of the coast of the Gulf of Mexico by the forces under his command, and to request that if I should consider this notification to be sufficient, I would draw up and transmit to your Lordship a form of notice for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the notification of the Commander-in-chief of the French naval forces appears to me to be sufficient, and I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship a form of notification for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 378.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, October 27, 1863.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Vera Cruz a notification addressed to him by the Commander-in-chief of the French naval forces in the Gulf of Mexico, and dated the 5th of September, 1863, of the blockade by the French naval forces on and from the 6th of September, 1863, of the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, with the exception of Tampico, Vera Cruz, Alvarado, Goatzacoalcos, Tabasco, and Carmen. The following is the official communication received by Earl Russell:—

[Here insert a verbatim copy of the original notification; then a correct translation of the same.]

R. J. P.

No. 379.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 27, 1863.

UNITED STATES AND BRAZIL.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the Admiralty, together with two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro,* respecting the threatened seizure by Federal cruizers of three vessels, the "Abigail," "Fanny Crenshaw," and "Ann E. Grant," which were originally the property of persons residing in the so-called Confederate States, but which have since been sold by public auction in pursuance of a sentence passed by the Brazilian Law Courts, and purchased by Messrs. Phipps, Brothers, and Co., British merchants at Rio de Janeiro, on account of Mr. Barten Fletcher Allen, of Liverpool; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

---

* Admiralty, October 5; Consul Westwood, No. 29, August 22; and No. 30, September 7, 1863.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, transmitting to us a further despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro (No. 34, September 23 1863) relative to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we assume from the papers before us, and especially the letter of the 14th September, 1863, to the Marquis d'Abrantes (Inclosure 3 in No. 34), that these vessels were, in pursuance of a sentence of the Brazilian Court of Admiralty, rightly exercising its jurisdiction over the subject matter, duly sold and conveyed to the British owners, and, as far as we are able upon the evidence before us to form an opinion, the title of these persons to the vessels in question appears to be perfectly valid and good, according to the recognized principles of public and private law.

With respect to the threatened seizure of these vessels by the Federal cruizers, and the attempt to seize the "Gracie" by the Federal steamer "Mohican," and the course which should be pursued in such circumstances by Her Majesty's ships and by Her Majesty's Government, we have to observe as follows:—

First, apart from any consideration relating to the unneutral use of the neutral port by the United States' ships, it is the undoubted right of the belligerent to seize upon the high seas, and bring in for adjudication, ships which, having belonged to his enemy at the breaking out of the war, have been transferred to a neutral. It is within the legitimate province of the Prize Court to inquire into the validity of the title to the vessels so transferred.

In the last war our Prize Court condemned many Russian vessels transferred to Danish subjects after the breaking out of the war, in circumstances which led to the judicial conclusion that there had been no bonâ fide transfer of the vessels.

The evidence in the present case ought (as we assume, and as there is every reason to believe) to induce a Prize Court to arrive at an opposite conclusion; but, nevertheless, the right of the belligerent to seize, and of the Prize Court to inquire and adjudicate, remains.

We therefore think that Her Majesty's ships ought not to convoy these vessels, or to interfere upon the high seas with the exercise of this belligerent right by the United States' ships.

But though the general principles of international law necessarily lead us to this opinion, we are equally clear in our opinion that the particular circumstances of this case require Her Majesty's Government to make them the subject of a special and immediate communication to the Government at Washington, and more especially upon the two following grounds:—

1. The tenor and nature of the claim put forth by General Webb (letter to Her Majesty's Consul Westwood, 27th August, 1863, Inclosure No. 2 in Consul Westwood's despatch), namely, that all the property of the Confederates became, at the breaking out of the war, ipso facto, forfeited to the United States; a doctrine wholly inconsistent with general principles of law, and also with the recognition of the status of belligerent universally accorded both to the Confederates and the United States, and leading to consequences, of which the present case is an example, not to be tolerated by neutral States.

2. The unneutral use of the neutral Brazilian waters.

We have in various former Reports had the honour to express our opinion upon this subject.

The unlawfulness of lying in wait in a neutral port for a belligerent vessel about to sail from that port is unquestionable, and has not indeed, we believe, been denied by the United States' Government.

In the present case it calls for a double remonstrance; first, to the Brazilian, and secondly, to the United States' Government.

It appears to us that the letter of Her Majesty's Consul, Mr. Westwood, to the Marquis d'Abrantes upon this part of the case was extremely proper.

We are not in a condition to offer any opinion upon the subject of the last civil embargo imposed by the Brazilian authorities upon these vessels.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 380.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 28.)

Doctors' Commons, October 27, 1863.

My Lord,

ITALY.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Leghorn, in answer to one addressed to him* (the draft of which was therewith inclosed), instructing him to inform your Lordship whether it would not be for the convenience of British subjects at Florence that the British Vice-Consul in that city should be furnished with a warrant under the hand of Her Majesty's Secretary of State, in order to enable him to celebrate marriages in accordance with the provisions of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87 (?)

Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose a memorial from the British residents at Florence, praying that the arrangement in question may be carried into effect, and stated that we should see that Mr. Consul Macbean, while admitting that this arrangement might be convenient, raises a doubt as to whether the present facilities in regard to the residence of the contracting parties which he states are afforded by the marriage being performed at the British Consulate might not be affected if the marriage were performed by the British Vice-Consul at Florence, who has no Consular jusisdiction; whereas the whole of Tuscany is assumed to come within Mr. Macbean's Consular district.

Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this point into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this point into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if Mr. Proby were to receive the warrant in question, he would be a Vice-Consul authorized by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to solemnize marriages in a place where there was no Consul resident, and the Vice-Consul's marriage district would be limited to the place of his residence.

But inasmuch as there is a Consul at Leghorn whose marriage district now extends, it is said, to the whole of the ancient province of Tuscany, in the limits of which Florence, the particular place of the Vice-Consul's residence, is included, a question of some nicety as to the construction of the 2nd and 19th sections of the statute (12th and 13th Vict. cap. 68) taken together would arise, namely, whether the place allotted by warrant to the Vice-Consul was or was not thereby exempted from the district of the Consul within which it had been, not by virtue of, but in the absence of, any specific direction (under the terms of section 19 of the statute), previously included.

I incline to the opinion that such would be the consequence of granting the warrant to the Vice-Consul, and that the Consul's marriage district would in this case be curtailed of Florence. If so, and the warrant were granted to the Vice-Consul, parties, both or one of whom had been resident at Florence a month before the marriage could not any longer, as now, be married at Leghorn, because by the 2nd section of the statute, both parties must have dwelt for one calendar month in the district of the Consul who marries them.

Whether any practical inconvenience would follow from such a consequence, I can of course form no opinion.

I presume that since the incorporation of Tuscany into the Kingdom of Italy no alteration has been made in the appointment of the Consul.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] To Consul Macbean, No. 9, September 12, 1863; Consul Macbean, No. 19, October 14, 1863.

No. 381.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 28, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Adams, and which is founded on the opinion contained in our Report of the 19th instant,* on matters connected with the proceedings of the Confederate steamer "Alabama" at the Cape of Good Hope; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter is right and proper to be sent. It does not occur to us to make any observations upon the case to which it refers beyond those which we have had the honour of submitting to your Lordship in our former Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 382.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 28, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day's date (upon which we have made a separate Report), he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further papers† relative to the case of the "Alabama," for our consideration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these further papers, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear from the letter of Admiral Walker (17th September, 1863, No. 214), which we think ourselves bound to accept as containing the true history, that Captain Semmes has committed any breach of Her Majesty's Proclamation of Neutrality since the occasion referred to in our last Report.

The "Sea Bride" put into Saldanha Bay from stress of weather, and therefore under a necessity acknowledged by international law to constitute an exceptional case. The sale of the "Sea Bride" at Angra Pequena, which is not, we believe, in Her Majesty's dominions, though to a subject of Her Majesty, was not a breach of neutrality.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 383.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 31.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 31, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to onr Report of the 12th of May last,‡ respecting the case of the "Labuan," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our information, the accompanying despatch,

---

[*] Page 271.

[†] Admiralty, October 21, 1863.

[‡] Page 152.

1863

and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 81, September 28, 1863), reporting the steps which he has taken in consequence of a delay in prosecuting to a decision before the Prize Court the question of damages and costs in the case of this vessel.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, transmitting to us a further despatch from Mr. Stuart respecting the "Labuan" (No. 85, October 2, 1863).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the steps taken by Mr. Stuart to obtain a decision in the matter of the costs and damages of the "Labuan" appear to us to be perfectly proper and right.

We agree with him in thinking that the proceeding on the part of the United States' Attorney-General is at variance with the promise of Mr. Seward; and we also think that it is not in accordance with the usual practice of Prize Courts. According to that practice, as we have already observed in former Reports, evidence might properly be admitted before Commissioners appointed by the Court, limited to the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damages really sustained; but, after sentence upon the merits in the principal cause, to allow fresh evidence to be admitted as to the principle and law of the case (to which alone, it would appear to us, the evidence suggested by the United States' Attorney-General would apply) is, we believe, without precedent in the practice of Prize Courts in England or America, and fraught, in the present case, with manifest injustice.

It must be remembered that Her Majesty's Government have throughout maintained the position that the peculiar circumstances of this case rendered it an affair between the two Governments, and that it was pointed out to the United States' Government that to refer the case to the Prize Court would be attended with no other consequences than an increase of costs and expenses, and the infliction of further injury of delay in redress to the claimant.

We certainly cannot advise your Lordship that the Government ought to take any steps as to obtaining evidence to rebut that which it is now proposed to adduce. We think that Lord Lyons should apprise Mr. Seward that, though the question of the amount of damages may be open to further evidence, Her Majesty's Government consider that the principle is not open to controversy; that, therefore, the evidence which it is proposed to adduce appears to them wholly irrelevant; and that they much regret, after all that has passed, the additional injury of further delay now inflicted upon the claimants.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 384.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 31.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 31, 1863.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres (Nos. 78 and 84), upon the subject of a project of law which has been recently submitted to the Argentine Congress, by which all persons born within the Confederation are declared to be Argentine citizens, whatever may be the nationality of their parents; and Mr. Hammond stated that we should perceive from the former papers therewith transmitted to us that the question of the nationality of the children of foreigners has been previously raised in Buenos Ayres, in the Argentine Confederation, and in the Republics of Central America, and that it has been generally settled by an amicable arrangement, by which the children of British parents have, at all events, been exempted from military service. That, as regards the Argentine Republic, a law was passed in 1857, before the incorporation of Buenos Ayres into the Confederation, which granted to the children of foreigners the privilege of choosing their nationality at a certain age. That by the provisions of the project of law, this privilege would be abolished, and the son of an Englishman born within the Argentine Republic would be liable to be drawn for military service.

Mr. Hammond was therefore to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon this measure of the Argentine Government, and as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue with the view of relieving, as far as possible, the children of British subjects from the operation of such a law.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we abstain from entering upon any discussion of the general principles applicable to these cases of double allegiance, as they appear to have been fully discussed in the former Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown.

That with respect to the particular case before us, we are of opinion that Mr. Doria has protested, on proper grounds, against the retrospective application of such a law as that in question to children of British fathers.

We observe that Mr. Thornton, in his letter of the 8th of October, suggests that there are not, in fact, any adult persons of this class in the Argentine dominions who have availed themselves of the option given to them by the Law of 1857, to elect to be deemed British and not Argentine subjects. But still (assuming this to be so) there may be, and probably are, others still in their minority whose time for making their election under that law has not yet arrived.

We are not prepared, however, to advise your Lordship that even this part of the law is ultra vires of the Argentine Confederation: it cannot be put higher than a breach of comity towards Great Britain. With regard to the future operation of the law, we have no doubt that it was competent to the Argentine Republic to pass the law in question, though the previous state of the law, giving the option to the children of British fathers, was certainly preferable; and we think it would be desirable to endeavour to obtain, by renewed negotiation, the restoration of that state of the law.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 385.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 6.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 4, 1863.

ECUADOR.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th October ultimo, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 13th April last,* respecting Mrs. Abitbol's claim upon the Government of Ecuador, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires in Ecuador, (No. 28), stating that the Government of the Republic refuse to entertain Mrs. Abitbol's claim on the ground that the limit of time for the conversion of Columbian bonds fixed by the Law of the 5th of February, 1846, and subsequently extended by a Decree of the 18th of December, 1848, constitutes a bar to the recognition of any such bonds not converted within the prescribed period; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this despatch, together with the previous papers, into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the course which Her Majesty's Government should now pursue in this matter, and whether they would be justified in continuing to claim the payment of the bonds held by Mrs. Abitbol, as advised in my previous Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of the Government of Ecuador to the claim of Mrs. Abitbol is not satisfactory. Apart from the consideration of the particular law referred to, the obligation of this State to pay its quota of the debt contracted by the original Republic of Columbia, in which it was incorporated at the time when the debt was contracted, appears not to be directly controverted.

---

* Page 111.

1863

It is manifest, however, that this proposition of public law has an important bearing upon the case of Mrs. Abitbol. It is founded upon reason and justice, and supported by the highest authorities upon international law. "Contra autem evenit," says Grotius, "ut quæ una civitas dividatur aut consensu mutuo aut vi bellicâ . . . . . Quod cum sit plura pro uno existient summa imperia, cum suo jure in partes singulas. Si quid autem commune fuerit, id aut communiter est administrandum, aut pro ratis portionibus dividendum."

Not less applicable are the modern but high authorities of Mr. Chancellor Kent and Mr. Justice Story. "If a State should be divided," says the former, "in respect of territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired: and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement, those rights are to be enjoyed, and those obligations fulfilled by all the parts in common." So Mr. Justice Story:—"It has been asserted as a principle of the common law that the division of an Empire creates no forfeiture of previously vested rights of property; and this principle is equally consonant with the common sense of mankind and the maxims of eternal justice."

The main proposition being so certain, it remains to consider whether one of these component States can put a bar to the satisfaction of a just debt by fixing a period of time within which it must be demanded. I offer no positive opinion with respect to the justice of such a law in its operation upon the subjects of that State. It may be admitted, so far as this case is concerned, that it is absolutely, whether morally or not, competent to the State so to extinguish vested rights of property in its own citizens. But in the case of a debt due to a foreign State or subject, I am not aware of any principle of reason or justice, or any dictum of authority which enables the debtor State to cancel its obligation to a foreign creditor by importing an ex post facto condition, without the consent of the foreign creditor, into the original obligation. I am of opinion that this cannot lawfully be done. In the present case the injustice is aggravated by the shortness of the period of limitation; the notoriously disturbed and confused political state of the new community; the difficulties incident to foreigners resident in a distant country, of tracing out both the claim which they perhaps inherited, and the place of deposit of the instruments which authenticated their lien on the Government. Upon the whole I think that a further attempt should be made on the part of Her Majesty's Government to obtain payment from the Government of Ecuador of that part of the claim of Mrs. Abitbol which, apart from the consideration of the municipal act, is binding, according to the general principles of public international law, upon that community.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 386.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 5.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 5, 1863.

JAPAN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (No. 125, August 26, 1863), inclosing copies of correspondence which has taken place between Her Majesty's Consul at Yokohama and the agent of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co., upon the subject of a claim put forward by them for compensation for losses sustained in consequence of the state of affairs arising out of the demands preferred by Her Majesty's Government on that of the Tycoon; and Mr. Hammond was to reqnest that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that the claim of Messrs. Jardine and Co. is inadmissible, and that I agree entirely with the opinion expressed by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Mr. Consul Winchester upon this point.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 387.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 6.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 5, 1863.

SPAIN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches, and their inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul at St. Domingo (Nos. 26 and 28), reporting a case of alleged ill-usage of a man of colour, a British subject, named Alexander Merriman, by the Spanish authorities at Santiago, in St. Domingo; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon the merits of the case, and whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in supporting it, and if so, to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the evidence laid before me in this case does not warrant me in advising Her Majesty's Government that they ought to demand any pecuniary compensation for the imprisonment and ill-treatment of Alexander Merriman. Both appear to me to have been caused in very great measure, if not entirely, by the gross misconduct and violence of the man himself. It is, of course, always difficult to form a correct opinion upon depositions, apart from any knowledge of the character of the deponents themselves, of the manner in which they gave their evidence. But I am unable to agree with the conclusions which Mr. Consul Hood draws from the perusal of the papers.

I do not see any proof of the desire of the Spanish authorities to stifle an inquiry into the facts of the case, or to put a false gloss upon them; nor do the questions addressed by the Spanish authorities to Merriman, which appear to Mr. Consul Hood "extraordinary," convey that impression to my mind. They appear to me plainly directed to the legitimate object of ascertaining the previous character and conduct of Merriman. My conclusion from the evidence is, that Merriman did greatly misconduct himself before the Alcalde Ordinario; and I entirely disbelieve that that Magistrate used, in his Court of justice, the filthy language ascribed to him, which appears to be wholly at variance with his general character.

I have do doubt that Merriman was guilty of a gross and continued contempt of Court; that he was rightly ordered to prison for that contempt; that he did resist (which is not denied), and by violence, the officers who were conveying him to prison. There is a curious proof of this in the statement of Van Holten that Merriman struck one of the officers with his fist, in return, it is said, for a blow dealt to him; and in the declaration of Richard White, who relates, on the authority of Merriman, that he endeavoured to pick up a stone, to throw, as he says, in self-defence, at the officers. He certainly was struck by them with the flat of their swords, and the wound which he received was probably from the point or end of the sword, though this is denied. The wound appears to have been extremely slight, healed by the most ordinary applications, and a piece of sticking-plaster. His conduct to the sailor appears to have been of a very irritating and provoking character. He certainly appears to have received two blows—and two only according to his own statement—from a whip, but the blows appear to have left no mark, and inflicted no bodily injury. He was sent to the hospital, but it is alleged that he wilfully kept the flesh wound open, and refused all offers of assistance, and certainly the wound appears to have been very soon healed after he was placed in the hospital, and the length of his stay there seems to be accounted for by other causes, for it is asserted, and not denied, that he was suffering from the disease of hernia (a disease of old standing), to which the medical attendants applied remedies.

1863

I do not think myself at liberty—notwithstanding the Consul's opinion—to disbelieve the sworn evidence of the medical gentlemen, nor to believe implicitly the secret communications of persons who refuse to appear openly as witnesses; nor to disregard the fact that Merriman has varied his statements of some facts, and suppressed others.

Upon the whole case, I am of opinion that the best course which, in the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government can pursue will be to direct Her Majesty's Consul to use his best endeavours to obtain the immediate release of Merriman from prison, and to urge that whatever his offence or conduct may have been, for them he has been already more than sufficiently punished, and that they can afford no justification for the wounding with the sword and the striking with the whip; acts which are admitted, and which call for severe censure by the proper authorities upon those who were guilty of them.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 388.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 6.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, November 5, 1863.

New Granada.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated 21st October ultimo, from the Chairman of the Mariquita and New Granada Mining Company, respecting the murder in 1861 of Mr. John Hunter, the chief mechanic of their establishment in New Granada, by a man named Thomas Morris, and calling attention to the manner in which their efforts to bring the murderer to justice have been defeated in consequence of an amnesty granted to criminals as well as to political offenders by General Mosquera. That the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bogotá (Nos. 15 and 16) will explain why this amnesty was extended to criminals, and will also show the steps that he took with respect to the murder, and their result; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should now take in the matter, and as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Roulte's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Her Majesty's Government cannot require that the Government of New Granada should prevent the amnesty which has been formally and officially, however improperly, promulgated, from so far operating in favour of Thomas Morris as to shield him from criminal prosecution, though he be guilty of this atrocious murder.

I think, however, that Her Majesty's Government should direct Mr. Griffith to express to the Government of New Granada, in the strongest manner, the surprise and regret of Her Majesty's Government at the personal protection which has been given to this vile assassin, and that in their opinion the least that can now be done is immediaeely to expel him from the country, and to give every facility to the widow of his victim to recover the largest damages that can be obtained by law against the real and personal property of the murderer.

I think that an answer should be sent to Mr. Roulte to the effect that Her Majesty's Government are advised that the course recommended in this Report is the only one which it is competent to them in the circumstances to pursue.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 389.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 10.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, November 10, 1863.

United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 16th ultimo, inclosing the correspondence respecting the capture of the "Peterhoff," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration and opinion, a volume containing the papers relating to the case of the passengers in that vessel, Mr. Redgate, Mr. Elsworth, and Mr. Bowden, who were taken to New York, and there imprisoned; that the case formed the subject of our Reports of the 23rd of April, 1st of May, and 22nd of July last;* and Mr. Hammond was to state to us that, acting upon the suggestion contained in the latter of those Reports, your Lordship had requested Mr. Kirkman Hodgson, M.P., Governor of the Bank of England, to give us the benefit of his experience in mercantile affairs, to assist us in dealing with these cases, and Mr. Hodgson having expressed his willingness to do so, and to meet us at any hour after 3 o'clock in the afternoon during the then week or the week following, for that purpose, Mr. Hammond was to request that we would name some day on which it would be convenient to us to confer with him, in order that an interview between Mr. Hodgson and ourselves might be arranged accordingly.

That at the end of the inclosed volume we should find a letter from Messrs. Wilson, preferring a claim for 2,034*l.* 16*s.* on account of certain samples of boots seized on board the "Peterhoff," and that your Lordship would consult Mr. Hodgson with respect to it, and generally, should we think it necessary, with regard to the whole case, both as to the claims arising from the capture of the vessel, as well as those concerning Mr. Redgate, Mr. Elsworth, and Mr. Bowden, on which your Lordship had more particularly solicited his advice.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the whole of this case, particularly with reference to the claims of Messrs. Wilson and of the passengers on board the "Peterhoff," Mr. Redgate, Mr. Elsworth, and Mr. Bowden, and we have the honour to report—

That in all the former Reports but one, referred to in the letter of Mr. Hammond, the Law Officers had been obliged to assume that they had been correctly informed as to the innocence of the ship "Peterhoff," and her cargo.

Those Reports were necessarily made upon that hypothesis, and it was with respect to the state of facts then asserted to be true that they desired to have the assistance of an experienced mercantile gentleman in unravelling and estimating particular claims.

Since those Reports, however, a formal and protracted trial in the Prize Court has taken place, and after very careful and elaborate arguments, both ship and the cargo have been condemned on various grounds, which were, as nakedly, as alleged in the Decree (we have not yet seen the Judgment in extenso), sufficient, according to the principles of international law, to warrant this sentence.

The claimants contend that the evidence, of which we have a printed copy, did not sustain the conclusions of the Judge, and they have properly, therefore, appealed from it. The case is, under these circumstances, ad huc sub judice.

We have in our last Report apprized your Lordship that a perusal of the evidence does not satisfy us that the sentence was wrong at all, and certainly not so clearly wrong as to induce us to advise Her Majesty's Government to intervene officially in the matter, or to interfere with the usual and regular course of procedure before the Court of Appeal.

These observations bring us to a consideration of the present position of the claims of the Messrs. Wilson, and of Mr. Redgate, Mr. Elsworth, and Mr. Bowden.

Their claims are founded on various grounds:—

1. Undue imprisonment.
2. Loss of property on board the "Peterhoff."

---

* Pages 128, 142, and 209.

3. Loss of contingent profits which would have accrued from commissions on sale of the cargo.

With regard to the first ground, we have to observe that if any of these persons were put into a common prison, or treated as prisoners of war, or confined for an undue length of time, such treatment was improper and illegal, and might have constituted a just ground for claiming some reasonable compensation, and accordingly, upon the supposition that they had been so improperly detained, without any bonâ fide intention of examining them as witnesses (a course which, though competent, is not usual with respect to mere passengers), it was stated in one of the former Reports that their claims to compensation appeared to be well founded, whatever the result of the case as to the ship might be.

Two of the three complainants, Mr. Redgate and Mr. Bowden, were, however, examined as witnesses. They were not mere passengers, being interested in, or having a disposing power over, the cargo; and if they were merely detained, though forcibly, in a proper place, and in a proper manner, and (as we infer from the papers before us actually was the case), for a reasonable time, in order that they might be examined as witnesses, there is no such treatment as furnishes any reason for asking for compensation.

2. With regard to the second ground. The cargo has been condemned, as well as the ship, upon evidence that satisfied the Court that the cargo was implicated in the guilt of the ship.* If this were so, the cargo was rightly condemned; and upon this point, as well as that of the guilt of the ship, we do not think that the state of the evidence is such as to warrant Her Majesty's Government in making any special application respecting it to the Executive of the United States, or interfering with the usual judicial remedy of appeal.

3. With respect to the third ground (which, if neither the ship nor the cargo had been condemned, would have involved the question whether, in a case of unjustifiable capture, a neutral Government can properly demand compensation for the loss of contingent and intangible profit of this description), the claim for the loss of commissions is, at all events, disposed of for the present by our observations as to the cargo.

For these reasons, we have the honour to express our opinion that we ought not at present (nor, indeed, at any time, unless the case should assume a different aspect in the Court of Appeal), to give Mr. Kirkman Hodgson the trouble of conferring with us upon this subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 390.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 10, 1863.

UNITED STATES AND BRAZIL.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th ultimo, respecting the threatened seizure by Federal cruizers of three vessels, the "Abigail," "Fanny Crenshaw," and "Ann E. Grant," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous correspondence, a letter dated the 28th of October ultimo, from Mr. Barten F. Allen, of Liverpool, the owner of the ships, inclosing various documents bearing on the case, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 2nd instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for our consideration a further despatch from Mr. Consul Westwood (No. 44, October 7, 1863), relative to the case of the Confederate vessels at Rio de Janeiro which have been sold to Mr. B. F. Allen.

---

* This applies to the Messrs. Wilson's claim, as well as to the claims of Mr. Bowden, Mr. Elsworth, and Mr. Redgate.—R. P. R. P. C. R. J. P.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 5th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for our consideration with the papers then before us, the accompanying letter, dated the 6th of November instant, from the Admiralty, inclosing further papers respecting the detention of the three vessels at Rio.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Barten F. Allen does not appear to us to call for any observations with respect to the law applicable to these vessels, in addition to those contained in our former Report. Probably there would be no objection to communicating to Mr. Allen the substance of that Report.

With respect to the further communication of Mr. Westwood, we think that his letter to the Marquis d'Abrantes was proper, and that his suspicions as to the cause of the fresh delays interposed by the Custom-house authorities at Rio de Janeiro may very probably be well-founded; but it does not occur to us that any other steps can be taken at present in the matter beyond those which have already been taken by Mr. Westwood.

The correspondence transmitted by the Board of Admiralty on the 6th instant only confirms us in the views which we have already expressed.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 391.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 10, 1863.

TURKEY.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to refer to us the 62nd clause of the Order in Council respecting Consular jurisdiction in the Levant, of the 9th of January, 1863, of which a copy was inclosed; and that it had been considered that under that clause every member of a family, irrespective of relationship or sex, who shall have arrived at the age of 21 years must take out a certificate of registration, and consequently the wives and daughters of British subjects living under the same roof with their husbands or parents are held liable to separate and personal registration. That your Lordship is disposed to think that it is not necessary to insist upon this practice, but that it would suffice for all purposes if the head of the family, whether male or female, should alone take out a certificate of registration, on which might be endorsed the names and description of the females living under the same roof, whatever degree of relationship they might bear to the head of the family. That your Lordship thinks, however, that male children, or relatives of full age, although living under the same roof with the head of the family, should continue to take out separate certificates of registration.

That if we should concur with your Lordship in this view of the matter, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether the modification in the terms of the clause in question, which would be requisite to provide for the alteration, should be made by Order in Council, or whether a mere instruction of the Secretary of State to the Consular Officers would be sufficient authority for them to desist from requiring the parties referred to to take out certificates of registration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with your Lordship as to the expediency of the proposed modification of the 62nd clause of the Order in Council referred to, but we are of opinion that the modification must be affected by an additional Order in Council.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. J. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 392.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 11.)

CHILE.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 10, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General at Santiago,* requesting instructions as to the steps to be taken in regard to a marriage performed by the Acting British Consul at Coquimbo previously to that gentleman's appointment being sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

In forwarding to us the accompanying papers, Mr. Hammond was to state that the formal sanction by your Lordship of Mr. Tait's appointment as Acting British Consul at Coquimbo, was contained in a despatch (the draft of which was therewith inclosed), dated the 30th of September, 1863, while the marriage referred to appears to have been performed, at all events, not later than the 5th of September.

Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the legality or otherwise of the marriage in question, and the instructions which it may be proper to send to Mr. Thomson in regard to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that under Sections 1 and 19 of 12th and 13th Victoria, chapter 68, the marriage in question having been de facto solemnized by Mr. Acting Consul Tait previously to the 30th September, 1863, is invalid, Mr. Tait not having been before that date "duly authorized" to act in the absence of Mr. Ross, whom we presume to have been a Consul directed or authorized, by writing under the hand of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to solemnize and register marriages.

We can only suggest that instructions should be sent to Mr. Thomson, directing information of the invalidity of the marriage to be made to the parties interested with the least possible delay.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 393.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 13.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 11, 1863.

WE are honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General at the Havana (No. 42, September 28, 1863), on the subject of the claim of the owner, passengers, and crew of the British schooner "Don José," against the Government of the United States, on account of the seizure of that vessel by the Federal gun-boat "Juniata," whilst on a voyage from Nassau to Havana; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

---

* Mr. Thomson, No. 24, August 17, 1863; No. 65, September 12, 1863.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this appears to have been a seizure of a very unjustifiable character, wholly unwarranted, according to the opinion of the United States' Law Officer, either by the papers or the cargo, or by any other circumstance connected with the vessel; and if this vessel had been proceeded against in the Prize Court, she would have unquestionably been dismissed with costs and damages against the captor. We are of opinion (and the question is one of importance), that the captor cannot escape from this obligation, incident to his unlawful act, because the vessel was released without being taken into Court; for if this were the case, the neutral would be wholly deprived of that protection to which he is entitled by international law, and without which the belligerent right of search would be intolerable.

It is much to be lamented that the admitted extravagance of the claims in this, as in other cases, must greatly embarrass Her Majesty's Government in their endeavours to obtain justice for Her Majesty's subjects, and we think it would be expedient that the claimants should be apprised of the prejudice occasioned by their extravagant demands to their just claim.

We are of opinion, however, that Lord Lyons should be instructed immediately to press this matter upon the United States' Government; and probably the protests and the opinion of the United States' Law Officer would sufficiently instruct him for this purpose,—that is to say, for obtaining an admission that proper compensation should be made. The amount of the claim must, of course, be the subject of further discussion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 394.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 13.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 12, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, therewith, for our information, a letter dated the 23rd October, 1863, and its inclosures, from Mr. Adams, maintaining the position assumed by his Government with regard to the losses sustained by United States' citizens through the depredations of the "Alabama," and Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose the draft of answer which your Lordship had returned to Mr. Adams.

We have considered these despatches and papers, and have the honour to report to your Lordship—

That we beg leave to refer to our former Report upon this important matter.

That we entertain a strong opinion of the necessity of maintaining a firm and decided tone in all communications with the Government of the United States with reference to the pretension of that Government to hold this country responsible for captures made by the "Alabama," and of making it understood that this question is not one which Her Majesty's Government can ever be expected to treat as open or disputable.

It is to be observed that the letter of Mr. Adams contains some admissions important in their bearing upon the law applicable to this case:—

1. That the armament and equipment of the "Alabama" was in fraud of the laws of Great Britain;

2. That it was not completed so as to give her the character of a ship of war, capable of commencing hostile operations, until she was beyond the jurisdiction of Great Britain.

3. That it took place without any authority or sanction from the Government of Great Britain.

We are clearly of opinion that in the face of these admissions, the attempt to hold Great Britain responsible for the subsequent proceedings of the "Alabama" is alike contrary to the principle and the practice of international law.

No authority can be found either in the reason of the thing or in the writings of any accredited jurist, for the position that a neutral Government is liable, internationally, for the consequences of the unneutral acts of some of its subjects (whether done within its own territory or elsewhere), to which it has not given its own authority or consent; least of all for remote consequences of those acts occurring beyond the territorial jurisdiction of that Government.

The records of the Courts of the United States furnish various instances of Decrees enforcing the restitution, by regular judicial proceedings, of prizes brought within its jurisdiction, made by privateers unlawfully fitted out in the United States' waters. In no instance that we are aware of did that Government ever conceive itself bound to make compensation to persons whose property had been seized by such privateers without, and which had not been brought within, the territorial limits of the United States. The Courts of Justice confined themselves to the restitution of the specific property when brought within their jurisdiction.

In our former Report we referred to the occasion on which, and to the circumstances under which, the United States' Government made compensation for certain injuries inflicted upon British commerce by privateers equipped in United States' harbours. In this instance French privateers had been completely and openly armed, equipped, and fitted out, with at least the tacit consent of the United States' Government, in the harbours of the United States; and had, moreover, brought their prizes back into those harbours, and there condemned and disposed of them. All this was done upon the assumption that it was authorized by the Treaties between the United States and France; and the Government of the United States of that day expressly admitted that, in consequence of the interpretation so placed by France upon those Treaties, they had, for a time, purposely abstained from using the means of prevention which were in their power. The principle on which that compensation was given, sufficiently appears from the letter of Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Knox, and Mr. Randolph, to the Minister of the French Republic, under date the 5th August, 1793 (10 Sparks' Washington, 547). We stated in our former Report that this demand of the British Government, and this conduct of the United States' Government, could not furnish any precedent for the case of the "Alabama," in which all the material facts, justifying the demand and inducing the compliance, were wanting.

It seems to us also important to notice the position of Mr. Adams with respect to the present character of the "Alabama." "From the earliest to the latest day of her career," he says, "she does not appear to have ever gained any other national character on the ocean than that which belonged to her in her origin."

There is, we believe, no doubt whatever that the "Alabama" was delivered up in the ordinary way, either in this country or at sea, by her English builders to the agents of the Confederate States, under whose orders, and for whom, she was built; and we are unable to follow the reasoning which supposes that after this she continued to be, in any sense, a British ship or British property. There is as little doubt that she was, and is still, regularly commissioned as a public ship of war by the de facto Government of the Confederate States, whom Great Britain recognizes as belligerents.

If this be so, she is unquestionably entitled to be treated generally by neutral States as a belligerent ship of war; and it seems to us plain, from the Judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the "Santissima Trinidad" (7 Wheaton's Reports), that she would have been so treated by the Courts of the United States, if the relative positions of the United States and of Great Britain had been reversed.

There is another point on which, in connection with this subject, it seems to us useful for a moment to dwell. It appears to be assumed by the Government of the United States, that although the sale and delivery, in any port of the Confederate States, to the Confederate Government, of a ship of war built in this country might be merely an instance of contraband trade, liable to be intercepted by capture upon the high seas, a similar sale and delivery of the same article to the agents of the Confederate Government within British territory, and without first entering any Confederate port, would, in the absence of any British law sufficient to prevent it, be an international injury, for which the United States would be entitled to require reparation from the Government of this country. This assumption is, in our opinion, absolutely groundless; and the following extract from Mr. Wheaton's "History of International Law," page 310, is sufficient to show the view of the principle involved in it which was taken by that eminent jurist:—

"Lampredi," he says, "proceeds to consider an idle question, raised by Galiani, whether the conventional law of nations, interdicting the trade with the enemy in articles contraband of war, extends to the sale of the same articles within the neutral territory. Galiani pretends that it does, and that a ship, for example, built and armed for war in a neutral port, cannot be there lawfully sold to a belligerent. Lampredi takes a great deal of superfluous pains to fortify, both by reason and by an appeal to the authority of Treaties, and of preceding public jurists, his own opinion, that the transportation to the enemy of contraband articles alone is prohibited, but that the sale of such articles within the territory of the neutral country is perfectly lawful. He admits that there may be instances where neutral nations, from a prudent desire of avoiding any collision with powerful belligerents, may have prohibited the trade in contraband of war within the territory; but he asserts that Venice was the only example, during the war of the American revolution, of a neutral State absolutely prohibiting such a traffic; Naples only prohibiting the building, for sale, of vessels of war, and the exportation of other contraband articles; whilst Tuscany permitted her subjects to continue their accustomed trade in such articles, both within the territory and for exportation, subject, in the latter case, to the belligerent right of seizing contraband goods going for the enemy's use."

With respect to the reply which your Lordship has already (as we understand) sent to Mr. Adams' letter, it is perhaps superfluous for us, under the circumstances, to make any remark. Had the draft, however, been submitted to us before it was sent, we might have been disposed to suggest that the latter portion of it was open to some misconstruction, especially that part in which the condition of the "Alabama," before she left the port of Liverpool, appears to be described by the words "a seeming merchant-ship." According to our recollection of the evidence applicable to the "Alabama" at that time, it was never at all doubtful that she was intended for a ship of war; but the Law Officers then considered it necessary (as they have done in all subsequent cases) that there should also be some evidence of her being intended to be employed in the service of the Confederate States, to cruize and commit hostilities against the United States; and no evidence going to that point was obtained until very shortly before the time when she left the port of Liverpool.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 395.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 13.)

UNITED STATES

Lincoln's Inn, November 12, 1863.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 3rd November instant, from the United States' Minister at this Court, inclosing a copy of a letter addressed to Mr. Seward by the United States' Secretary of the Navy, together with a copy of a contract entered into between certain parties and an Agent of the so-styled Confederate States, having for its object the establishment, in the port of St. George's, Bermuda, of a depôt of naval stores for their use in the prosecution of the war, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is to be remarked in the first place, that the parties to this alleged contract are all American, all persons whom the United States claim as subjects of their Government, and over whom Her Majesty's Government have no authority or control. Secondly, that the schedules referred to in the contract are not attached to it, and therefore the character of the naval stores contracted for does not appear. They may or may not be of a contraband description. If they are, the terms of the contract seem to contemplate only the use of ordinary mercantile agency. Thirdly, the terms of the contract do not necessarily import the establishment of any depôt at Bermuda, but rather point to transhipment in the port of Bermuda of naval stores from vessels arriving there from foreign ports. Moreover, even this transhipment at Bermuda is not rendered necessary or obligatory by the contract, but is left optional and contingent. The words are:—"If at any time the said party of the second part shall so direct, &c., shall be made at the port of Bermuda," &c. Lastly, it does not appear to us that upon this vague and conjectural representation of Mr. Adams Her Majesty's Government can or ought to take any action whatever.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 396.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 13.)

FRANCE.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 12, 1863.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, requesting to be informed whether a declaration in the form embodied in his Excellency's despatch to be signed by the British and French Governments, will be sufficient to obviate the difficulty which now attaches to the duties of officers in command of vessels engaged in the suppression of the Slave Trade, owing to the absence of any instructions as to the course to be pursued in the event of masters of merchant-ships refusing to produce their papers when desired to do so.

Mr. Hammond was also to transmit to me a letter containing the opinion and suggestion of the Lords of the Admiralty in regard to this declaration, and was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which it would be advisable to give to Lord Cowley in this matter; and the papers relating to the case of the "Léopard," which has given rise to this question, were inclosed for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the alteration suggested by the Lords of the Admiralty should be engrafted in the declaration embodied in the despatch of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, and I think that the declaration so framed will prevent the recurrence of such difficulties as were presented by the case of the "Léopard."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 397.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

TURKEY.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 12, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 10th instant* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the draft of an Order in Council modifying the provisions of the 62nd clause of the Order in Council of 9th of January, 1863, respecting registration, and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether the proposed draft is calculated to meet the object in view, and is proper to be submitted for Her Majesty's sanction; and was to add that, as Her Majesty will probably hold a Council in a few days, your Lordship would be glad if we gave our early attention to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this proposed Order in Council into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we approve of the proposed draft as proper and sufficient for the object in view, subject to the addition of a few words which we have inserted in the margin of page 3 in the copy marked with our initials, in order to preclude any question as to making new indorsements on the certificate of registration from time to time on the birth of females not in existence when it was granted. We presume that it is not considered necessary (and unless necessary, that it would not be convenient or desirable) to require any such subsequent endorsements to be made.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 291.

Inclosure in No. 397.

Draft of proposed Order in Council.

[The passage inserted by the Law Officers is placed in brackets.]

At the Court at the day of 186 .

Present:

The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by the Act of the session of Parliament of the sixth and seventh years of Her Majesty's reign (chapter 94), "to remove doubts as to the exercise of power and jurisdiction by Her Majesty within divers countries and places out of Her Majesty's dominions, and to render the same more effectual," hereinafter called the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, it was enacted (among other things) that it was and should be lawful for Her Majesty to hold, exercise, and enjoy any power or jurisdiction which Her Majesty then had or might at any time thereafter have within any country or place out of Her Majesty's dominions, in the same and as ample a manner as if Her Majesty had acquired such power or jurisdiction by the cession or conquest of territory:

And whereas Her Majesty has had and now has power and jurisdiction in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte:

And whereas Her Majesty was pleased on the 9th day of January, 1863, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to make, by Order in Council dated that day, provision for the exercise of her power and jurisdiction as aforesaid:

And whereas by the 62nd clause of the aforesaid Order of Her Majesty in Council it is ordered that "every British subject resident in the Ottoman dominions, being of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, or being married or a widower or widow, though under that age, shall, in the year 1863 in the month of March, and in every subsequent year in the month of January, register himself or herself in a register to be kept at the Consulate of the Consular district within which he or she resides.

"Every such British subject not so resident arriving at any place within the Ottoman dominions where a Consular office is maintained, unless borne on the muster-roll of a British vessel there arriving, shall, within one month after his or her arrival, register himself or herself in a register to be kept at the Consular Office,—but so that no person shall be required to register himself or herself more than once in any year, reckoned from any 1st day of January.

"Every such British subject shall, on every such registration of himself or herself, pay a fee of 5*s*.

"Any such British subject subject failing so to register himself or herself, and not excusing his or her failure to the satisfaction of the Consular officer, shall not be entitled to be recognized or protected as a British subject in the Ottoman dominions, and shall be liable to a fine of not more than 40*s*. for each instance of such failure; in the case of a married woman (not living apart from her husband) such fine to be levied on her husband's property.

"The Consular officer shall issue to every British subject so registered a certificate of registration under his hand and Consular seal."

And whereas it is expedient to modify the provisions of the said clause:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by virtue of the powers in this behalf by the Foreign Jurisdiction Act or otherwise in her vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered:—

That for the purposes of the registration provided for in the above recited 62nd clause of the Order of Her Majesty in Council of the 9th of January, 1863, it shall be deemed sufficient if the head of the family, whether male or female, alone takes out a certificate of registration, on which certificate shall be endorsed the names and description of the females [who, at the time when such certificate is granted, shall be] living under the same roof with the head of the family, whatever degree of relationship they may bear to the head of the family; but that all male children or male relatives of the head of the family, being of full age, although living under the same roof with the head of the family, shall be bound to take out separate certificates of registration.

And it is further ordered that, except in so far as the above recited clause in the Order of Her Majesty in Council of the 9th of January, 1863, is modified by the present Order, such clause shall continue to have full force and effect.

And the Right Honourable the Earl Russell, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, shall give the necessary directions herein.

No. 398.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 13, 1863.

My Lord,

FRANCE.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Rev. Patrick Hay Maxwell, dated the 2nd of November instant, complaining that Her Majesty's Consul at Havre had declined to administer an oath to a person in his service who had been sent by Mr. Maxwell to the Consul to certify as to his and Mrs. Maxwell's existence; and also a despatch from Mr. Consul Featherstonhaugh (No. 60, November 9, 1863) in explanation of his proceedings in this matter; and to request that we would take the accompanying papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think Mr. Consul Featherstonhaugh has exercised a wise discretion in this matter. The office of the Consul in these matters is generally ministerial only, and this case does not fall within the principle of the exceptions suggested in the Foreign Office paper referred to by the Consul. There was no reason to suspect that the affidavit was made for any improper purpose. The person tendering it was competent to make it—probably, from having a better knowledge of Mr. Maxwell, more competent to certify the fact of his existence (especially under a different name from that by which he was usually known) than the Consul. The objection that the Consul did not know that Mr. Hay and Mr. Maxwell were the same person, was not the cause of his refusal. We think that the Consul should be instructed to administer the oath in question to Sarah Spreabury.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 399.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 13, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th November instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 26th ultimo,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, the accompanying further correspondence which has passed respecting the case of the "Canton," from which we should see the result of the inquiries that have been instituted in Scotland with regard to that vessel, and especially to call our attention to the specification of the fitting and structure of the ship, and to the Report thereon furnished by the Constructor to the Admiralty; and to request that we would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether there would now be any objection to asking the alleged owner of the "Canton," Mr. Pembroke, to explain for what she is intended, and generally as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in the matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letter of the same day's date, transmitting a letter, dated the 11th November instant, from the Board of Treasury containing further particulars respecting the case of the "Canton."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not, as yet, find in the papers before us sufficient grounds to justify a seizure of this vessel under the Foreign Enlistment Act; but we think that there are sufficient grounds for keeping a strict watch over her, and not suffering her to leave the Clyde without some further inquiry.

The evidence already obtained, although not conclusive as to her character, seems to us to be enough to show that she is intended for some warlike service; but whether this is a fixed or only a contingent and conditional intention, and for what particular service she is designed, are points as to which no light is afforded by the present evidence. It is to be observed that the builder's specification in this case extends expressly to some degree of "fitting-out" and "equipment" as well as to mere construction; and the suspicion excited in Mr. Reed's mind (see his Report to the Admiralty, under date the 10th March, 1863) by those parts of the specification which relate to the construction of the upper deck and the bulwarks (the latter "to be fitted to some plan which is not described, but which the owners are to furnish or approve"), is amply confirmed by the facts now ascertained as to the port-holes, which, after having been carefully constructed, were again closed up, so as (apparently) to admit of their being easily reopened, although, for the present, concealed. On the other hand, it is to be observed that in the specification the ship is called a merchant-vessel; and there is nothing as yet beyond report and surmise to connect her with the Confederate States. If the circumstances to which we have referred are indicative of disguise and concealment, it may, on the other hand, be said that the conduct of Messrs. Henderson and Co., and of Messrs. Thomson and Co., in giving information and producing documents, has been fair and open; and it is not yet ascertained whether Mr. Pembroke, on being applied to, will also be willing to give information or not.

We think that it may be proper, in these circumstances, now to write to that gentleman to the effect that it has become the duty of Her Majesty's Government to institute a very strict inquiry into the character and destination of the ship in question, which appears, by the contract and specification produced at Glasgow by Messrs. Thomson and Co., to have been built for him; and that Her Majesty's Government think it right to offer him the opportunity of giving them such information as to her destination, and the purpose for which she is intended, as (with the knowledge which he must, of course, possess of the object with which it is sought) he may be willing to afford. We should hardly anticipate that, in the result, any really useful or satisfactory information will be obtained from Mr. Pembroke; and it will be desirable (if this has not already been done) to ascertain exactly who and what Mr. Pembroke is, and whether any evidence connecting him in any way with the Agents of the Confederate States in this country is likely to be obtained.

---

* Page 278.

It will also be important to obtain, if possible, evidence of the fact (alleged by the United States' Consul at Glasgow, but as yet not at all verified) that Captain Maffit, of the "Florida," is now in Glasgow, passing under a feigned name, and superintending or taking a visible and practical part and concern in the preparations of this vessel for sea. Such a fact, if proved by satisfactory evidence, might probably be enough (together with the other facts already known) to justify the institution of proceedings in the Court of Session of the nature suggested by the Law Officers for Scotland, for an interdict against the departure of the ship; and, whenever there is sufficient evidence in the opinion of the Scottish Law Officers to justify such a step, we think it will be far more desirable to take it than to proceed (as it is necessary to do in England) by a seizure without judicial warrant.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 400.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 14.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 13, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 7th August last,* in the case of the "Margaret and Jessie," and to our previous Reports on the same subject, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Charge d'Affaires at Washington (No. 76, September 23, 1863), inclosing a copy of a note which has been addressed to him by Mr. Seward, requesting to be furnished with a copy of the evidence laid before Her Majesty's Government relative to the circumstances under which that vessel was driven on shore, on the coast of Eleuthera, by the United States' ship "Rhode Island," in order that an opportunity may be afforded to the accused party to rebut the evidence before a Court of Inquiry; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be given to Mr. Seward.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the request of Mr. Seward ought to be complied with; but at the same time that it should be distinctly stated by Her Majesty's Government that they cannot consent that the demand for redress, which they have preferred, should be in any way affected by the proceedings of the United States' Government relating to the conduct of any officer, or other person, who may be responsible to that Government for this transaction.

Lord Lyons should be instructed to express a confident hope that upon evidence of the facts, so clear and decisive as that contained in the documents which will be communicated to them, the Government of the United States will no longer delay to give the proper satisfaction for so very serious an outrage upon the territorial rights of Her Majesty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 401.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 16.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1863.

TURKEY.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 30th of September last,† stating our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Her Majesty's Consul at Brussa, in the matter of the complaint of Mr. Falkeisen, the Russian Vice-Consul at that place, that he was unable to obtain possession of his house which Mr. Consul Sandison was occupying, he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch dated the 15th October ultimo from Mr. Sandison appealing against the decision of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople in this case; and the draft of the despatch which, in consequence of our Report, your Lordship addressed to Mr. Consul Sandison was therewith inclosed, together with the letter (September 11, 1863) from Mr. McCowan upon which that Report was founded; and also a correspondence which your Lordship had had with the Russian Ambassador at this Court.* And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Consul Sandison's despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the statements therein made affect in any way the opinion contained in our Report of the 30th of September.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although Sir Henry Bulwer seems to have taken a different view of the facts of this case from Sir Edmund Hornby, and although the question whether the counter-claim of Mr. Sandison upon the Russian Consul for repairs of the house would have been an excuse by the Turkish law for the non-payment of his rent, cannot be said to be entirely free from uncertainty and obscurity, we still do not see any sufficient reason to alter the opinion of this case which was expressed in our former Report.

If Mr. Sandison thought fit to do so, he might appeal (or he might have appealed, if the time has now gone by) to Her Majesty in Council from the decision of the Consular Court at Constantinople. Not having done so, we think it is idle for him to invite Her Majesty's Government (as he seems to do) to take up his case as if it were a matter of public and and not private concern, or to attempt to review, upon the merits, a legal decision which, until reversed upon appeal, is binding, and must be assumed to be in accordance with justice. Nor are we at all satisfied by Mr. Sandison's own statements and arguments, that he has, in fact, received less than substantial justice from Sir Edmund Hornby, whatever technical difficulties there may have been to overcome in the case.

The point on which we feel some embarrassment is, the want of positive and conclusive proof that, consistently with Sir E. Hornby's Decree, Mr. Sandison may not possibly be entitled still to retain the possession of the house if he pays what has been found due from him. It is to be remembered, however, that he was not himself willing to leave this question to the decision of the Consular Court; and it does not appear to be disputed that if the rent since 1850 was improperly left in arrear, the landlord was entitled to put an end to the lease, and retake possession. This being so, and having regard to the sum which has been established, under Sir E. Hornby's Decree, as due for arrears of rent from Mr. Sandison, it seems to us that a sufficient case is proved to make it right to require him to give up the house, if he desires still to retain his position as one of Her Majesty's Consuls in the Ottoman dominions.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 402.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 16, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th of November instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 20th of August,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, the accompanying despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 757), containing the further information which, in accordance with my suggestions, he was instructed to furnish respecting the case of Mr. R. Atkin; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

---

* Page 227.

† Page 264.

* Baron Brunnow, October 19, 1863; to Baron Brunnow, October 23, 1863.

† Page 233.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere in this matter. According to the explanation of the facts and circumstances now given, it would be difficult to deny the right of Judge Ware to exercise this Admiralty jurisdiction. With respect to the wages, he considers the contract as one which originated, and was concluded, in the United States, and I think he is justified in so considering it. And as to the personal tort or injury, he says both the parties were domiciled in the United States, and that the plaintiff, besides being so domiciled, never had been, and was not at the time, a British subject. I am of opinion that the English Court of Admiralty would take the same view of its jurisdiction if such cases came before it. At the same time I must observe that the case was not one of ordinary occurrence, and not unreasonably appeared to Mr. Murray to involve an undue interference with the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consul.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 403.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 17.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 17, 1863.

SIAM.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok (No. 33, September 10, 1863), inclosing copies of the rules and regulations for the Government of British subjects in Siam which have been amended in accordance with the opinion contained in our Report of the 27th of March, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these rules and regulations appear to us to be proper. The seventh rule is awkwardly worded, and the word "to" is omitted. It would run better, "Every British subject whether, &c., is strictly forbidden to enter, &c., for the purpose of shooting, &c." This, however, being merely a verbal defect is not material.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 404.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 17, 1863.

SPAIN.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at St. Domingo; the first (No. 34, October 7), inclosing a copy of a Proclamation, dated the 5th of October, issued by the Captain-General of the Spanish portion of the Island of St. Domingo, declaring "all the coasts of the island" and its "littoral waters" to be under blockade; the second, dated the 16th of October (No. 37), stating that up to that date no effective blockade had been established at any one place; and that it appears from another despatch that the case was the same up to the 23rd of October: and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration; and that, if under the circumstances the notice of blockade given is sufficient, I would prepare and transmit to your Lordship a form of notification to be inserted in the "Gazette." That, in connection with the same subject, Mr. Hammond was also to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Nicholson, requesting information regarding the operation of the proposed blockade, and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to this letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am bound to assume the correctness of the statements made by Mr. Martin Hood; and from them it appears that there is no lawful blockade of all the ports of the Island of St. Domingo. That there are, in fact, only three Spanish vessels of war at three places, immediately off the port of St. Domingo; and that, with the exception of these three places, the whole coast and every port is under the command of the insurgents.

In these circumstances I do not think Her Majesty's Government ought, at present at least, to notify the alleged blockade in the "Gazette."

It is true that such notification would not make the blockade legal; but it would, or might appear to, give some colour to it; and might, perhaps, hereafter be taken to have done so by a Spanish Prize Court. At the same time I would suggest that it might be expedient that a remonstrance, founded on Mr. Hood's statement, should be addressed to the Spanish Government, or the Spanish Ambassador here, accompanied by a request that the Spanish authorities at St. Domingo should be ordered to confine the declaration of blockade to the ports actually blockaded by Spanish vessels. For a paper blockade, such as Mr. Martin Hood represents this to be, is contrary to general international law, apart from the special provision to that effect in the Declaration of the Congress of Paris, to which Spain was not a party.

The answer to Mr. Nicholson should be, I think, to this effect:—

That Her Majesty's Government have received intelligence from the Consul at St. Domingo that the Spanish Captain-General has declared a blockade to the effect contained in the printed extract: that the Consul had also apprised Her Majesty's Government that the declaration, at the time when he wrote, was not supported by a de facto effective force. It was not clear, therefore, that the blockade was as yet lawfully established; that the terms of the declaration of blockade appeared to be principally directed against ships laden with men, arms, ammunitions or military stores of any kind: but if the blockade should prove hereafter to be effectively and legally established, it might be construed by the Spanish authorities to prohibit all trading whatsoever with all the coasts and littoral waters of the island, and to subject all vessels so trading to condemnation.

Probably a ship innocent of all contraband would receive a warning on the spot before capture.

In these circumstances Mr. Nicholson must exercise his own discretion as to the course which he may think proper to pursue with respect to trading with the Haytian ports.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 405.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 18.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 18, 1863.

PRUSSIA AND GREAT BRITAIN

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to forward to us a document which has been served upon your Lordship at the instance of Dr. Weiss, a German lawyer, who has been for some time in communication with the Foreign Office on the following subject:—

In the year 1860 (it was stated), Lord Augustus Loftus, who was then Her Majesty's Minister at Berlin, was instructed to take the lease of a house in that capital for the use of Her Majesty's Mission, and that he endeavoured for this purpose to get a lease of a house belonging to Baron Arnim, which was considered eligible in every way. That it seems that Lord Augustus thought that Count Arnim would be inclined to ask a higher rent for his house if he knew that it was for Her Majesty's Government than he would have taken from a private individual, and that your Lordship, with a view to get it at the most reasonable rate, undertook, on your own responsibility, to employ Dr. Weiss as an agent to negotiate with Baron Arnim for the lease as if it was for some private purchaser, but that your Lordship states that Dr. Weiss was well paid for his services, and also that the final arrangements for the lease were made without his assistance. That the accompanying papers are all that are to be found on the question in the Foreign Office, for those mentioned in the document served on your Lordship have never been received, and are probably still in the possession of Lord Augustus Loftus, who is now Her Majesty's Minister at Munich.

Mr. Hammond was accordingly directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this question into our immediate consideration, and that we would inform your Lordship what course your Lordship should pursue with reference to the document served upon your Lordship in a matter from which your Lordship has all along, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, kept yourself entirely aloof.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That of the documents described in the Subpœna duces tecum which has been served upon your Lordship, none appear to be in your Lordship's possession or power, except Lord Augustus Loftus' letter of the 29th of November, 1862, and the Report of Dr. Stronsberg, inclosed therein. The drafts or copies of your Lordship's own letters to Mr. Weiss, and to Lord Augustus Loftus are not (strictly speaking) within the description of "letters written on that subject by John Earl Russell." As the whole affair has been regarded and dealt with by your Lordship as a private matter between Dr. Weiss and Lord A. Loftus, we think that these documents are liable to be produced in the usual manner; and we think that it will be necessary for your Lordship to attend with them at the trial under the subpœna, for that purpose; and (the whole being utterly unimportant) we should recommend that the drafts of your Lordship's letters should be in readiness also, if called for, though the subpœna (as we have said) does not strictly extend to them.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 406.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 19, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 756, October 23, 1863), respecting the case of the British schooner "Carmita," which was stated to have been captured off the coast of Texas in August last by the United States' ship "Bermuda," and to have been brought to Philadelphia as a prize; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion therenpon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that at present there is no adequate cause shown in this case for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

Whether there was or was not a blockade of the port of Velasco, and whether the "Carmita" did or did not intend to evade such blockade, are questions of mixed fact and law, properly cognizable in the first instance by the Prize Court. It must be presumed that this Court will give the claimant due opportunity of establishing his defence, and will do justice. We may, however, observe that the facts as at present stated appear to be greatly in favour of the claimant.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 407.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 23.)

Doctors' Commons, November 20, 1863.

My Lord,

HONDURAS

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the correspondence noted in the margin,* setting forth the circumstances under which the Government of Honduras have revoked the exequatur of Mr. Acting Consul Kirkpatrick, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether the circumstances under which Mr. Kirkpatrick's exequatur has been withdrawn are such as to afford reasonable grounds of displeasure to Her Majesty's Government, and as to the redress which Her Majesty's Government would be entitled to ask if I should consider the circumstances of the case to justify a demand.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is impossible to justify upon principle the conduct of Mr. Kirkpatrick in interfering at all in the strictly political affairs of Honduras, regard being had either to general international law or to the instructions issued for the direction of Consuls by the Foreign Office in 1846. Such interference is not within the legitimate sphere of Consular functions, except in those rare cases in which the protection of the immediate interests of his own countrymen forces, as it were, such interference upon the Consul. The present case cannot fairly be considered as one of this description. Moreover, both the language and tone of severe censure (however merited) of Mr. Kirkpatrick's letters are such as no Government can be expected to submit to from a foreign Consul.

On the other hand, the circumstances were of an exceptional character.

The general atrocities of the administration which have sprung up out of the last revolution appear to have been great.

Mr. Kirkpatrick had been in the habit of offering advice to the former Government, which appears to have been sought for and well received; and in the first instance, it appears to have been also well received by the present de facto Government of Honduras, and it is very probable that his exequatur has not been really withdrawn on account of this irregularity: nevertheless, it furnished a ground, to a certain extent plausible, for the withdrawal of the exequatur, which withdrawal it is certainly within the abstract competence of every State to direct.

I cannot, therefore, advise Her Majesty's Government that this act can be considered in the light of an injury to Her Majesty, for which redress can be demanded.

It may, nevertheless, and I think in the circumstances, does require that Her Majesty's Minister at Guatemala should be directed to express to the existing Government of Honduras the great displeasure of Her Majesty's Government, both at the fact of Mr. Kirkpatrick's dismissal, and at the discourtesy of the mode in which it was effected.

Mr. Mathews might also be instructed to recapitulate the exceptional circumstances which almost necessarily placed Mr. Kirkpatrick in unusual relations, so far as his Consular office was concerned, with the Government; and perhaps, also, the resolution of Her Majesty's Government not to countenance

---

* Mr. Kirkpatrick, No. 17, Consular; to Mr. Kirkpatrick, No. 48; Mr. Mathew, No. 52; Colonial Office, October 31, 1863.

1863

such a proceeding by appointing, while the present Government are in office, any successor to Mr. Kirkpatrick.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 408.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 24, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 195, October 31, 1863), inclosing a certified copy of the proceedings in the case of the British vessel "Tampico," recently condemned in the Prize Court at that place for an alleged attempt to violate the blockade, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as we can judge from the papers submitted to us, the "Tampico" appears to have been lawfully condemned for breach of blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 409.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 24, 1863.

RUSSIA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Colonel Stanton, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Warsaw (No. 35), requesting to be furnished with instructions in regard to certain applications which had been made to him by Englishwomen who had married Russian subjects, and had subsequently become widows, to be furnished with British passports, and consequently to be treated as British subjects; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Colonel Stanton's despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Colonel Stanton's despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Englishwomen who are the widows of Russian subjects (assuming them not to have become naturalized in the Russian dominions, independently of the effect of their marriage) are entitled to receive British passports, and to be treated as British subjects.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 410.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 26.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 26, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th of August[] he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers,[] the accompanying further despatches from Lord Lyons[†] respecting the case of the "Victor," the British vessel which was captured in the neighbourhood of Havana by the United States' man-of-war "Juniata," but subsequently acquitted by the Court at Key West.

---

[*] Page 240.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should see from these papers that, although the "Victor" was acquitted by the Court, she had been detained pending the appeal made against this decision by the captor, and that the parties interested in the vessel have applied to Lord Lyons to procure her release; that Lord Lyons, however, had reported that, from what passed in a conversation which he had held with Mr. Seward on the subject, there appears little prospect of such an application being attended with success.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion both as to the propriety of making this application for release to the United States' Government and as to the proceedings at Key West, as shown in the papers now forwarded by Lord Lyons, together with any other observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have in this case, as in some others, to lament the absence of any statement of the reasons given by the Judge for his sentence, and the consequent difficulty of forming a perfectly satisfactory opinion upon it. However, the papers now before us tend to confirm our former opinion of the unwarrantable character of this seizure. It appears to us (judging from the evidence) to be the very last case in which the United States' Government ought to have permitted an appeal on behalf of the captors from the sentence in favour of the captured vessel. And we are of opinion that the case is one which from its peculiar character will fully justify a remonstrance against that course from Lord Lyons to the United States' Government.

The making use of a neutral port as a place from whence to sally forth and pursue the captured vessel appears to us to be an uncontroverted fact in this case. Within one hour (whatever was the distance) from the time of leaving the harbour of Havana the "Victor" was seized by the "Juniata" coming out of the same port, and such a fact alone ought, in our opinion, to induce the Government of the United States to abide by the decision of its own Prize Court and not to seek its reversal by an appeal; for we apprehend that, in a case in which a fact like this manifestly appears from the evidence, a neutral Government would be fully justified in disregarding as contrary to settled principles the Judgment even of a Court of Appeal if pronounced adversely to the vessel. We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to recapitulate the facts of this unjust seizure, and, on the ground above-mentioned (notwithstanding what Mr. Seward has stated as to the reluctance of the Secretary of the United States' Navy to interfere in such cases), to press for the immediate release of the vessel. Such an application, even if refused, may serve to strengthen a later application for costs and damages if these (which we hope will not be the case) should not be awarded by the Appellate Court. We observe that by the Decree in this case, although the vessel is released, an option is given to the Government of the United States to take her for their own service at an appraised value; failing which, the claimant may be put into possession pending the appeal if he is willing to deposit in Court the same appraised value, but not otherwise. That the Government of the United States will not attempt to avail themselves of the option of purchase, given to them in so extraordinary a manner by the Decree which pronounces the capture unlawful, may (we conceive) be concluded with certainty, from the assurances lately given by that Government under the advice of their Attorney-General, upon the general question of taking uncondemned neutral vessels for their own service under a late Act of Congress. But we think there is considerable harshness in making the deposit of the full appraised value (as distinguished from security) the only condition on which the successful claimant, in a case like this, can obtain possession of his property and obviate the risk of a compulsory sale pending an appeal.

---

[*] Consul Archibald, No. 102, June 29, 1863; No. 116, July 13, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 650, July 17, 1863; Consul-General Crawford, No. 29, July 2, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 651, July 17, and No. 661, July 20, 1863; Consul Archibald, No. 127, July 20, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 676, July 28, 1863; Admiralty, August 17, 1863.

[†] Lord Lyons, No. 687, August 3, 1863; to Mr. Stuart, No. 501, September 11, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 772, November 3, 1863; No. 773, November 3, 1863.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 411.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 26, 1863.

My Lord,

PRUSSIA.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose a letter which had been addressed to him by a Mr. Chaffers, proposing to call upon him and to confer with him relative to the matter in dispute between Dr. Weiss and Lord Augustus Loftus, which formed the subject of his letter to us of the 17th instant.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes that he should write to Mr. Chaffers, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this matter into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship whether this reply is such as ought to be returned to him.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed reply is proper, and such as ought to be returned to Mr. Chaffers.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 412.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell —(Received November 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 26, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our information, with reference to the case of the iron-clad vessels which have been seized by order of the Crown at Birkenhead, the accompanying letter dated the 14th of November instant, from Mr. Adams, inclosing a printed paper purporting to be the journal of an officer on board the "Alabama."

We have perused and considered this journal, and have the honour to report—

That with reference to our last Report on the subject of the claims of the United States' Government on Her Majesty's Government with respect to the captures made by the "Alabama," we have further to remark that, inasmuch as Mr. Adams has sent this pamphlet to your Lordship in aid of his demand for reparation of the injuries inflicted upon United States' merchant-vessels, we think it might be worth while to draw the attention of Mr. Adams to the following passages:—

(Page 5.) "Our unceremonious departure was owing to the fact of news being received to the effect that the Customs authorities had orders to board and detain us that morning."

(Page 6.) "Our object in going there (that is, to Terceira) was to obtain the necessary arms, ammunition, &c., requisite for a vessel of war. England's proclamation of neutrality prevented the guns, &c., being placed on board at Liverpool."

It would therefore appear from the narrative transmitted by Mr. Adams, that the escape of the "Alabama" from Liverpool took place under circumstances which (as we humbly conceive) furnish a complete answer to any claim by the United States' Government to hold Her Majesty's Government responsible for the subsequent proceedings of that vessel on the high seas.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 413.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 26, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 781, November 3, 1863), inclosing copies of various documents respecting the capture of the British vessel "Sir William Peel" by the United States' ship of war "Seminole," off Matamoros.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should see from these papers that the "Sir William Peel" is stated to have been seized when in Mexican waters, and without previous search, and that the case is now before the Prize Court at New Orleans. And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Lord Lyons should be instructed to make any further representation to the United States' Government, pending the result of the inquiry in the Prize Court, beyond the note which he addressed to Mr. Seward on the 2nd instant, forwarding to him copies of the papers relative to the seizure of this vessel.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to inclose a letter, dated the 22nd October ultimo, from the Association for the Protection of Commercial Interests, stating that an agent would be sent to the United States to see to the owners being properly represented in the Prize Court, together with the answer returned to it on the 23rd ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, pending the result of the inquiry before the Prize Court, Lord Lyons should not be instructed to make any representation additional to that which has already been made by him to the Government of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 414.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 27, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 779) respecting the case of a vessel called the "Etta," which had previously sailed as a Confederate privateer, but having been condemned at Nassau as unseaworthy, had been sold for certain merchants there, and finally sent on a voyage to New York, where she was seized by the Government of the United States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the peculiar circumstances of this case may possibly raise some important questions of international law, and especially the question how far a belligerent is bound to recognize the validity of a transfer of a ship of war by the other belligerent, durante bello, to a neutral, and the change of her character in the hands of the neutral purchaser from a warlike to a commercial purpose. It may be in your Lordship's recollection that, in the case of the "Sumter," (afterwards called the "Gibraltar,") the United States' Government appeared disposed, not only to maintain the absolute invalidity of such a sale as against their own belligerent rights, but even to expect that it would be treated as invalid by our own municipal law. It became the duty of the Law Officers on that occasion to advise your Lordship that there was no municipal law of this country against such a transaction (assuming its bonâ fide character); and that the question whether such a ship so transferred would still be liable to capture was one which, if it should arise, might properly be left to the determination (in the first instance at all events) of a Prize Court. The peculiarity of the present case is that the ship "Etta" has not been captured upon the high seas, but has been seized (as we understand) by the Government of the United States, within their own territory. The means must, we presume, exist of raising the question of the legality of this seizure in the Courts of Law of the United States by proper proceedings at the suit of the owners of the vessel; and we are disposed to think that this course, if open, is that which may most properly be taken. There cannot, however, be any objection to an inquiry by Lord Lyons, under your Lordship's instructions, of the United States' Government as to the grounds of the seizure, and as to the steps which it is proposed to take to establish its legality, against the British owners who claim the vessel. The answer to this inquiry may better enable us to judge of the validity of those grounds, and as to the course which it may be expedient for Her Majesty's Government to take on the subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 415.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 30.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 30, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter and its inclosures from Mr. Evans, claiming compensation for injuries sustained by him in consequence of the Confederate steamer "Florida" having burnt the vessel "Anglo-Saxon," on board of which he was at the time engaged to serve as pilot; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think the claim for compensation by Mr. Evans is well-founded. He received no ill-treatment: being found on board a vessel belonging to a belligerent, which was captured by the enemy on the high seas, he was set free as soon as the necessities of the captor would allow him. The fact that the captor did not hail a British ship and put him on board constitutes, in our opinion, no ground for claiming compensation from the Government of the Confederate States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 416.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 30.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 30, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches as marked in the margin,* from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington and Her Majesty's Consul at New York, respecting the capture of the British ship "Isabella Thompson" by the United States' steamer "United States," and the proceedings which have taken place with regard to this vessel before the Prize Court at New York; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 10th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, the accompanying further despatch from Lord Lyons respecting the case of the "Isabella Thompson" (No. 766, October 26, 1863).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Lord Lyons should be instructed to make a communication to Mr. Seward upon this subject.

It is true that the remedy of an appeal is open to the owners, and is a legal mode of obtaining redress, yet unexhausted by them. But the miscarriage of the Judge in not awarding costs and damages in this case appears to us clear; and we think that an attempt at least should be made to obtain justice for the owners, without incurring the delay and expense incident to further legal proceedings, and by which the ultimate demand of Her Majesty's Government for compensation might be only augmented.

We presume that the notes of the Judge's sentence are correct. And, if so, the premises respecting the entire innocence of the vessel, and the absence of any legal ground for detention, are so plainly at variance with the conclusion of relieving the captors from the legal and proper consequence of a wholly unjustifiable seizure, that we still hope the United States' Government will admit, at once, the justice of giving the costs and damages in this case.

The vessel was engaged in a lawful trade between two neutral ports, neither of them even in the neighbourhood of any blockaded port. Her cargo was taken on board in the ordinary course of trade in neutral waters; and there is not any trace in the evidence of anything having occurred, when she was visited and captured, which could afford the slightest pretext for her capture. For the single ground of justification suggested, viz., the suspicion of a complicity between this vessel and the blockade runner from which she received a great part of her cargo in British waters, no ground was shown except in the evidence of one witness, the cook, which the Judge himself did not venture to rely upon; and which by itself, even if fully credited, had no tendency to identify the voyage and adventure of the one ship with that of the other; and it is apparent, from the omission of the captors to avail themselves of the opportunity of going into further proof which was offered them by the Decree, that there was no ground in fact for any such charge. And we notice as deserving reprehension, the course adopted in obtaining, previous to the regular examination, and while the witness was on board in the power of this captors, a deposition (however voluntary it may purport to be) from the cook, evidently intended to offer some sort of pretext for a seizure, which it had been discovered could not be defended upon the facts and the law. Such a deposition is very objectionable in principle, and is contrary to the practice of the American and British Prize Courts.

The case is simply this: a neutral vessel sailing from one neutral port to another with a cargo free from all suspicion, and perfectly regular papers, seized upon the high seas, and compelled to incur very heavy expenses and damages, without a colorable pretext on the part of the captor, as to whom the most favourable suggestion is, that he was entirely ignorant of the law.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 619, 628, 754, and 755; Consul Archibald, Nos. 101 and 152.

It is difficult to say in what case the award of costs and damages, the only protection of the neutral, ought to be made by the Prize Court, if not in this. Even if the captor's conduct in such a case is excusable in the eyes of the Judges of his own country, this can be no reason why all indemnity should be refused to the injured party, who did not by any improper or objectionable conduct whatever contribute to the captor's error.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 417.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 2.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 30, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's command's signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence* respecting the cases of two British subjects at Galveston, who have claimed exemption from the conscription for the Confederate army.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should see from these papers that both of these persons have exercised certain privileges appertaining to citizens in the State of Texas, and that Lord Lyons had already decided in one case, that of Leach, that nothing further could be done.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that your Lordship, however, would be glad if we would take the matter into our consideration, and favour you with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government could properly interfere on behalf of one or both of these individuals.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not advise Her Majesty's Government to take any steps in either of the cases of Leach and Richards. They appear to fall within the category of those cases as to which Her Majesty's Government has decided not to interfere.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 418.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 2.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 30, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers† respecting the imprisonment and alleged ill-treatment of Mr. W. J. Matchett, at Wilmington, Delaware, in the United States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we presume that Wilmington, Delaware, was under martial law, and that every United States' subject was liable to the same military arrest and treatment as Mr. Matchett underwent. It appears that Mr. Matchett has been for many years resident in the United States, during which time it is asserted by the United States' authorities, and by no means explicitly denied by him, that he has in one sense at least represented himself as a United States' citizen, by discharging some of the most important functions of citizenship, e. g., voting and taking an active part in the elections relating to the county, the State, and the Government. He appears also to have used violent language, exciting the suspicion of the authorities. As soon as evidence was produced of his being, notwithstanding his exercise of civil rights, a British subject, he was set at liberty.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration, we do not think that Her Majesty's Government are called upon to take any further steps in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 451; to Lord Lyons, No. 342; Lord Lyons, No. 764.

† Mr. Matchett, September 15, 1863; to Mr. Stuart, No. 345, October 8, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 763, October 26, 1863.

No. 419.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 2.)

JAPAN

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 30, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Colonel Neale (No. 134, September 10), stating the circumstances under which a regulation respecting vagrants (a copy of which was inclosed in his despatch) had been provisionally approved by him; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of the Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, under authority of the 4th and 5th sections of which the Regulations in question would be issued.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered these papers, and we are of opinion that the regulations as to vagrancy bearing date the 5th of September last are in excess of the powers given to Her Majesty's Consular Agents in Japan by the 4th and 5th sections of the Order in Council of the 23rd January, 1860, and are therefore invalid in law.

The authority given to the Consular Agents is to make and enforce, by fine or imprisonment, rules and regulations for the observance of the stipulations of Treaties, and for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects, being within the dominions of the Tycoon of Japan. These regulations must (we conceive) be in the nature of positive laws, capable of being obeyed or violated; and so far as these sections of the Order in Council alone are concerned, no penalty can be imposed for their violation, except fine or imprisonment. And the 6th and 7th sections which follow, show that no penalty is to be inflicted upon any person for the violation of any such regulations, without a trial properly conducted, and a legal conviction and sentence thereon.

So far as relates to the constitution of an offence, we are disposed to think (though not altogether without hesitation) that the Regulations of the 5th of September last might be sufficient in law, the offence being failure to give security for good behaviour when required so to do, under the circumstances thereby defined as constituting a condition of "vagrancy."

But we doubt whether it was competent to Her Majesty's Consular Agents in Japan to constitute the fact itself of "vagrancy," as so defined, an offence, or to give to what is here called an "adjudication" of vagrancy the effect of a conviction for an offence; depending, as this definition of vagrancy does, upon a combination of circumstances, none of which are unlawful by the general law of England (see section 30 of the Order in Council), or by the terms of the Order in Council itself (see section 38 of that Order), nor even prohibited antecedently to "adjudication," by these or any other Regulations.

But whether the vagrancy, or the omission to give security is intended to constitute the offence, the Regulations purport to authorize the Consul, in the event of security not being forthcoming, "to provide for the safe keeping of such person or persons adjudged vagrants, by imprisoning him or them for any period not exceeding one calendar month; and to order and cause the removal of such person or persons from the Consular district, by sending him or them to Her Majesty's Colony of Hong Kong in any British ship of war or merchant-vessel, under warrant for his or their conveyance," &c.

Upon this it is to be observed, that although imprisonment may certainly be awarded, as a punishment, for an offence against any Regulations duly made, after a proper trial and conviction, these provisions seem to contemplate a different kind of imprisonment, "for the safe keeping" of the vagrant, without any trial or conviction for any offence, unless the previous adjudication of vagrancy, upon an "inquiry" by the Consul, was meant to be regarded in that light.

And, secondly, they purport to authorize, besides a month's imprisonment, the deportation of the vagrant to Hong Kong. But deportation is not a punishment which the Consular Agents in Japan are empowered to inflict for any breach of Regulations, by virtue merely of the 4th section of the Order in Council. And it appears to us to be impossible to bring the offence (if any) constituted by these Regulations, within any of the cases defined by sections 21, 22, 23, and 24, of the Order in Council, in which the deportation of British subjects from Japan is authorized by law.

This objection alone is, in our opinion, enough to be fatal to the Regulations; for it is evident, from the sections of the Order in Council to which we have referred, that Her Majesty did not intend to place it in the power of the Consuls to deport any of her subjects from Japan, unless under the particular circumstances there contemplated.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 420.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 2.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, December 1, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th November ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter dated the 26th November ultimo, from Mr. J. D. Hamilton, inquiring whether the protection of Her Majesty's Government could be extended to an Irish gentleman who has been naturalized as an American citizen, and is anxious to resume his nationality as a British subject previous to his returning to the United States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to this application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that inasmuch as this gentleman is a naturalized subject of the United States, your Lordship cannot promise to interfere on his behalf as against the authorities of the United States, in respect of any obligation which the law of that country may impose upon naturalized subjects resident within the limits of its territory.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 421.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 2.)

UNITED STATES AND BRAZIL.

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, December 2, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 27th October and the 10th November last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† a further despatch which has been received from Consul Westwood‡ respecting the three vessels stated to have been purchased by Mr. Allen, and which have been detained at Rio de Janeiro, and to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, with reference to the documents of which copies are now furnished by Mr. Westwood, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to add to our former Reports.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there can be little doubt that the opinion expressed in Captain Craufurd's letter to Admiral Warren (September 28, 1863) contains the true history of this case: namely, that the Brazilian authorities, alarmed by the threats of the United States' General Webb, and the prospect of a collision between British and American ships in waters adjacent to the Brazilian territory, have practically invoked the aid of the Civil Judges to give them an excuse for detaining the vessels in question. But the fact of legal proceedings relating to these vessels (however little creditable to the Brazilian Government and Courts of Justice) being de novo actually pending, renders it prudent, if not necessary, to await the result of those proceedings, under that protest, which in substance the Consul has made. The fact that the United States' ship of war the "Mohican" did pursue the "Gracie" from the Brazilian waters, and on her return also returned thither, is patent, and is not dealt with by the Marquis d'Abrantes. With respect to the claim advanced by General Webb to all the property of the enemy of the United States, by reason of its ipso facto confiscation, we have fully expressed our opinion in our Report of the 27th October last, to which we beg now to refer. We have, in that Report, submitted to your Lordship that it would be expedient that the whole matter should be referred to Lord Lyons, in order that he may present the views of Her Majesty's Government to that of the United States. But we incline to the opinion that it would be prudent, should this step not already have been taken, to wait for the decision of the Brazilian tribunals upon the question of municipal law affecting these vessels, which, according to the statement of the Marquis d'Abrantes, is now before them.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 422.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 2.)

UNITED STATES

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, December 2, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston (No. 13, August 12), respecting the compulsory enlistment of British subjects in the service of the so-styled Confederate States, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon. And Mr. Hammond was pleased to add that the previous despatch referred to by Mr. Lynn did not appear to have been received at the Foreign Office.

---

* Pages 280 and 290.

† Consul Westwood, No. 29; Admiralty, October 5, 1863; Consul Westwood, No. 32; Consul Westwood, No. 34; Mr. B. F. Allen, October 28; Consul Westwood, No. 44; Admiralty, November 26, 1863.

‡ Consul Westwood, No. 45, October 23, 1863.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That on the general subject to which these papers relate, we adhere to the opinions expressed in our former Reports.

That with respect to the present communications from Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston, we can only suggest that he should be instructed to persevere in remonstrating in every particular instance in which conscription takes place of a British subject who has not had the option of leaving the Confederate States tendered to him, and who is desirous of leaving them, unless such British subject be a person who can be proved to have been naturalized in the Confederate States, or to have voted at elections, or enjoyed other political rights or privileges to which aliens generally are not entitled, upon the faith of an assumed citizenship, or of a declared intention to become naturalized in those States, or to be a person who has voluntarily engaged in the naval or military service of the Confederate States during the present war.

It is to be observed that the letters, at least of Captains Carrington, Yancey, and Walsh, to Her Majesty's Consul, are written in a fair and conciliatory spirit.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 423.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 3, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a collection of despatches received from Mr. Walker,* who has been acting as British Consul at Charleston since the withdrawal by the Federal Government of Mr. Bunch's exequatur, relating to the circumstances under which the Government of the Confederate States have prohibited the exercise of Consular functions in those States by British Agents.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a collection of printed papers on the same subject, as well as three despatches from the Acting British Consul at Havana (Nos. 15, 19, and 20); and was to state to us that Her Majesty's Government have it in contemplation to send to the Confederate States an Agent to communicate with the Government of those States respecting the manner in which British subjects are dealt with therein, and also respecting other matters; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion as to the instructions which may properly be given to that Agent on the matters adverted to in the papers sent to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Agent who may be sent to the Confederate States should be instructed to assent to the principle insisted on by Mr. Benjamin, that the question of the exemption of British subjects resident in the Confederate States from compulsory military service against the United States is one for discussion between Her Majesty's Government and the de facto Government of the Confederate States, and not one as to which individuals ought to be advised, by Her Majesty's accredited Agents in the Confederate territory, to take the law into their own hands, and to define for themselves the limits of the obedience due from them to the Government of the country in which they reside. In cases of conflict between the permanent allegiance due by a subject to his own Sovereign, and the temporary allegiance due by every sojourner to the laws of the country in which he may happen to be, it is impossible for the authorities of the latter country to recognize the right of individuals to assign any limits whatever to their own obligations to obey its laws, and if by the operation of those laws the rights of a foreign Sovereign are violated, it is for that Sovereign to remonstrate, and to seek the proper redress, as is usual between nations.

---

* Acting Consul Walker, Nos. 112, 113, 122, 123, 125, 126, 128, 129, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, and 142.

We think, therefore, that Mr. Fullarton misconceived his duty when he gave the advice to Her Majesty's subjects within the Confederate States which has been made use of by the authorities of those States as a pretext for dismissing Her Majesty's Consular Agents, although we do not apprehend that he intended by that advice to recommend any persons actually enrolled as soldiers in the Confederate service "to throw down their arms in the face of the enemy" (as is represented by Mr. Benjamin). Even the language of Mr. Walker, though much more guarded, and not fairly susceptible of any similar interpretation, may, perhaps, also be admitted (especially when viewed in connection with that of Mr. Fullarton) to be open to some reasonable exception.

Upon the main question itself, as to the liability of British subjects within the Confederate territory to conscription, or to forced military service, we understand the claim of the Confederate authorities to be, in the first place, limited to those who are domiciled in the Confederate States, in the sense of that term adopted by writers on private international law; and, secondly, to be asserted as to such domiciled persons (as distinguished from persons naturalized, or admitted de facto to the exercise of the peculiar privileges of citizenship, concerning whom no question arises) upon the ground that, by the laws which have been passed in the Confederacy since the commencement of the war, and particularly by the Act of the 16th March, 1861 (see Governor Brown's letter, at page 6 of the printed papers), sufficient notice and opportunity had been given to enable them to leave the country, if they had been disposed to do so, and that having, nevertheless, remained in the country till the present time, they must now be deemed to have elected to remain, on the footing of those enactments, subject to military service, and to all other burdens of citizenship.

This mode of stating the argument reduces the question from one of principle to one depending upon the just appreciation of facts. The same rule ought, undoubtedly, to be applied within the Confederate as within the United States. The real question is, whether the situation of the Confederate States in the present war, blockaded by sea, and with constant military operations covering their land frontier, has not been such as to make the option to leave their territory, said to have been offered by the Confederate Legislative to British subjects previously domiciled within it, merely illusory? If so (and we conceive that, generally, it must be so), no real and bonâ fide opportunity of removal has been afforded, and British subjects cannot in those circumstances, without a violation of the comity hitherto observed among nations, and of the spirit of the Treaties under which they began their residence in the Southern States, be required to render compulsory military service.

We observe that in a letter of General Beauregard some endeavour is made to distinguish the cases of British subjects who have been employed as workmen by the Confederate Government in their arsenals at Charleston and elsewhere, upon the ground that, by accepting such employment, they violated the neutrality enjoined by their own Sovereign, and so disentitled themselves to Her Majesty's protection. Such an argument might, we think, be valid, if applied to persons who had voluntarily enlisted in the naval or military service of the Confederate States. But we do not understand that the workmen spoken of by General Beauregard were employed in any naval or military service, and, if not, it does not appear to us that Her Majesty's protection ought to be withheld from them, only because the works upon which they have been employed were connected with the war service of the Confederate Government.

We think that the distinction taken, under your Lordship's instructions, by Her Majesty's late Consular Agents between service to suppress insurrection, and to defend the homes and families of the citizens against outrage, and general service in the Confederate army, is well founded; and we cannot but observe that the Confederate authorities in enlisting British subjects ostensibly in a local force for the former purposes, and then transferring them to General Bragg's army, have taken a course not only contrary to good faith, but indicative of a consciousness on their part that the object which they really had in view could not be openly avowed and justified.

The above remarks are sufficient to show in what sense we think the Agent about to be sent to the Confederate States ought to be instructed, with reference to the matters adverted to in the papers before us.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 424.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 4.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 3, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 10th of September, 1861,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers bearing on the matter,† a letter from Mr. Hayman, dated the 11th November ultimo, inclosing a prospectus of a Company to be formed for the purpose of running the blockade of the ports of the so-styled Confederate States, in shot-proof vessels, and inquiring whether Her Majesty's Government take exception to such a project; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Hayman's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us to be incumbent on your Lordship to give any further counsel or advice to Mr. Hayman; and that the proper answer to that person would be to refer him to the former letter upon a similar subject which he received from your Lordship, and to the admonition therein contained.

He may at the same time be informed that Her Majesty's Government are not to be understood as affording the slightest countenance to the projected Company, as to the legality of the objects of which (whether fully or only partially disclosed by the prospectus which he has sent) the projectors will, of course, have the ordinary means of obtaining competent advice.

We think it proper, on our own part, to add, that a scheme like this is by no means unlikely to be resorted to as a cloak for future attempts to violate the Foreign Enlistment Act, by the equipment of vessels really intended for the belligerent service of the Confederate States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 425.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 3, 1863.

TURKEY.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt (Nos. 141, 142, and 151)), respecting an appeal made by a person of the name of Ninet to the French Judicial Court at Alexandria, in the matter of proceedings taken against him for contempt of Court, by direction of Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Fonblanque.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at the Porte and from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople upon the same subject; and was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps, if any, which Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in taking in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the evidence before us establishes that a contempt of the Consular Court was committed by Mr. Ninet.

We much regret that this question should have been raised before the French Consular Court. Such a proceeding appears to us extremely injudicious, and to be attended with very embarrassing consequences.

Before we express any opinion as to the powers of the English Consular Court in cases of this description, we should be glad to be further informed by Mr. Fonblanque what his own practice is, and what that of the French or other Christian Consular Courts in the dominions of the Sultan is in such cases.

We should also desire to know, more accurately than we do at present, what are the local limits within which these Courts are admitted both by the Ottoman authorities and by the Representatives of other Christian Powers, to exercise an undisturbed jurisdiction, whatever it be, in cases of contempt; e.g., Does this jurisdiction extend beyond that of the room in which the Court is holden? If beyond, to what extent? Is there any place of confinement attached to each Consular Court? If there be, is the order for the imprisonment of a person therein respected, both by the Ottoman and Christian authorities, without reference to his nationality? Has such a case ever before occurred in which a Consular Judge of one nation has, directly or indirectly, prosecuted before the Consular Judge of another nation a person for contempt of Court? Or (on the other hand) in which he has punished, by his own authority, an offender of another nation not a suitor before him?

We think that, with further and fuller information on these points, we should be in a better condition to tender advice to your Lordship as to this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 426.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 4.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 4, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* further despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons, respecting the case of the "Victor";† and to request that we would be good enough to take the same into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether we saw anything therein to cause us to alter the opinion expressed in our Report of the 26th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the additional papers now submitted to us do not induce us to change the opinion which we have already had the honour to submit to your Lordship in our former Report on this case. Indeed, we do not perceive any reference in the letter of the District Attorney of the United States, to the ground on which our opinion rests, viz., that the "Juniata" lay in wait in a

---

* See Reports for 1861, page 214.

† Mr. Hayman, August 29, 1861, and September 4, 1861; Law Officers, September 10, 1861; to Mr. Hayman, September 19, 1861; Mr. Hayman, September 21, 1861; to Mr. Hayman, September 30, 1861.

* Consul Archibald, Nos. 102 and 116; Lord Lyons, No. 650; Consul-General Crawford, No. 29; Lord Lyons, Nos. 651 and 661; Consul Archibald, No. 127; Lord Lyons, No. 676; Admiralty, August 17; Lord Lyons, No. 687; to Mr. Stuart, No. 501; Lord Lyons, Nos. 772 and 772, November 3, 1863.

† Lord Lyons, Nos. 794 and 805

1863

neutral harbour for the "Victor," and followed her out of port for the purpose of visitation and capture.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 427.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 4, 1863.

ITALY.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Naples (No. 73) inclosing an application from Mr. Charles Monticelli to be recognized as a British subject, and to be furnished with an English passport; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion upon this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Charles Monticelli was, perhaps, not sui juris till the age of 25, and could not have acted independently of parents or guardians in this matter till 1859-60. No very long interval may, therefore, have elapsed between his coming of age and his seeking a British passport. He does not appear to have ever been employed in Italian military or civil service. He is legally, as far as Great Britain is concerned, a British subject. He asks for a passport, as a British subject, for British dominions; and under these circumstances we are of opinion that it should be granted to him.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 428.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 5, 1863.

AUSTRIA.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter, dated the 3rd December instant, from the Austrian Ambassador at this Court, respecting the wish of his Government to be allowed to inspect the iron-clads now under seizure at Liverpool, with a view to their ultimate purchase if they should be offered for sale.

And as, independently of any other consideration connected with the legal proceedings taken against these vessels, it is not desirable to afford the Austrian Government, at the present time, any facilities for acquiring these vessels, your Lordship proposed to return to Count Apponyi the answer, of which a draft was inclosed, if such answer should meet with our concurrence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the answer which your Lordship proposes to return to Count Apponyi is perfectly proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 429.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 7, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosure, from the Acting British Consul at Charleston (No. 118, August 31, 1863), respecting the loss incurred at the hands of United States' troops by the Rev. F. Lightbourn, a British subject residing at Jackson, North Carolina; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government can properly apply to the Government of the United States for compensation for the damage sustained by the Rev. Mr. Lightbourn.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the outrage appears to have been unprovoked, not connected in any way with the proper discharge of military duties, and not growing out of the inevitable necessities of war in the country of an enemy. But it would seem that Mr. Lightbourn, though an English subject, is or was officiating as clergyman of an American congregation or parish; if so, we think that he has so incorporated himself into the institutions and territory of the Federal or Confederate States, as the case may be, as to render it unavoidable that he should suffer, like all other persons resident in that territory, from the evils incident to a state of war, without redress; unless, indeed, redress can be obtained, upon his own application, from any American authorities.

It is not possible, nor indeed advisable, that Her Majesty's Government should undertake to protect subjects, domiciled within the territory of either belligerent, from plunder and violence, however unjustifiable, when committed (as in this case it appears to have been) by troops engaged in hostile operations within their enemy's country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 430.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 9, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying memorial from John Smith, complaining of his having been arrested and imprisoned without proper trial at New York, and of the hardships to which he was subjected when in prison, and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government can interfere to procure redress for this person.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the nature of the complaint and all the circumstances of the case, and especially to the admitted fact that John Smith remained four months at New York after his release from prison without preferring any complaint, or making any application on the subject of his present Memorial to Lord Lyons or Her Majesty's Consul at New York, we are of opinion that no adequate ground is laid for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 431.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 10.)

Doctors' Commons, December 9, 1863.

My Lord,

CHILE.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st of December instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 21st of January last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 74), respecting the administration of the property of a British subject named Clark or Clarkson, supposed to have been a convict; and to request that I would take this despatch, together with the previous papers, into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course Mr. Thomson should now pursue in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it was an act within the abstract competence of the Court at Santiago to refuse to allow the intervention, on behalf of Her Majesty, in the suit relating to this convict's will. That Court, in substance, rests its refusal upon two grounds: 1, that all the property disposed of by Clark is within the territory of Chile; 2, that the sentence of foreign criminal law does not follow the criminal into a foreign territory where there is no Treaty of Extradition. The Court at Santiago ought, according to the usages of comity, to have allowed evidence to be given that the deceased being a criminal, under sentence for his crime, was incapable of acquiring a new domicile, or of making a will under the law of the country of a new domicile.

But I am of opinion that it is not necessary that Mr. Thomson should be instructed to take any further steps in this matter: those which he has taken appear to me very proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 432.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 10.)

Doctors' Commons, December 9, 1863.

My Lord,

FRANCE.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd of December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated the 27th of November ultimo, from Mr. Chamberlin, relative to a claim for tonnage dues which has been made by the French Customs authorities upon the master of the British schooner "Foxhound," on the ground that Zante, from which island the "Foxhound" had arrived at Dunkirk with a cargo of currants, was not a British Colony; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am unable to discover upon what ground Zante is to be considered as a British Colony. In the Treaty of Commerce, signed at Paris 1860, no mention is made of the Ionian Islands. By the Treaty of 1826, Article VI, it is provided that its provisions "shall be reciprocally extended and in force in all the possessions, subject to the respective dominions of the Contracting Parties, in Europe." I am of opinion that these words do not include the Ionian Islands; they are not, properly speaking, British dominions, and so it was formally decided by the Judge of the Admiralty during the Russian war.

Special stipulations have been made with foreign Powers when it has been intended to include the Ionian Islands within the benefit of our Treaties; e. g., with Sardinia (Hertslet, vol. ix, p. 709), with Russia (ibid., vol. x, p. 1063).

I am not aware that France has entered into any similar arrangement to apply the Treaty of 1826, in the last Commercial Treaty, to the Ionian Islands, and I am not informed that France has ever acted as if such a stipulation existed. I am therefore of opinion that the imposition of these tonnage dues furnishes no ground for remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

---

* Page 26.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 433.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 10, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers, as marked in the inclosed list, respecting the case of the ship "Rappahannock," formerly under the name of the "Victor," one of the vessels of Her Majesty's navy, which has recently been sold out of the Government service, and has been conveyed out of the port of Sheerness under the circumstances stated in the inclosed correspondence, to be employed as a vessel of war in the service of the so-styled Confederate States; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion on the following points:—

1. In what terms Mr. Adams' letter of the 28th ultimo should be answered.
2. Whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in watching for the "Rappahannock" as she leaves Calais, and seizing her in the Channel.
3. Whether they would be justified in seizing her if she entered a port in the United Kingdom, or in one of the British Colonies.
4. Whether they would be justified in prohibiting her entrance into a British port, home or colonial, and refusing to allow her to obtain supplies.

Mr. Hammond was to add that your Lordship would be happy to be furnished with any other observations which we may see occasion to offer with regard to this vessel; and that your Lordship would be glad to receive our report on these matters as soon as possible, in order that if we should be of opinion that any steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government, no time may be lost in proceeding with them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have fully considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us to be a case of the very gravest importance, and to call for prompt and vigorous measures on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

An affront, accompanied by fraud, has been inflicted upon the honour and dignity of Her Majesty by the conduct of persons professing to be the agents of the Confederate Government. To the accomplishment of this fraud, one of Her Majesty's dockyards and some of the artisans employed in it have been subservient; and an attempt has been made, if not to kidnap some of these artisans, and others of Her Majesty's subjects, to seduce them from their allegiance and to engage them in a foreign service, contrary to the law of the land and the express prohibition of their Sovereign.

We are of opinion that in reply to Mr. Adams your Lordship should state:—

(1.) That the attention of Her Majesty's Government has been and still is directed to the general circumstances of this case, and to the particular facts alleged in the depositions which Mr. Adams has forwarded to your Lordship, and that there is a firm determination on the part of Her Majesty's Government both to vindicate, with respect to the Confederate belligerent, the neutrality of Her Majesty, and also to put in force the laws of this country against any persons who may appear to have offended against them in this matter.

(2.) We have further to say that, without expressing a positive opinion that the gross and fraudulent violation of Her Majesty's neutrality which has been committed might not warrant, even without previous communication with the Confederate States, so extreme a measure as the watching for the "Rappahannock," and the seizing her after she has left French waters, in the Channel, we do not, after a most anxious consideration of all the circumstances, advise Her Majesty's Government to take this step. But we think that Her Majesty's Government ought, without delay, to send an agent to the Government of the Confederate States, with instructions to express the very serious light in which Her Majesty's Government view this transaction, and their confident expectation that the Confederate Government will hasten to disavow and censure this act of the persons professing to be or acting as their agents in this country; and that Her Majesty's Government must require as a just reparation for the affront offered to the dignity of the Crown, for the flagrant abuse of the hospitality and deliberate infringement of the neutrality of British territory, that the "Rappahannock" be given up to Her Majesty, upon receipt of the money which was paid for her to Her Majesty's Government.

1863

That having made this demand Her Majesty's Representative should be instructed to wait for the answer of the Confederate Government, and in the event of the answer conveying the refusal of that Government to comply with this demand, to signify that he has received Her Majesty's directions to the following effect, namely (3 and 4), to inform the Confederate Government that Her Majesty's Government will give orders that neither the "Rappahannock," nor the "Alabama," nor any other vessel which, after being fitted out with any kind of equipment in this country, has proceeded, when at sea, to hoist the Confederate flag, shall be allowed to enter any port or harbour of Her Majesty's dominions in any part of the world, and that if they do enter they shall be seized by Her Majesty's naval and military forces, and held in custody until Her Majesty's pleasure be taken with respect to them; and to apprize distinctly the Confederate Government that if, hereafter, any vessel shall repeat the offence of the "Rappahannock," Her Majesty will deem herself compelled to vindicate the dignity of her Crown, and the neutrality of her realm, by issuing orders to Her Majesty's ships to pursue and capture such vessel upon the high seas.

It will be understood that we think Her Majesty's Government will be warranted in doing that which is suggested by the fourth query in Mr. Hammond's letter, in the event of satisfaction being refused by the Confederate States.

We are much inclined to think that Messrs. Gordon and Coleman ought to be indicted, but we cannot express a positive opinion upon this point until we have received and considered further evidence with respect to it.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 434.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 11.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 11, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 17th of March last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† relating to the case, the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York,‡ inclosing a copy of a Judgment of the District Circuit Court confirming the condemnation of the "Albert;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us that the sentence of the Circuit Court was improper, or (so far as we can judge) unwarranted by the evidence laid before the Court from which the appeal was prosecuted. We see no reason for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Page 77.

† Acting Consul Edwards, Nos. 57 and 61; to Mr. Stuart, No. 24; Mr. Stuart, No. 198; to Mr. Stuart, No. 145; Lord Lyons, Nos. 96 and 133; to Lord Lyons, No. 143.

‡ Consul Archibald, No. 202, November 16, 1863.

No. 435.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 11.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 11, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters, dated the 28th October and 5th November ultimo, from the Rev. A. C. Walshe, complaining of certain proceedings in Canada on the part of the Government of the United States, which he states to be in breach of the neutrality laws of the realm.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed a letter, dated the 3rd December instant, from the Colonial Office, stating that the Duke of Newcastle, before giving instructions on the subject to the Governor-General of Canada, would wish to be informed which of the acts complained of would constitute breaches of neutrality. And to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Colonial Office.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, of the five facts specified by Mr. Walshe as breaches of neutrality, there are only two which, if capable of being substantiated, would fall under that category, namely, the enlistment of Federal soldiers in Canada, and the delivery of deserters from the Federal army by the Canadian to Federal authorities. At least, we are not aware of any Treaty which can warrant such extradition. The purchase of horses and river-steamers, and the transit of passengers by railways, are no violations of neutrality, unless there be something more in each case to give an illegal character to the transaction than we are able to infer from Mr. Walshe's letters. The statements as to the recruiting, and the apprehension of deserters, though at present too vague to found any immediate action of the Canadian Government, deserve the attention of that Government; and ought, if they prove upon inquiry to be true, to be censured as to the past, and prohibited as to the future, besides being made the subject of remonstrance with the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 436.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 11.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 11, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 3rd instant,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of the instructions which it is proposed to address to Mr. Crawford, Her Majesty's Consul-General in Cuba, whom your Lordship has selected as an Agent to proceed from this country, where he has been on leave of absence, to Richmond, Virginia, for the purpose of entering into communications with the so-called Confederate Government on the subject of the compulsory enlistment of British subjects in the Confederate army, and also with regard to the attempts of the Confederate Government to use the ports of the United Kingdom for the purpose of constructing ships of war to be equipped and armed as cruizers against the United States of America.

And to request that we would take these proposed instructions into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether they are right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Page 316.

That we are of opinion that the letter, with the slight additions suggested in the margin, is proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 437.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 12.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 12, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that towards the end of last month information was received by Her Majesty's Government, as set forth in the letters inclosed from the Treasury and from the Earl of Donoughmore (dated respectively the 21st and 25th of November ultimo), that the United States' steamer of war "Kearsarge" had, during her stay at Queenstown, enlisted various British subjects to serve on board her.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship lost no time in communicating with Mr. Adams on the subject, and that he inclosed a copy of your Lordship's letter and of Mr. Adams' reply,* together with a draft of a rejoinder which your Lordship is about to address to Mr. Adams, in consequence of the further information contained in the accompanying letters from the Treasury and Board of Admiralty.†

The point, however, to which Mr. Hammond was more particularly and more immediately to draw our attention, is the position of the seamen who were embarked on board the "Kearsarge" at Queenstown, and who after an interval of a month have been relanded there from the "Kearsarge," and who are now in confinement at Cork awaiting the directions of Her Majesty's Government.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would report to your Lordship with as little delay as possible our opinion as to the course which should be taken in regard to those seamen, whether they are liable to prosecution for enlisting in the naval service of the United States, and if so whether it would be advisable to proceed against them and in what manner.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 10th instant, stating, that with reference to his former letter of that day's date respecting the men relanded from the "Kearsarge," he was directed by your Lordship to inclose for our consideration a further letter (December 10) from the Admiralty on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think these men ought to be prosecuted. Their own statements, as reported in Admiral Jones' letter of the 7th instant, seem enough to convict them (i. e. such of them as made those statements) of an offence against the 2nd section of the Foreign Enlistment Act; and (although it does not yet appear, whether the individuals in custody can be identified by John Dunn, or by the deponents whose declarations were forwarded by Mr. Mason, through Lord Donoughmore, as parties to the particular transactions of which those deponents spoke) the truth of the general case seems to be fully corroborated by those earlier depositions.

With reference to the statement of the Captain of the "Kearsarge," and to the further papers, we have to observe, that whatever credence may be given to the somewhat improbable story of the seamen having secreted themselves on board the ship without the knowledge or connivance of its officers, and to the attempted explanation of Lieutenant Thornton, still, the intention to enlist British subjects having been denied and disavowed by those officers, and the seamen having been put on shore, we do not see any necessity for further remonstrance with the United States' Government. But we adhere to the opinion that the men should be prosecuted. It results, even from Lieutenant Thornton's own statement, that they came and remained on board the ship for the purpose of enlistment; and that, when she sailed from Brest (if not sooner) their names were borne upon the ship's books as part of her crew.

With respect to the mode of proceeding, we conceive, that the offenders ought to be taken before a Justice of the Peace, residing at or near Queenstown, and committed for trial at the Assizes (if the evidence produced against them satisfies the Justice) in the ordinary course of law, under section 4 of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* To Mr. Adams, November 30; Mr. Adams, December 7, 1863.

† Admiralty, December 7; Treasury, December 7, 1863.

No. 438.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 12.)

UNITED STATES.

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 12, 1863.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th of December instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 10th instant respecting the proceedings of the United States' steamer of war "Kearsarge" at Queenstown, he was directed to transmit to us a letter, dated the 10th of December instant, from the Board of Admiralty, by which it appears that the "Kearsarge" has arrived at Devonport, and asked permission to communicate with the United States' Consul at that port, which permission has been granted; that the general question as to the proceedings of the "Kearsarge" at Queenstown was before us; and it is therefore more particularly with reference to the declaration of the Commander that the "Kearsarge" was employed in watching the Confederate steamer "Florida," now at Brest, and irrespective of the course which it may be proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in regard to the alleged enlistment of men at Queenstown, that he was directed by your Lordship to ask us whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in refusing to the "Kearsarge" admission into the ports of the United Kingdom, which she is evidently using with a view to belligerent operations at no great distance from those ports.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if Her Majesty's Government are satisfied that the "Kearsarge" ought, under the circumstances, to be regarded as making use of Plymouth or any other of Her Majesty's ports, as "a station or place of resort for any warlike purpose" (see Article 2 of the Rules published by Her Majesty's Order, in the "London Gazette" of the 31st of January, 1862), they will clearly be justified in refusing to that ship, under such circumstances, admission into any such ports of the United Kingdom.

Whether the present visit of the "Kearsarge" to Plymouth ought to be regarded in this light may be, to a certain extent, a consideration to be governed by the opinion of naval authorities. But having regard to the previous circumstances respecting the enlistment, and the admitted fact that the "Kearsarge" is employed in watching the "Florida;" the rapidity with which a transit by steam is made across the Channel, the great importance of preventing, as far as possible, the Channel from being the scene of American hostilities, and of avoiding the evils of making the opposite ports of England and France places from which hostilities are to originate, we think that it would be within the spirit of Her Majesty's orders, and consistent with the general obligations of a neutral Power, to refuse at present the admission of the "Kearsarge" into the ports of the United Kingdom.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1863

No. 439.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 12.)

Doctors' Commons, December 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 31st of August last,* on the question raised by the United States' gun-boat "Rhode Island" having anchored in the Mathewtown Roadstead, Bahamas, without any previous communication with the local authorities, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,† the correspondence which has since passed with the Colonial Office,‡ with regard to the expediency of re-publishing in the Gazette the Regulations of the 31st of January, 1862, with an explanatory letter annexed; and that your Lordship had proposed that the letter, which by your Lordship's direction Mr. Hammond had addressed to the Colonial Office on the 11th of September, should serve as such explanatory letter; but I should perceive from the Colonial Office letter of the 28th of September last, that the instruction to the Governor of the Bahamas which accompanied it, was suggested by the Duke of Newcastle as a fitting letter to be appended to a re-publication of the regulations. And Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this matter again into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the expediency of re-publishing the regulations of the 31st of January, 1862, in the "Gazette," with the instructions to the Governor of the Bahamas, of which a copy is inclosed in the Colonial Office letter of the 28th of September, appended thereto.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to annex a further correspondence with the Colonial Office bearing upon the same question.§

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it would be expedient to re-publish the Regulations of the 31st of January, 1862, with the instructions to the Governor of the Bahamas proposed in the Colonial Office letter of the 28th of September, appended thereto.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 440.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Adams inclosing a copy of a letter dated the 7th December instant, from the United States' Consul at Liverpool covering a number of depositions, all going, as Mr. Adams states, to establish in the clearest manner the existence of a regular Office at Liverpool for the enlistment and payment of British subjects for the purpose of carrying on war against the Government and people of the United States.

And to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the depositions transmitted by Mr. Adams disclose a systematic violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, which in our opinion calls for decisive measures on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We think that a strong case is established (if unanswered) against two at least of the partners of Jones and Co., viz., W. Jones and M. Hyatt, and against one of their clerks named Wilding.

We do not collect clearly from the depositions whether Mr. Bold, the other partner, is identified as taking part in any of the transactions spoken to, nor whether a case can be made against another clerk, who is referred to, but not by name.

We advise that charges be preferred before a Justice, in the manner prescribed by the fourth section of the Foreign Enlistment Act against Jones, Hyatt, and Wilding, for engaging or endeavouring to engage to enlist, &c., or to go or agree to go or embark, &c., for the purpose or with intent to be enlisted &c., Stanley, Conolly, and Glassbrook, in violation of the second section of the Act. We think it advisable that a charge should also be preferred against them of a conspiracy to violate that section of the Act. Under this charge, anything said or done by any of them in pursuance of a common criminal design will be admissible in evidence, and the mode of proof may be facilitated. These observations apply also to Bold, and the other clerk, if proof can be obtained against them.

We understand that Barrett, who is described as the ship's yeoman, is still on board her.

We have to observe, that the facts disclosed in the depositions furnish additional grounds to those already existing, for strong remonstrance to the Confederate Government, on account of the systematic violation of our neutrality by their agents in this country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 441.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 12, 1863.

My Lord,

TURKEY.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th November instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 22nd of September last, respecting certain points in the construction of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 9th of January, 1863, relative to Consular jurisdiction in the dominions of the Porte, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of the instruction which, after consultation with the Secretary of State for India, your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople upon the subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter which had been subsequently received from the India Office detailing the circumstances of a failure of justice which had occurred in respect of the murder of a British Indian at Kerbela, in Turkish Arabia, and containing certain suggestions of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India in regard to the Order in Council above alluded to.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to inclose a copy of the Order in Council, together with former papers, and to request that we would take them into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. As to Sir C. Wood's suggestion with reference to native Indian British subjects in Turkey (the expediency of which may be assumed) that, inasmuch as the provisions of the existing Order in Council are positive law, it would seem to be more consistent to carry that suggestion into effect by a supplemental Order in Council, than to instruct Her Majesty's Consul at Bagdad to assume and exercise, with regard to a numerous class of persons, a power of dispensation which does not legally belong to him.

2. That, as to the murder of the British Indian at Kerbela, there can be no doubt that the murderer ought to have been sent to Malta for trial (Rule 45);

---

* Page 242.

† To Admiralty, January 31, 1862; Lord Lyons, Nos. 558 and 636; to Colonial Office, July 10 and August 3; Colonial Office, August 17, 1863.

‡ To Colonial Office, September 11; Colonial Office, September 28; to Colonial Office, October 1, 1863.

§ Colonial Office, November 19; to Colonial Office, November 25; Colonial Office, December 7, 1863.

1863

and we do not see why he was sent to Bombay; but if, as seems probable, it would be expedient that Bombay should be made a place for trial of British Indians, this must be done by a Supplemental Order in Council.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 442.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 11th of September,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 767, October 26, 1863), inclosing copies of the evidence and other documents relating to the case of the "Springbok;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and the further papers submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That we have still to regret the absence of any Judgment, with reasons from the Judge who condemned this ship.

The long delay in the delivery of such a judgment, in a case of so much importance (the Decree being executed, and the ship and cargo sold under it, while the reasons for the conclusion of the Court are still unknown), is a grievance to the owners of the ship and cargo, deserving, we think, that some remonstrance on the subject should be addressed by Lord Lyons to the United States' Government, regard being had to the practical injury thereby inflicted upon the owners.

In the meanwhile, forming our opinion on the evidence now before us, we are at a loss to find sufficient legal justification for the sentence of condemnation in this case, especially as it does not appear that any opportunity of further proof was offered to the claimants, on any points as to which the Judge may have thought the papers and the evidence equivocal or unsatisfactory, or the information afforded by them imperfect.

These facts appear to be uncontroverted, namely, that the "Springbok" was seized on the high seas, 200 miles from Nassau, in the direct and proper course for that place, and taken 900 miles to be adjudicated upon at New York; and that all her papers on board were regular (the absence of the invoice is immaterial): they were all consistent with what was sworn to by all the witnesses in preparatorio, namely, that it was intended to discharge and deliver the cargo at Nassau; and the charter-party (as we collect) was for the delivery of the cargo to the consignees at Nassau, on payment of freight there. It does, indeed, appear by the Shipping Articles, that the crew were engaged for a voyage, out and home, of about twelve months, which was to extend, after her arrival at Nassau, "if required," to any other port (inter alia) of the "American States;" and the control over that contingent destination seems to have been given to the same persons at Nassau, who were the consignees of the cargo.

The most that can be said of this is, that the Shipping Articles and other papers might be consistent with an intention, on the part of the charterers, that, after arriving at Nassau, the ship might be ordered by the consignees to proceed, with her cargo, to a blockaded port; but they do not prove any such intention: and, according to all principle and precedent, if the case had been decided upon the papers and the depositions alone, the vessel and cargo must have been released, probably with costs and damages.

It was found necessary to examine the cargo in order to find a sort of ex post facto justification of the seizure.

This cannot, of course, be said to be absolutely unlawful, but it is a mode of proceeding open to much abuse, most vexatious to the neutral, and which ought not to be resorted to except in cases where the state of the papers or the evidence of the witnesses generates a suspicion in the first instance.

It is said that certain portions of the cargo were contraband; and we are disposed to think that there were sufficient grounds for holding them to be so, apart from the consideration of their destination to a neutral port. But the nature of the cargo afforded no evidence that the destination of this or of any other part of the cargo was not to the neutral port of Nassau.

There was no evidence of an intention either to tranship any part of the cargo at Nassau for a blockaded port, or to make a continuous voyage from London to a Confederate port, touching at Nassau on the way; and we are at present wholly unable to conceive upon what ground the papers were pronounced to be false and simulated. To assume that goods, even of a nature exclusively serviceable for the army and navy of Confederate States, and avowedly designed for the supply of that market, might not have a real and bonâ fide destination to Nassau, would be to contradict the notorious fact that a large and profitable trade is actively carried on there with the Confederate States.

On the whole, we are disposed to agree with the opinion of Mr. Edwards that the sentence was wrong, and ought to be reversed.

Still we hesitate to advise Her Majesty's Government officially to interfere in this matter before we have seen the reasons upon which the Judge founded his sentence; and we must add that, even if we had the advantage of seeing them, we should, looking to our own practice, be disinclined to advise such interference, at all events before the case had been heard before the Court of Appeal.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 443.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 12, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th November ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (Nos. 193 and 198), inclosing copies of the judicial proceedings in the cases of the vessels "Louisa Agnes," "J. H. Foone," "Prince Leopold," "Sarah Starr," and "Aigburth," and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an appeal is or may be in course of prosecution from all these Judgments; and that, with respect to all, we are of opinion, that the result of the appeal should be known before any final decision be taken by Her Majesty's Government as to the necessity or expediency of any official interference on behalf of the claimants with the United States' Government.

Subject to this general observation we think that the "Louisa Agnes" was properly condemned on the evidence, for having sailed with intent to break the blockade, and for being seized at last, though twice released in the attempt to do so. The question of ill-treatment by the captors of the prize crew is, no doubt, one of a serious character, and the averment of such ill-treatment must always require the careful consideration of Her Majesty's Government. Nevertheless, we have had frequent occasion to observe, that it is a charge which, in many cases, has been rashly and untruly made by claimants during the present war.

The placing the crew of a captured vessel in irons is justifiable only by the extreme necessity of the case. The misconduct of the captors may be such, as to destroy their otherwise just title to the prize, and also to render them liable to damages. This is a protection due to neutrals, which belligerents are bound to afford.

---

* Page 248.

1863

In the present case, however, we do not understand the Prize Court to deny these positions, or to refuse to entertain, or at all to make light of, a charge of misconduct on the part of the captors; but to take a distinction, not without reason, between the mode of procedure which ought to be adopted in the case where such a charge is brought against a public ship, and that which may be proper in a case where it is brought against a privateer, over whom the Court has a more direct and special authority. Accordingly, the Prize Court is willing take cognizance of the charge in this case, provided it be preferred through the more formal mode of procedure known to the Admiralty Court as by plea and proof. We cannot say that such a determination was inconsistent with justice. We do not mean to say that there may not be cases in which Her Majesty's Government would be warranted in demanding immediate redress from the Government of the United States for proved or admitted injuries inflicted by captors upon the captured crews, but we do not think that the present case falls within that category.

In the case of the "J. H. Foone" the cargo alone was condemned, as the proceedings against the ship had not been "regularly perfected." The grounds of condemnation were, the intent to enter a blockaded port, and the being taken off the alleged course of destination with some contraband on board, in a course towards the blockaded port. The circumstances were very suspicious: there is no reason why the claimants should not be left to the usual remedy of an appeal.

The "Prince Leopold" appears to have been properly decided, both upon the formal and substantial grounds, and an opportunity has been offered to the claimants of still proving their ignorance (if they were ignorant) of the blockade.

The "Sarah Starr" and the "Aigburth" appear to have been condemned upon the application of two principles of mixed international and public law to the facts and circumstances of those cases, namely:—

1. The principle that persons domiciled or carrying on trade in the enemy's country are to be treated by the Prize Courts as enemies.

2. The principle that a subject of one belligerent cannot sell or purchase roperty in the territory of the other belligerent, for the purpose of covering such property from the operations of war.

These principles (we do not pledge ourselves to the applicability of all the decided cases referred to) are quite sound and well-established; and, as far as we can judge at present, appear to have been rightly applied to the cases of these vessels, and to have justly enured to their condemnation.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 444.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 15, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 19th and 21st of October,[*] he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt (Nos. 163 and 164), respecting the position in which M. Bravay stands towards the Viceroy with regard to the iron-clads now under seizure at Birkenhead; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we would wish any further instructions to be sent to Mr. Colquhoun on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Colquhoun should be further instructed to the effect that it will be necessary (in order to enable proof to be given, according to the law of England, of the material facts relative to the pretence that these ships were intended for the Pasha), to obtain the loan of the original letter of M. Bravay to the Viceroy, and also to induce his Highness to condescend to repeat in evidence before a Commission his statement as to the repudiation by him of M. Bravay's demand upon the Government of Egypt.

We should hope that a proper representation to his Highness as to the necessity of these formal proceedings in order to obtain the ends of justice according to English law may be found effectual to procure the compliance of his Highness with the request made to him. Without such assistance Her Majesty's Government will not have the means of offering any legal evidence in support of this branch of their case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

[*] Pages 270 and 274.

No. 445.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 24.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 22, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 200,) inclosing copies of the judicial proceedings in the cases of the "Mersey," "Delta," "Empress," "Cheshire," and "Hiawatha;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the proceedings in these cases, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that all these ships were lawfully condemned.

We do not think the Judge's position as to the transfer of ships from a belligerent to a neutral, in all respects, sufficiently guarded or entirely correct, but we think that there are other grounds quite sufficient to sustain the sentence.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 446.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 24.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 22, 1863.

MEXICO.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter dated the 24th November ultimo, from Messrs. Kerford and Co., of Liverpool, inclosing two protests from Messrs. Preciat and Gual, their consignees at Campeachy, relative to the loss to which they have been subjected in consequence of the British schooner "Blue Jacket" having been prohibited by the French steamer "Milan" from discharging at that port her entire cargo, which is British property, and on which the proper duties had been levied; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that the Custom-house authorities at Campeachy had no right to compel the payment of duties upon that part of the goods which had not been landed; neither according to the principles of the law of blockade administered in English and American Courts, and recognized by the Declaration of Paris, had the French steamer a right in the circumstances to prevent the completion of the unloading, for there was certainly no blockade de facto (which the French, as well as the English and Americans, admit to be the only lawful blockade) on the 13th of September off Campeachy. But, if there had been such a blockade, it would have been competent to the French steamer to have warned off the "Blue Jacket," although she had sailed from England long before the blockade had begun or been proclaimed. On the other hand, no attempt has been made by the French to condemn the ship or cargo, or to do more than prevent her continuing to unload after a de facto blockade had begun.

1863

Practically, we think it may be assumed that no injury would be done to the "Blue Jacket" if the duties on the unloaded half of the cargo were remitted either at Campeachy or at Laguna de Terminos.

We think that a communication should be made to the French Government on the subject; and we think it may reasonably be expected that on a statement of the law of blockade, and its application to the facts of this case, they will see the justice of remitting the duty levied at Campeachy.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 447.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 22, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th instant,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for such observations as we may have to offer thereupon, the accompanying letter, dated the 15th December instant, from the Admiralty respecting the use which the United States' steamer "Kearsarge" is making of the harbours of the United Kingdom.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not occur to us that the letter of my Lords requires any observation in addition to those contained in our former Report on this subject. It is obvious that the question as to whether the "Kearsarge" be or be not using the ports of this kingdom for belligerent purposes is one of fact, which must depend in great measure upon the frequency and the length of any visits which that vessel may pay to any particular port. We presume that your Lordship will be practically guided by this view, as expressed in the letter of the Board.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 448.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 23, 1863.

My Lord,

UNITED STATES.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence as marked in the margin,† from which we should perceive the circumstances under which the British ship

---

* Page 326.

† Consul Vines, No. 23; to Lord Lyons, No. 473; to Sir A. Magenis, No. 63; Consul Vines, No. 24; to Mr. Stuart, No. 521; Sir A. Magenis, No. 108; Mr. Stuart, No. 55; to Mr. Stuart, No. 532; Lord Lyons, Nos. 783, 806, and 837.

"Juno" was captured off Terceira by the United States' steamer "Kearsarge," but subsequently released, the steps taken by Her Majesty's Government with reference to the proceedings of the "Kearsarge" on that occasion, and the view taken of the matter by the Government of the United States; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although the apology of the United States' Government is in most respects ample and satisfactory, we regret that the fact, apparently uncontroverted, of using the Portuguese harbour and waters as a place from whence to originate the exercise of belligerent rights is passed over in silence. We hope, however, that the remonstrance of the Portuguese Government on this point will follow upon the representation made to that Government by Her Majesty's Minister, and will sufficiently vindicate the invasion of neutral rights in this respect.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 449.

The Attorney-General to Mr. Hammond.—(Received December 31.)

My dear Sir, Aske, December 29, 1863.

UNITED STATES.

I RETURN Count de Bille's letter. It is curious that I should learn from the letter of a Foreign Minister on what day the "Alexandra" Judgment is to be given. The Court of Exchequer do not condescend to give any notice to solicitors or counsel, even in Government cases.

You are quite right in supposing that, even if the "Alexandra" case were to be decided against us, it would not govern the case of the iron-clads; and I think also that if the "Alexandra" case were decided against us upon the law, we should carry it by appeal to the Exchequer Chamber, and (if necessary) to the House of Lords.

I presume, from the answer which Lord Russell gave to the Austrian Government (though the same motives of policy might not apply to that Government and to Denmark), that his Lordship would not feel at liberty, even if he were disposed, to facilitate the purchase of these vessels by Denmark. If it were the policy of Her Majesty's Government to do so, and if Messrs. Laird and M. Bravay were also willing to concur in such an arrangement, a sale of the vessels might of course be made by mutual arrangement, leaving the price to abide the result of the legal proceedings, and to be invested in the meantime.

Believe me, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

1863

APPENDIX.

APPENDIX.

No. 270.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 4.)

My Lord, Temple, July 4, 1863.

FRANCE.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st of May, 1862,[*] respecting the case of Mr. Serjeant Glover and his suit against the Count de Persigny and others, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence, as marked in the margin,[†] on the subject of a complaint made by Mr. Glover against the violent treatment which, as he alleges, he has experienced at the hands of the French police, and on account of which, as would be seen by his letter of the 15th instant, he claims redress or satisfaction.

And to request that we would take the correspondence inclosed into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not advise your Lordship to apply to the French Government for any redress on behalf of Serjeant Glover. As far as we are able to form any opinion from the paper before us, we think that he must ascribe to his own violence of conduct the treatment which he received. The instructions upon the subject of Serjeant Glover which your Lordship has sent to Lord Cowley appear to us sufficient to answer any reasonable claims of that individual to British protection.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General and myself),
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 356.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 1.)

My Lord, Temple, September 29, 1863.

TURKEY.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th September instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 7th of July last, respecting the case of Messrs. Bello and Piso's bankruptcy, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed letter from Mr. Tiano explaining the position which he occupies with regard to that firm, and remonstrating against the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a Memorandum by the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople on this subject, and to request

---

[*] See Reports for 1862, page 123.

[†] Lord Cowley, No. 468; Mr. Glover, April 25; Memorandum, May 2; Mr. Glover, May 2; to Mr. Glover, May 2; to Lord Cowley, No. 599; Mr. Glover, June 15, 1863.

1863

that we would take these documents, together with the former papers connected with this case, into our consideration, and to report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an answer should be sent to Mr. Tiano to the effect that your Lordship has not interfered with the regular course of justice, but, on the contrary, acted in aid of it by apprizing the Ottoman Court of Justice that the Courts of all civilized States respect, as a general rule, sentences duly pronounced by the Bankruptcy Courts of another State. That it is open to Mr. Tiano to show that he was not cited before that Court; that his debt was not included in the Schedule of debts adjudicated upon, and, therefore, that he was not concluded by the sentence, which (on those suppositions) is not res judicata as against him; and that the Ottoman Court would be informed that the opinion expressed by your Lordship did not apply, in these circumstances, to this case. If Mr. Tiano cannot truthfully make this statement, then your Lordship's opinion requires no modification, and contains a correct exposition of the law applicable to his case.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General and myself),
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. December 1865.

CONFIDENTIAL.

1405

REPORTS

FROM

THE LAW OFFICERS

OF

THE CROWN.

1864.

1864

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

AFRICA.

Bishops, consecration, 1.
Crowther, Rev. S. A., consecration as Bishop, 1.

AUSTRIA.

Coals. Application of term "warlike equipment," to, 4.
Captures at sea. Austrian regulations, 2.
Denmark. War. Belligerent vessels. Treatment by British naval officers, 1.
„ „ Instructions to British civil and military officers abroad, 3.
Mc Donald. Marriage certificate, 4.

BAVARIA.

Arnaud, Major-General. Will, 5.

CHINA.

Arms. Export of, 6, 7.
Anglo-Chinese fleet. Agreement for employment of officers and men, 9.
„ Sale of vessels, 11.
Andrews, J., 11.
Art, Works of. Trade at Pekin, 11.
Amoy. Port regulations, 17.
British subjects in rebel employ. Expulsion illegal, 8.
„ „ Order in Council for punishment, &c., 10, 13.
„ Shipmasters and merchants. Consular jurisdiction, 15.
Custom-house. Chinese. Seizures, 7.
Consular jurisdiction. Shipmasters and merchants, 15.
„ Maritime cases, 16.
"Carthage," 16.
Fine. False manifests, 7.
„ British vessels entering a Chinese dock without a permit, 17.
Hong Kong. Export of arms, 6, 7.
Hankow. Piracy. Illegal notification, 8.
Hart, Mr., 10.
Laird, Mr., 6, 7.
Maritime cases. Consular jurisdiction, 16.
Manifests, false. Fine, 7.
"Orissa," 7.
Order in Council. British subjects in rebel employ, 10, 13.
Ordinance. Deposition of witnesses, 16.
Police officers, Peking. Agreement, 5.
Peking police officers. Agreement, 5.
Piracy. Illegal Notification at Hankow, 8.
"Paragon," 17.
Sullivan, Mr., 14.
Singapore. Export of arms, 6, 7.
Treaty of Tien-tsin. Infraction of, 10.
Witnesses. Deposition. Ordinance, 16.

DENMARK.

Administration to effects of a deceased Danish subject in Great Britain, 18.
"Alma," 29.
Blockade. Prussian ports. Exports of British property, 18.
„ Schleswig and Holstein. "Gazette" notice, 23.
„ and captures. Danish regulations. Publication in "Gazette," 24.
„ Neustadt, 25.
Blockade. Cammin, 25.
„ Swinemünde, 25.
„ Wolgast, 25.
„ Greifswalde, 25.
„ Stralsünd, 25.
„ Barth, 25.
„ Notification to Consuls, 26.
„ Fehmern, 27.
„ Prussian vessels laden with goods for British merchants, 27.
„ Dantzic, 27.
„ Pillau, 27.
„ Prussian ports. Termination, 28.
„ „ Renewal. "Gazette" notice, 30, 31.
„ „ Efficiency. Question of, 30.
„ „ Termination. Publication of telegram announcing, 34.
Burgher license, 32.
Captures and blockades. Danish regulations, 24.
Confederate States of America. Sale of iron-clads, 35.
Claim of Germany for losses sustained by shipping during war with Denmark, 36, 37.
"Estella," 32.
"Ernst Jacob," 33.
Flux and Argles, Messrs., 33.
Glasgow. Iron-clad vessels for Danish Government, 19.
German vessels. Intended capture by Denmark. Distribution of notice by pilots, 24.
"Glen Grant," 34.
Germany. Claim for losses sustained by shipping during the war, 36, 37.
Great Britain. Effects of deceased Danish subjects. Administration to, in, 18.
„ Treaty engagements respecting Schleswig, 19.
„ Instructions to naval officers regarding hostilities between Germany and Denmark, 24.
„ Iron-clad vessels building for Danish Government in, 19.
„ Foreign Office archives. Production in courts of law, 33.
Iron-clad vessels. See "Vessels."
Lang, H., 32.
Marstrand, Sweden. Prussian vessel laden with flaxseed for British merchants, 26.
Moser, Messrs., 33.
Prussia. Blockade of ports. See "Blockade."
„ Vessel at Marstrand, Sweden, laden with flaxseed for British merchants, 26.
"Princess Helena," 29.
Schleswig. Treaty engagements of Great Britain, &c., 19.
„ Guarantee of 1720, 19.
„ Blockade, 23.
"Sarah," 36, 38.
Treaties. Execution of, when contrary to Municipal Law, 18.
„ Engagements. Duchy of Schleswig, 19.
Vessel. Iron-clad for Danish Government, 19.
„ „ Sale to Confederate States of America, 31, 35.

1864

EQUATOR.

Mocatta, British Vice-Consul. Withdrawal of exequatur, 38.

FRANCE.

Ambassador. Subpœna, 50.
Arrest of a British subject on demand of Russian Ambassador, 47, 48.
Antigua. Claim on account of coolies, 39, 42.
" Blue Jacket," 41, 43.
Blockade. Coast of Mexico. Validity, 41.
„ Acapulco and Manzanilla, 42.
„ Goatzacoalcos and Tabasco, 43.
Campeachy. Non-effective blockade, 43.
" Caroline Goodyear," 40.
Convention. Post Office, with Great Britain. Application of Articles V to VIII to all packets, 40.
Colonies. Extradition Convention. Extension to, 46.
Consular privileges. Proposed Convention, 285.
Coolies. Claim on account of, 39, 42.
Dulac, E. Extradition, 46, 51.
Extradition. Extension of Treaty stipulations to Colonies, 46.
" Experts." Infraction of Treaty by employment, 44, 49, 52, 53.
Glover v. Persigny. Subpœna. Secretary of State, 44.
„ „ French Ambassador, 50.
Great Britain. Commercial Treaty. " Experts," 44, 49, 52, 53.
„ Extradition Treaty limited to, 51.
International engagements. Precedence over Municipal Law, 49.
" Jules," 48.
" Marcian," 39, 42.
Mauritius. Property of deceased foreigners, 48.
Municipal Law. Precedence of international engagements, 49.
" Persévérant." Coolies. 39, 42.
Packets. Post Office Convention. Articles V and VIII, 40.
Pitt, Brothers, 44, 49, 52, 53.
Rossel and Co., 44.
Reynaud, M., 48.
Subpœna. Ambassador, 50.
„ Secretary of State, 44.
Thornley, J., 47, 48.
Treaty of Extradition. Limited to Great Britain, 51.
Treaty engagements and Municipal Law, 49.
Westbrooke, Mr., 52.

FRANKFORT. (GERMANY.)

Grimm, Mr., 53.
New South Wales. Denization Act. Right to British protection, 53.

GENERAL.

Correspondence. Official legal proceedings for recovery, 54, 55, 56, 57.
Jackson, Lady, 54, 55, 56, 57.
Jurisdiction, British. Foreign Maritime Law. Crews of foreign vessels, 57.
New South Wales. Laws relating to merchant seamen, 59.
Slave Trade. Proposal to declare piracy, 58.
Vessels, foreign. Breaches of foreign maritime law by crews. British jurisdiction, 57.

GERMANY. (See FRANKFORT.)

HANOVER.

Claypole, Mr., 60.
Vessels. Capture of British property on board Hanoverian vessels by Danes. As to disposal of, 60.

ITALY.

Extradition. Malta, 62.
Hall, J. E., Miss, 61.
Marriage of British subjects. One month's residence required, 61.
Marriage. Foreigner and British subject. Validity, 62.
Malta. Demand for extradition of Italian criminals, 62.

JAPAN.

Animals. Killing of, by British subjects, 63.
Vessels. Burning of blue lights, &c., in harbour, 63.

MEXICO.

Blockade. Losses of masters of British vessels, 64.
„ Gulf of Mexico and Pacific coast. Raising of, 66.
Great Britain. Subjects. Imprisonment by President Juarez, 64, 65.
Hosking, Mary, 65.
Milmo and Gilgen, Messrs., 64, 65.
Marriage of a British subject pending question before Appellate Court, 65.
Murray, Dr., 66.
Paulson, Captain, 64.
Rule, F., 65.

MONTE VIDEO.

Brazil and Uruguay. Hostilities. Reprisals, 69.
Blockade, Brazilian. Salto and Paysandu, 69.
Claim of British subjects for injury to property by occupation of troops, 68.
Great Britain. Subjects. Claim on account of injury to property by occupation of troops, 68.
Hall, Mr., 67.
Paysandu. Brazilian blockade, 69.
Reprisals. Rights claimed by Brazil, 69.
Salto. Brazilian blockade, 69.
Villanueva, J., 68.

MOROCCO.

Great Britain. Subjects. Protection, 69.

NEW GRANADA.

Hunter, Mr. Murder of, 70.
Longton and Co., 71.
" Mercury," 71.
Mosquito Indians. Title to British protection under Treaty of 1860, 70.
Yates, W., 72.

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

Navigator's Islands. Establishment of a Court for trial of foreigners, 73.

PERSIA.

Ralli, P., 74.
Zanzibar. Disposal of captured slaves, 73.

PORTUGAL.

Brazil and Great Britain. Mediation. Approving draft of Memorandum, 74, 79.
Lindsay, Mr., 75, 77, 80.
Union Mercantile Company. See " Lindsay."

PRUSSIA.

Blockade of Swinemünde, 80, 81.
„ Non-effective, 82.
„ (See also Denmark.)
Captures at sea. Prussian instructions. Publication in " Gazette," 81.
Convention. Extradition, 84.
Delcomyn, Messrs., 83.
Extradition. Convention with Great Britain. Political offences, 84.
Great Britain. Property of subjects. Destruction during war, 83.
„ Extradition. Convention, 84.
Prize Court Regulations. Observations on, 84.
Swinemünde. Blockade by Danes, 80.
" Viken," 83.

RIVER PLATE.

Blockade. Monte Video, 87.
„ Necessity of due notice and allowance of time for departure of vessels already laden, 87.
Certificate of registry. British, 86.
Vessels, foreign. British provisional certificates of registry, 86.

SALVADOR.

Foreigners. Naturalization, &c., 87.
Hocking, Mr. and Mrs., 88.
Marriage of British subjects by Consuls. Its civil character, 88.

SAN DOMINGO.

Abbott, W., 96.
Ambroise, Mr., 100.
Belligerent rights. Recognition by Great Britain, 96, 101.
Blockade. Illegal seizure by Spanish cruizers, 100.
„ Non-effective, 89.
„ de facto, 91.
„ of San Domingo. Proclamation of Governor of Jamaica, 99.
Claims. Destruction of British property during civil war, 90.
" Darrill," 92, 95.
" Forward," 96, 98.
Good, Mrs., 94.
Great Britain. Subjects. Position by acceptance of office, 89.
„ „ Destruction of property during civil war, 90.
„ Recognition of belligerent rights during civil war, 96, 101.
Heneken, Mr., 89.
Hinson, Mr., 100.
Insurrection. Recognition of belligerent rights, 96.
Jamaica. Proclamation respecting blockade, 99.
" Julia," 91, 92, 93.
Levy, Mr., 99.
" Pioneer," 96.
Privateers. Application of Declaration of Paris to insurgents, 101.
Property, British. Destruction during civil war, 20.
Prize Courts. Application to, previous to obtaining assistance of Her Majesty's Government, 92, 93.
Prize Courts. Necessity of British owners of ships appearing in, 98.
" President," 96, 98.
" Rapid," 92, 93, 95, 96.
Remouard and Bode, 92.
Spain. Claim to jurisdiction of six miles from mainland, 96.
Tweedy, Mr., 99.

SIAM.

Bangkok. Complaint against British Consul, 102.
Johnstone, Mr. C. O., 102.
Moung Shwe Gan v. Chang Mai, 102.

SPAIN.

" Azorian," 105.
Cadiz. Imprisonment of seamen of the " Continental," 104.
" Continental," 104.
" Colorado," 106.
Correspondence, official. Production in courts of law, 106.
Courts of law. Production of official correspondence, 106.
" Criticado," 104.
Documents. Official. Courts of law, 106.
Goodman, Mr., 106.
Great Britain. Maritime jurisdiction claimed by, 107.
Imprisonment. Indemnity for, 106.
Laws. Defective Sanitary. Losses. See " Azorian."
Maritime jurisdiction claimed by Great Britain, 107.
„ „ Rocks, reefs, &c., 107.
„ „ Proposed extension of three mile limit, 107
" Joaquina," 107.
Rothery, Mr., 106.
Scotland. Law Courts. Objection to jurisdiction, 107.
Vessels. Master and seamen. Dispute. Jurisdiction, 107.

SWITZERLAND.

Great Britain. Subjects. Marriages, lex loci, 108.
Marriages of British subjects. Lex loci, 108.
Marriage certificates to be sent to Bishop of London's Office, 109.

TUNIS.

Heyn, Mr., 110.
Sfax. Claim of Mr. Heyn, 110.

TURKEY.

" Ada," 121.
Arms. Seizure on board the " Ada," 121.
Austria. Trading privileges granted to by Turkey, 129.
Bagdad. Customs duties on missionaries, 131.
Bosnia. Trading privileges granted to Austria, 129.
Constantinople. Union of offices of Judge and Consul-General, 123.
Consul. Jurisdiction in Tripoli in mixed cases, 117.
Cuppa, Messrs. G. and S., 121.
Customs duties. Protestant and Roman Catholic missionaries, 131.
Danube navigation. Validity of regulations of June 1860, 123.
„ Order in Council. Regulations, 130.
Derdavit, Widow, 122.
Duty. Export of 5 per cent in Principalities, 128.
„ „ to be charged on goods sent by British subjects to foreign countries, 114.
Fees. Probate duty. Turkish real estate, 131.
Focca, D., 119.
Foreigners. Expulsion from Principalities, 130.
Great Britain. Subjects. Claim to be registered, 121.
„ Protected subject married to a Turk. Dowry, 122.
Herzegovine. Trading privileges granted to Austria, 129.
Ionian Islands. Cession to Greece, 113.
Ionian subjects. Protection pending settlement of cession, 113.
Leahy, Mr., 120.
" Mars" and " Smyrna," 123.
Missionaries. Protestant Roman Catholic. Customs duties, 131.
Navigation of rivers, &c., by British subjects, 118.
Niphon. Ionian monk, 113.
Order in Council. British subjects. Revised, 1864, 122.
„ Office of Consul-General and Judge at Constantinople, 123.
„ Navigation of the Danube, 130.
Price, Mr., 111.
Principalities. Monastic property. Seizure, 113.
„ „ Effect of Treaty of 1858, 113.
„ Export duty of 5 per cent., 128.
„ Expulsion of foreigners, 130.
Probate duty. Fees levied under Order in Council, 131.
Railway. Belgrade and Constantinople. Plans, 120.
„ Samsoon and Sivas. Forfeiture of deposit money, 111.
Rivers. Navigation by British subjects, 118.
Stevens, Consul, 128.
Samsoon and Sivas Railway. Forfeiture of deposit money, 111.
Smyrna. Murder of Turkish soldier by an Ionian, 115.
Thebes. Claim of Turkish subjects to lands, 114, 115.
Treaty of Kanlidja. Export duty of 5 per cent. charged in Principalities, 128.
„ of 1858. Principalities. Monastic property, 113.
„ Commercial, 1861. Duty to be levied on exports by British subjects to places other than British Possessions, 114.
Trebizond. Occupation of house by British Consul, 128.
Tripoli. Jurisdiction of British Consul in mixed cases, 117.

1864

UNITED STATES.

"Abigail," 244.
Act of Parliament. Consular privileges, 285.
Act. Foreign enlistment. Limit of jurisdiction, 295.
  „ Conscription, new, 205.
Act of Congress. Prize proceedings, 271.
  „ Customs, 282, 312.
Act. Steam-boat. Does not apply to British vessels, 298.
Admiralty Court. United States. Jurisdiction, 187.
"Alabama," 150, 177, 191, 242, 252, 279, 289.
  „ Application for detention, 177.
"Alliance," 169.
Aliens. Losses of property during civil war. Bill, 228.
"Alexandra," 295, 298, 302.
"Amphion," 192, 194.
"Amelia Ann," 246.
"Anglia," 134.
"Annie," 137.
Angra Pequena. See "Saxon."
  „ British jurisdiction, 162.
  „ Seizure of coals, 250, 289, 294.
"Antonica," 202.
Anderson, Saxon, and Co., 166.
"Antona," 167.
"Ann E. Grant," 244.
Army. Confederate. Compulsory service of British subjects, 133.
  „ United States. New Conscription Act, 205.
  „ „ Children of United States' citizens born on British territory, 206.
  „ Fraudulent enlistment of British subjects, 223, 252, 289, 296.
  „ Kidnapping of British subjects for, 237.
Arrest. Consul-General of United States at Montreal, 194.
Ardill, Mr., 270.
Army. Non-exemption of British subjects, 304.
Atkin, R., 187.
"Banshee," 163, 173, 205.
Bahamas and New York. Restrictions on trade, 201.
Barnet and Jones, 202.
Baltimore. Summons of British Consul to appear at a trial, 240, 247.
Bates, Mr. E., 280.
"Bermuda," 165.
Belligerent cruizers. Treatment in Great Britain. See "Great Britain."
Belligerent vessels of war. Repair in neutral State, 195, 220, 259.
Bermuda. Reception of "Florida." See "Florida."
Betts, Judge. Opinion in case of the "Springbok," 221.
"Betsey," 235, 239, 301.
Belligerent vessels. See "Vessels."
Belligerent subjects. Capture on board British vessels, 273.
Binnay, J. W., 275, 278, 288.
Blockade. Capture for breach of, of a vessel unprovided with a flag or papers. See "Matagorda."
  „ Validity. French tobacco at Richmond, 156.
  „ Neutrals not called upon to assist in maintenance, 136.
  „ Right of a neutral ship of war to enter a port under, 195.
  „ Brownsville. Termination, 200, 237, 270.
  „ Restrictions on trade on termination of, 200, 237.
  „ Brownsville. Renewal of, 281.
  „ Raising of. Norfolk, 306.
  „ Notice in "Gazette" should not appear until official notification has been made to Her Majesty's Government, 306.
  „ Destruction by a United States' ship of war of a British vessel whilst attempting to run a, 309.
Blockade-runners. Repair at Bermuda, 136.
  „ Abuse of belligerent privileges by, 161.
Blockade-runners. Treatment of crews, &c., 134, 163, 179, 180, 186, 197, 202, 203, 205, 213, 216, 233, 243, 256, 278, 293.
"Blanche," or "General Rusk," 181, 208.
Booth, Dr., 250.
Boyle, D., 293.
Broom, Mr., 187.
Bravay, Messrs., 189, 193.
Brownsville. Termination of blockade, 200, 237.
  „ Restrictions on trade with, 200, 237, 270.
  „ Blockade. Renewal of, 281.
Bradshaw, Mr., 212.
Buchanan, Mr., 212.
Burnley, Mr., 294.
Butterfield, Vice-Consul, 183.
Canada. St. Alban's raiders. Extradition, 300, 306, 312.
  „ Abduction of P. Needham, &c., 238, 262.
  „ Subjects. Arrest at San Francisco, 246.
Captures by private armed vessels, 171.
Captures. Costs and damages for illegal, 169.
  „ Illegal. Indemnity, 132, 203.
  „ by belligerent passengers, 138, 307, 311.
  „ Illegal. Restoration by British authorities, 214, 219.
Canty, Mr., 164.
Carrew, H., 168.
Cannon range. Neutral waters, 260.
"Chesapeake," 138, 145, 160, 176, 177, 180, 190, 210, 213.
Claims. Compensation for captures. See "Alabama."
  „ British, on United States. Return to Parliament, 212.
"Clyde," 227, 288, 304.
Colonies. British. Trade with New York. Restrictions, 201.
Consular privileges. Proposed Convention, 285.
Consuls. Privileges in the United States, 247.
Consul, British. Summons to appear as witness at a trial, 240, 247.
Consul-General for United States at Montreal. Arrest of, 194.
Confederate army. British subjects in, 133.
Confederate vessels. India, 158.
  „ „ Treatment of British subjects as prisoners of war, 173, 202, 243.
Confederate States. Cotton. Application for removal, 171.
  „ Vessels fitting out for. See "Hawk," "Dantzic."
  „ Commercial intercourse with. Rules and Regulations, 281.
  „ Enlistment of British subjects for service in. Trial of agents, 212, 302.
Confederate Prize Courts. Refusal of United States to acknowledge jurisdiction, 227.
Contraband of war. Seizure on board neutral vessels, 147.
  „ Cotton, 149, 159.
  „ Food, 159.
  „ Clothing, 159.
  „ Capture on voyage between neutral ports, 221.
Coal. Supply to belligerent vessels, 266.
Cotton. Contraband of war, 149, 159, 165.
  „ Confederate States. Application for removal, 171.
Corbett, Captain, 302.
Court-martial in case of Mr. Gray. British Government not called upon to acknowledge decision, 175.
Correspondence. Official, of neutrals. Violation, 200.
"Cosmopolite," 246.
Conscription. New Act, 205.
  „ Children of United States' citizens born in British territory, 206.
"Conrad," 191.
Crutchett, J., 137, 167, 206.
Crawford, J. V., 275, 278, 287.
Cunningham, Mr., 212.
Customs Act, new, 282, 312.

"Dashing Wave," 135, 147, 178, 225, 274, 287, 299.
"Dart," 189, 241.
"Dantzic," 234.
Danenhower, Lieutenant, 259.
"Dennis Hill," 187.
Despatch-bag. Violation, 200.
"Deerhound," 242, 252, 279.
Deserters. Ships of war. Surrender, 284.
Differential duties. Exemption of British shipping, 282.
"Dolphin," 204.
"Don," 213.
"Don José," 203.
Dumas, Mr., 172.
Duties. Import. Bill for increase, 254.
Duty. Differential. Exemption of British shipping, 282.
"Echo," 180.
"Ella," 138.
"Ella and Annie," 189.
"Emma," 134.
"Empress," 169.
"Eneas," 164.
Enlistment of British subjects for Confederate States. See "Confederate States."
  „ Fraudulent, of British subjects in the United States, 223.
  „ of Seamen for Confederate service, 302.
Eneas, Mr., 238.
"Etta," 305.
Everson, Acting Master, 298, 313.
Extradition. St. Alban's raiders, 300, 306, 312.
  „ See "Chesapeake."
  „ Piracy, 202.
  „ Treaty. Hudson's Bay Company, 256.
"Excelsior," 225.
"Fanny Crenshaw," 244.
Flags of truce. Observations of United States' Law Officers on protection, 268.
"Florida," 229, 261, 266.
"Flying Scud," 246.
Foreigners. Loss of property during civil war. Bill, 228.
  „ Oath exacted of, 277.
  „ Neutral. Employment as Police, 282.
  „ Prohibited from carrying on business when not enrolled in militia, 249, 276.
France. Tobacco at Richmond, 156.
Fraser, Trenholm, and Co., 179.
"General Rusk" or "Blanche," 181.
"Georgia," 220, 232, 259, 272, 280, 283.
"Gondar," 169.
Gold. Restrictions on import of, 276.
Gray, J., 146, 168, 175, 186, 189, 207, 203, 231, 259.
Gray, Mrs., 163.
"Greyhound," 251, 273.
"Granite City," 163.
"Grey Jacket," 257.
Great Britain. Subjects. Blockade runners, 134, 163, 173, 179, 180, 186, 197.
  „ „ Compulsory service in army, 133.
  „ „ Protection during civil war, 136.
  „ „ Domiciled. Protection, 137, 189, 249, 265, 291.
  „ „ Destruction of property during civil war, 155, 167, 185, 193, 223, 250.
  „ „ in Fort Lafayette. Military Commission, 164, 183, 188.
  „ „ on board Confederate vessels. Treatment as prisoners of war, 173, 202, 213, 233, 243.
  „ „ Seizure of property by military authorities, 137, 167, 176, 184, 200.
  „ „ Enlistment for service in Confederate States. Trial of agents, 212.
Great Britain. Subjects. Fraudulent enlistment in the United States. See "Army."
  „ „ Treatment when captured on board blockade-runners. See "Blockade-runners."
  „ „ domiciled in the United States. Position of, 236.
  „ „ Kidnapping for army, 237.
  „ „ Imprisonment in the United States for serving with Confederates, 238.
  „ „ Non-exemption from military service, 304.
  „ Neutrality, 151.
  „ Territory. Violation, 158, 189.
  „ Not called upon to acknowledge decision of a foreign Court-martial, 175.
  „ Treatment of belligerent cruizers. Instructions to naval officers, 177.
  „ Sale of ship of war to Confederates. See "Amphion."
  „ Colonies. Restrictions on Trade with New York, 201, 217, 244.
  „ „ Restoration of illegal captures, 214, 219.
  „ Instructions to Admiral on American station, 232.
  „ Ports. "Gazette" notice. Exclusion of belligerent vessels of war, so as to prevent their being dismantled or sold, 272.
  „ Foreign Enlistment Act. Limited to dominions of Her Majesty, 295.
Hansard, J., 136.
Halifax. Conduct of United States' ship of war, 138.
  „ Anchorage of belligerent vessels, 287, 303.
Hardcastle, Mr., 140, 199, 268, 310.
Hamilton, P., 163, 173.
Harris, C., 201.
"Hawk," 206, 211.
Hall. R., 240.
Heslop, W. C., 291.
"H. G. Berry," 157, 160, 263.
"Hiawatha," 192.
Hill, Miss, 292.
Hoffman, Major, 232.
Hope, Admiral, 232.
Hopkins, W. P., 278.
Hong Kong. Neutrality Ordinance, 241.
  „ Belligerent vessels, 303.
  „ Hudson's Bay Company. Extradition Treaty, 256.
Import Duties. Bill for increase of, 254.
Imprisonment. False. Compensation, 265, 269, 292.
  „ Illegal, 300.
India. Confederate vessels of war, 158.
Iron-clad vessels. See "Vessels."
"Iroquois," 284, 290.
Jackson, J., 284.
Jenkins, Mr., 304.
"Joseph L. Gerrity," 202.
Jones, G. T., 221.
"Kate Prince," 313.
Kennedy, Mr. Arrest for serving in Confederate army, 133.
Kennedy, A. J., 278.
"Kearsarge," 195.
King, C., 252.
"Labuan," 141, 152.
Lancaster, Mr., 252.
"Laurel," 295.
Lewers, H. A., 176.
Lee, Ira, 262.
Levey, S. G., 265.
Legal notice served on a United States' officer through British Minister, 232.
Lizardi and Co., 135.
Liverpool. Iron-clads. See "Vessels."
"Lilla," 227.

1864

Matamoros. Seizures, 135, 141, 143, 147, 210, 253, 274, 298, 312, 314.
“ Matamoros,” 210, 225.
“ Margaret and Jessie,” 158, 260, 291.
“ Marianne,” 213.
Mc Hugh, J., 165, 179, 185, 220.
Mauritius, Demand for restitution of a Confederate prize. See “ Sea Bride.”
Maritime States. Joint representation, 233.
Mason, G. A., 236, 269.
“ Madeira,” 304.
“ Matagorda,” 310.
“ Mémorial Diplomatique.” Case of “ Springbok,” 221.
Military service. Non-exemption of British subjects, 304.
Militia. Foreigners not enrolled prohibited from carrying on business, 249, 276.
Montreal. Arrest of United States' Consul-General, 194.
Mulholland, J., 171.
Murphy, M., 258.
Navy, Secretary of. Report, 151.
Neutral territory. Suggested extension to eight miles, 291.
Neutral waters. Illegal seizures. See “ Matamoros seizures.”
„ Illegal captures in. See “ Blanche.”
„ „ See “ Margaret and Jessie.”
„ Cannon-range, 260.
Neutral States. Sale of belligerent vessels, 220, 232, 259, 272.
Neutrality Ordinance. Hong Kong, 241.
New Brunswick. Salary of Admiralty Court Judge, 210.
New York and British Colonies. Restrictions on trade, 201, 217, 244.
New Orleans. Restrictions on import of gold, 276.
„ Oath exacted of foreigners, 277.
Needham, P., 238, 262.
Nicol, A., 155, 223.
“ Night Hawk,” 309.
“ Niagara,” 280.
Nova Scotia. Violation of British territory, 138, 145.
„ Proclamation. Anchorage of belligerent vessels of war, 287, 303.
Oath exacted from foreigners, 277.
O'Neill, J., 163, 197, 258, 298, 313.
Ordinance. Neutrality. Hong Kong, 241.
“ Pacifique,” 132.
Pass. Safe-conduct, 140, 199.
Parliament. Inexpedient to present Papers previous to trial of a case, 156.
„ British claims on United States. Return, 212.
Paulson, Captain, 300.
Penguin Island. Possessory rights of Great Britain, 147.
„ Coals. Seizure of, 166.
“ Peterhoff,” 204, 294.
“ Pearl,” 204, 229, 248.
Philadelphia. Prize Court, 182, 248.
Piracy. Extradition, 202.
Pirate. See “ Alabama.”
Pollard and Seawell, 273.
Police. Employment of neutral foreigners, 282.
Ports of entry. Levy of fine on vessels for touching at places besides, 302.
Prize Court. Philadelphia, 182, 248.
Prize Courts. Award of damages, 141.
„ Confederate. Refusal of United States to acknowledge jurisdiction, 227.
„ Improper practices, 263.
„ Payment of costs, 229.
Prize proceedings. Act of Congress, 271.
Prize cases. Delay in Appellate Courts, 263.
Prizes. Restoration when illegally captured, 214.
Prisoners of war. Treatment of British subjects serving on blockade-runners as. See “ Blockade-runners.”
Proclamation. Neutrality. Modification in favour of United States' vessels employed in suppression of Slave Trade, 209.
Property. Neutral, found on board captured vessels, 308.
Property of foreigners. Losses during civil war. Bill, 228.
Property of British subjects. Seizure of. See “ Great Britain.”
“ Princess Royal,” 182.
Purvis, J., 193.
Rahming, Mr., 164, 238.
“ Rappahannock,” 235.
“ Rhode Island,” 158.
Rich, T., 183.
Ring, J., 183.
Rio Grande. Captures. See “ Matamoros.”
Rooke, Lieutenant, 173.
Ross, W. H., 184.
“ Roanoke,” 307, 314.
Russell, A., 267.
“ St. George,” 134.
“ Saxon,” 140, 146, 147, 152, 162, 166, 168, 175, 186, 191, 207, 208, 231, 259.
San Francisco. Arrest of Canadian subjects, 246.
St. Alban's raiders, 300, 306, 312.
“ Scotia,” 134.
“ Science,” 135, 147, 225, 269.
“ Scylla,” 217, 286.
“ Sea Bride,” 150, 153, 208, 219.
Seymour, Mr., 212.
Seawell, Mr., 273.
“ Sea King,” 295, 302, 313.
Shaver, Mr., 149.
“ Shenandoah,” 313.
“ Sir W. Peel,” 143, 147, 149, 178, 210, 225, 258, 274, 312, 314.
Slave Trade. Treaty. Article IX, 143.
„ Vessels. Surrender of foreigners, 143.
„ United States' vessels on coast of Africa. Modification of Neutrality Proclamation, 208.
Sombero. Island of. Lease, 172, 264.
“ Springbok,” 166, 221.
“ Stephen Hart,” 146, 186.
Stores. Supply to belligerent vessels. See “ Vessels.”
“ Sylvanus,” 203, 256, 293.
Taylor, J., 133.
“ Teresita,” 235.
Thompson, W., 134.
Tovell, J., 265, 281.
Treaty. Consular privileges, 285.
„ Slave Trade. Surrender of foreigners, 143.
„ Extradition. Hudson's Bay Company, 256.
Trade. New York and British Colonies. Trade restrictions, 201, 217, 244.
Turner, Mr., 213, 218.
“ Tuscaloosa,” 153, 162, 170, 172, 175, 182, 214, 284.
Tulley, T., 237, 289, 296.
“ Vanderbilt,” 140, 162, 189.
Vessels. Slave Trade. Surrender of foreigners, 143.
„ Iron-clad. Liverpool, 149, 156, 189, 193.
„ Captured. Commission as ship of war, 153.
„ „ Appropriation previous to condemnation, 153, 271.
„ Detention to prevent communication of military intelligence, 157, 160, 263.
„ Private armed. Captures, 171.
„ of war. Belligerent. Repair in Great Britain, 195.
„ „ Neutral. Right to enter a blockaded port, 195.
„ „ Deserters. Surrender, 284.
„ „ Damage for collision. See “ Madeira.”
„ „ Belligerent. Repair in neutral State, 195, 220.
„ „ „ Sale, &c., in neutral State, 220, 232, 259, 272.
„ Neutral. Destruction, 226.
„ British. Destruction by “ Florida,” 229.
„ Exemption from Steam-boat Act, 298.
„ Belligerent. Neutral. Despatch-bag. Violation, 200.

Vessels. Belligerent. Shipment of stores. See “ Iroquois.”
„ „ Sale to neutrals, 239, 244.
„ „ Shipment of stores, 284, 290, 297.
„ Neutral. Summons to lie to, by a belligerent, 241.
„ „ Right of search. Cannot be protected by a ship of war, 244.
„ „ Capture of belligerent subjects on board, 273.
„ Supply of coal to belligerents, 266.
„ Foreign. Grant of British register, 283.
„ Fine for touching at places other than port of entry, 302.
„ United States. Capture by Confederate passengers. See “ Roanoke.”
„ Captured. Disposal of neutral property found on board, 308.
„ Disposal of crew when captured, and unprovided with flag or papers, 310.
“ Victor,” 186, 270.
“ Volant,” 147, 178, 225, 253, 261, 274.
Wade. Escape of, 138.
Warrants. Issue of depositions, 145.
War. Contraband of. See “ Contraband.”
West and Davies, 194.
Wilson, J. M., 174, 185.
„ Mr. (“ Peterhoff ”), 294.
Wood, R. W., 264.
“ Wyoming,” 303.
“ York,” 226.

VENEZUELA.

“ Albion,” 315.
Blockade. Legality during insurrection, 315.
„ Guayana. Notice for “ Gazette,” 316.
Ciudad Bolivar. Blockade, 315.
Elliot, Mr., 315.
Great Britain. Subjects. Destruction of property during insurrection, 315.
Property. British. Destruction during insurrection, 315.
Vessel. British. Seizure by insurgents whilst employed in conveyance of Government troops, 170.

1864

LIST OF REPORTS.

Arranged according to Countries.

AFRICA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
1	May 30, 1864	Queen's Advocate	Memorial from Archbishop of Canterbury for license to consecrate the Rev. S. A. Crowther to be Bishop in Western Africa	1

AUSTRIA.

2	Mar. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Observations on proposed instructions to Her Majesty's officers, regarding their conduct towards belligerent cruizers and their prizes in war between Austria and Denmark ..	1
3	16,	Queen's Advocate	Observations on regulations issued by Austrian Government with regard to capture of enemy's ships at sea. Regulations should be published in "Gazette." Exemption of neutral vessels under convoy from examination	2
4	Apr. 6,	Law Officers ..	Draft of instructions to Her Majesty's civil and military officers abroad for their guidance during war between Germany and Denmark. The Governor of Gibraltar should order the immediate departure of a prize vessel brought into that port by an Austrian prize crew	3
5	30,	Law Officers ..	Unable to give opinion as to whether coals come under the term of "warlike equipment"	4
6	Oct. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Application of Mr. McDonald for interference of Her Majesty's Government to establish the validity of the marriage certificates of his parents, in an Austrian Court . ..	4

BAVARIA.

7	Jan. 13,	Queen's Advocate	Will of Major-General Arnaud. Necessity of will of a domiciled British subject being executed according to English law	5

CHINA.

8	Jan. 25,	Law Officers ..	Opinion on Articles of Agreement with police officers sent to Peking to act as escort and guard to Her Majesty's Legation	5
9	Feb. 8,	Law Officers ..	Complaint of Mr. Laird at restrictions on export of arms from Hong Kong and Singapore. Claims compensation for losses. Trade of British subjects subject to the public and political exigencies rendered necessary by the exercise of Her Majesty's prerogative	6
10	16,	Law Officers ..	Approving proposal made by Sir F. Bruce to Chinese Government for investigating cases in which the penalty of confiscation is imposed on goods seized by the Chinese Customhouse	7
11	18,	Law Officers ..	Approving letter to Mr. Laird respecting the restrictions on the export of arms from Hong Kong and Singapore ..	7

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
12	Feb. 20, 1864	Law Officers	Case of the "Orissa." Approving fine imposed by Her Majesty's Consul at Ningpo on the master of the "Orissa" for having presented a false manifest	7
13	29,	Law Officers	Opinion that instructions sent by Sir F. Bruce to Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Shanghae, for expulsion of British subjects who have been in rebel employ, are illegal, as exceeding the authority given by Order in Council	8
14	Mar. 4,	Law Officers	Notification issued by Consuls of foreign Powers at Hankow on the subject of piracy is illegal	8
15	Apr. 5,	Attorney and Solicitor-General	Agreement for employment of officers and men on board Anglo-Chinese fleet. Approving course proposed by Captain S. Osborn for settling question	9
16	6,	Law Officers	Approving proposed issue of Order in Council for the punishment and deportation of British subjects who may have aided the Chinese rebels	10
17	23,	Queen's Advocate	Approving fine inflicted upon Mr. W. Hart for infraction of Article XXXVIII of the Treaty of Tien-tsin	10
18	May 21,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. Andrews. The purchase of works of art for sale by Mr. Andrews at Peking brought him within the category of those who "enter the capital city of Peking for purposes of trade"	11
19	21,	Law Officers	Relative to sale of vessels belonging to late Anglo-Chinese fleet. Desire of Captain Osborn to rid himself of responsibility. As to impediments offered to sale by Her Majesty's Government	11
20	June 24,	Law Officers	Draft of Order in Council for imprisonment and deportation of British subjects aiding the rebels in China	13
21	25,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Sullivan. Money received from Chinese Government on account of assault should be returned	14
22	July 21,	Law Officers	Jurisdiction of Consular Courts in China in disputes between merchants and British shipmasters	15
23	26,	Law Officers	Approving Ordinance issued by Governor of Hong Kong for the admission of the depositions of witnesses in certain cases	16
24	Sept. 22,	Law Officers	Case of the "Carthage." Running down of a Chinese fishing-boat. Question of compensation. Suggests the expediency of proposed new Consular Court at Shanghae having jurisdiction in maritime cases	16
25	23,	Law Officers	Proposed Amoy port regulations. Fine to be imposed on British vessels entering a Chinese dock without a permit	17
26	Nov. 7,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Paragon." Claim of owners to compensation	17

DENMARK.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
27	Jan. 27,	Law Officers	Administration to effects of a deceased Danish subject in England. Opinion that in all cases in which there have been Treaties of Reciprocity between England and foreign countries, and in which the provisions of such Treaties have not been enforced by a statute in this country, it is not competent to Her Majesty's Government to execute the provisions of such Treaties, when they are not in accordance with our municipal law	18
28	Feb. 8,	Law Officers	Proposed instructions to Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen to allow of reasonable time for export of goods, the property of British subjects, previous to blockade of Prussian ports	18
29	11,	Law Officers	Iron-clad vessel building at Glasgow for Danish Government. Permission should be granted for launching under certain conditions	19
30	Feb. 17, 1864	Law Officers	Opinion relative to engagements of Great Britain and other Powers towards Denmark relative to the Duchy of Schleswig. Guarantee of 1720	19
31	27,	Queen's Advocate	Notification, for insertion in "London Gazette," of the blockade of the east coast of Schleswig-Holstein	23
32	Mar. 1,	Queen's Advocate	No objection to publication in "London Gazette" of Danish regulations relating to blockade and captures	24
33	3,	Law Officers	Approving proposed letter to Admiralty regarding instructions to Her Majesty's naval officers on subject of hostilities between Denmark and Austria and Prussia	24
34	4,	Queen's Advocate	Notice of intended capture of German vessels by Denmark should not be distributed by English pilots with the authority of Her Majesty's Government, such a proceeding being a breach of neutrality	24
35	8,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "London Gazette" of the blockade of Neustadt	25
36	15,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "London Gazette" of the blockade of Cammin, Swinemünde, Wolgast, Greifswalde, Stralsund, and Barth	25
37	23,	Queen's Advocate	Application of certain merchants at Belfast for interference of Her Majesty's Government to obtain permission from Danish Government for a Prussian vessel laden with flax-seed to depart from port of Marstrand, in Sweden	26
38	29,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of port of Swinemünde. A notification to a Consul is not necessary to establish an effective blockade	26
39	29,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Island of Fehmern. Notification for "London Gazette"	27
40	Apr. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Application for interference of Her Majesty's Government to obtain from that of Denmark a free pass for a Prussian vessel blockaded in the port of Wolgast, laden with goods for British merchants. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere, but might forward Memorial	27
41	18,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Dantzic and Pillau. Notification for "London Gazette"	27
42	May 19,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for insertion in "London Gazette," of the termination of the blockade of Prussian ports by Denmark	28
43	21,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Alma." Capture by a Danish vessel of war whilst on a voyage to the unblockaded port of Colberg. Question should be decided by Danish Prize Court	29
44	23,	Law Officers	Case of the "Princess Helena." Request for interference of Her Majesty's Government to obtain release of a vessel which had inadvertently entered a blockaded port	29
45	30,	Queen's Advocate	Approving publication in "London Gazette" of correspondence relating to the intended resumption of the blockade of German ports by Denmark, in the event of the failure of negotiations	30
46	June 14,	Law Officers	Opinion on objections raised by Prussia to the efficiency of the Danish blockade of the Prussian ports in the Baltic	30
47	15,	Law Officers	Application of Danish Minister for permission to sell an iron-clad vessel built for Danish Government by Messrs. Thomson, of Glasgow. Conditions upon which sale might be allowed	31
48	July 5,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "London Gazette," of the renewal of the blockade of German ports in the Baltic by Denmark	31
49	11,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Estella." Capture for breach of blockade. Her Majesty's Government should not interfere pending appeal to Superior Court	32
50	19,	Law Officers	Succession to property of Mr. Hugh Lang, a British subject, who died at St. Croix. Question of effect of a British subject taking out a burgher licence	32

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
51	July 19, 1864	Queen's Advocate	Application of Messrs. Moser and Son to be furnished with documents by Foreign Office to prove right to a cargo of iron wrecked on the coast of Jutland. Answer to be returned	33
52	20,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Ernst Jacob." Answer to be returned to application of Messrs. Flux and Argles	33
53	20,	Queen's Advocate	Telegram received from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen of raising of blockade of Prussian ports should be published in "London Gazette"	34
54	22,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Glen Grant." Seizure for an alleged attempt to break the blockade of Colberg. Her Majesty's Government should not interfere pending judicial inquiry	34
55	28,	Queen's Advocate	Further notification of the raising of the blockade of German ports by Denmark	34
56	Aug. 25,	Law Officers ..	Iron-clad vessel built for Danish Government at Glasgow. Her Majesty's Government cannot legally warn Messrs. Thomson and Co. against sale of vessel to Confederate States of America	35
57	Oct. 4,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Sarah." Illegal capture. Right of owners to costs and damages	36
57A	4,	Queen's Advocate	Demands made on Denmark by German Powers for compensation for losses sustained by German shipping during the war. Claims not supported by international law	36
57B	20,	Queen's Advocate	Further opinion on demands made on Denmark by German Powers for compensation on account of the losses sustained by German shipping during the war	37
58	Dec. 13,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Sarah." Illegal capture. Right of owner to indemnity	38

EQUATOR.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
59	July 21,	Law Officers ..	Withdrawal of exequatur of Mr. Mocatta, British Vice-Consul at Guayaquil. Specific reasons should be obtained from Equatorian Government for unusual step taken	38

FRANCE.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
60	Feb. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of captain of the French ship-of-war "Marcian" on the Governor of Antigua for the return of the passage-money of certain coolies who had been wrecked on board the French vessel "Persévérant" and landed in that colony	39
61	4,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion relative to application of Articles V to VIII of the Postal Convention between Great Britain and France of the 24th September, 1856, to all packets subsidized by the British Government	40
62	17,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Caroline Goodyear." Claim of owner to compensation for losses on account of the seizure of the "Caroline Goodyear" off Matamoros by a French ship of war. The character of her cargo (arms) justified detention, and Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to support claim to compensation	40
63	Mar. 14,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Blue Jacket." Validity of French blockade of coast of Mexico	41
64	22,	Queen's Advocate	Her Majesty's Government not liable for amount claimed by France on account of coolies wrecked on board the French vessel "Persévérant"	42
65	Apr. ,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "Gazette" of the blockade of the ports of Acapulco and Manzanilla by French squadron	42

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
66	April 26, 1864	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Blue Jacket." Justice of claim of owners, an effective blockade of Campeachy not being maintained by French ship of war	43
67	29,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "Gazette" of the blockade of the Rivers Goatzacoalcos and Tabasco	43
68	June 17,	Law Officers ..	Case of "Glover v. Persigny and another." Opinion that Earl Russell should attend the Court in pursuance of the subpœna, with documents required	44
69	18,	Law Officers ..	Commercial Convention with France. Cases of Messrs. Rossel and Co., and Messrs. Pitt Brothers. The detention of their goods in consequence of the report of the "experts" is contrary to the stipulations of the Treaty	44
70	Aug. 3,	Law Officers ..	Application of French Ambassador for the extradition of E. Dulac, a fraudulent bankrupt who had taken refuge in the Mauritius. Necessity of extending Treaty stipulations to Colonies, &c.	46
71	6,	Law Officers ..	Case of James Thornley. Arrest of a British subject in France on demand of Russian Ambassador. Illegal in the event of the non-existence of an Extradition Treaty between the two countries	47
72	Sept. 5,	Law Officers ..	Cases of the "Jules." Duty of Curator of Vacant Estates in the Island of Mauritius with regard to the distribution of effects of a deceased foreigner. Case of M. Reynaud	48
73	8,	Law Officers ..	Case of James Thornley. Question of right of a foreign Government to surrender criminals independently of any Treaty of Extradition. A British subject naturalized in Russia	48
74	17,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mesrs. Pitt. Claim of right to "expertise" is contrary to the stipulations of Commercial Convention of 1861. Precedence of international engagements over municipal laws	49
75	24,	Law Officers ..	Application of Serjeant Glover that the French Ambassador should be served with a subpœna through Foreign Office. Illegal conduct of Mr. Glover	50
76	Dec. 2,	Law Officers ..	Case of E. Dulac. Opinion that Treaty of Extradition of 1843, with Act of Parliament giving effect to it, do not extend beyond Great Britain	51
77	7,	Law Officers ..	Case of Messrs. Pitt Brothers. Question of compensation must be considered with reference to French law	52
78	9,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Westbrooke. Assault committed upon him by a French railway official. Must seek redress according to law of France	52
79	20,	Law Officers ..	Case of Messrs. Pitt Brothers. Amount due for the deterioration of property fairly stated by French experts	53

FRANKFORT.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
80	May 6,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Grimm. Claim to British protection upon having received a "Denization" Act in New South Wales	53

GENERAL.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
81	Apr. 13,	Attorney and Solicitor-General	Case of Lady Jackson. Proceedings to be adopted to obtain from her the official correspondence belonging to her late husband, Sir G. Jackson	54
82	May 5,	Attorney-General	Case of Lady Jackson. Inspection of papers should be made by Mr. Hertslet. Legal right of the Crown to production of papers	55

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
83	June 14, 1864	Attorney-General	Case of Lady Jackson. As to amount of compensation to be paid to her on account of surrender of papers	56
84	20,	Attorney-General	Case of Lady Jackson. Approving letter to Lady Jackson, informing her of conditions on which information against her in Court of Chancery will be dismissed	57
85	27,	Attorney-General	Case of Lady Jackson. Mr. Hertslet should attend at Lady Jackson's residence to select documents. Question of compensation	57
86	Aug. 22,	Law Officers	As to competency of British magistrates to deal with breaches of foreign maritime law committed within British jurisdiction by the crews of foreign vessels	57
87	Oct. 6,	Law Officers	Slave Trade. Opinion of proposed despatch to Her Majesty's Representatives in certain foreign countries, on the subject of the Slave Trade being declared piracy	58
88	Nov. 16,	Queen's Advocate	Report on proposed Act of Legislature of New South Wales to amend and consolidate the laws relating to merchant seamen	59

HANOVER.

89	Feb. 18,	Queen's Advocate	Answers to queries of Mr. Claypole as to what would happen to a cargo coming from the West Indies on board of an Hanoverian ship in the event of her capture by the Danes	60

HANS TOWNS.

90	Mar. 15,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "Gazette" relative to course to be observed by ships passing Prussian naval station at Jade	60

ITALY.

91	June 17,	Law Officers	Case of Miss J. E. Hall. Question of domicile previous to marriage. Both parties should have resided in Tuscany one calendar month previous to celebration of the marriage	61
92	Oct. 4,	Queen's Advocate	Demand made on the Governor of Malta by the Italian Government for extradition of two Italian criminals. Demand should be granted under Extradition Ordinance	62
93	Nov. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Approving despatch to Minister at Turin on subject of the validity of a marriage between a foreigner and a British subject	62

JAPAN.

94	Feb. 9,	Law Officers	Regulation issued by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires respecting the burning of blue lights and rockets by British vessels in harbours of Japan	62
95	Nov. 17,	Law Officers	Regulation issued by Her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa with reference to the killing or slaughtering animals for human foods	63

MEXICO.

96	July 19,	Law Officers	Complaints of masters of certain British vessels at loss and damage caused to them by the French blockade in the Gulf of Mexico	54

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
97	Aug. 4, 1864	Law Officers	Measures to be adopted with regard to the imprisonment of two British subjects by President Juarez, and illegal seizure of Captain Paulson by the United States' authorities on the Rio Grande	64
98	22,	Law Officers	Imprisonment of Messrs. Milmo and Gilgen at Tampico by order of authorities of President Juarez	65
99	Sept. 12,	Law Officers	Case of F. Rule and Mary Hooking. Approving conduct of Consul in refusing to marry them pending question before Appellate Court	65
100	15,	Queen's Advocate	Notification of raising of blockade of Gulf of Mexico and Pacific coast of Mexico	66
101	16,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Dr. Murray. Seizure of his property in Mexico. Extent of interference to be rendered by Her Majesty's Government	66

MONTE VIDEO.

102	Apr. 19,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Hall. Approving view of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires with regard to his intervention	67
103	July 11,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of J. Villanueva, a native of Gibraltar, on the Government of Monte Video, on account of injury done to his property by occupation of troops	68
104	Dec. 13,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "Gazette" of blockade of ports of Paysandú and Salto by Brazilian naval forces	68
105	13,	Queen's Advocate	Hostilities between Brazil and Uruguay. Right of Brazil to have recourse to reprisals against Uruguay. Right of interference with neutral vessels incident only to a state of war	69

MOROCCO.

106	June 17,	Queen's Advocate	Protection of British subjects and interests in Morocco. Approving instructions to Her Majesty's Minister	69

NEW GRANADA.

107	Sept. 22,	Law Officers	Murder of Mr. Hunter	70
108	27,	Queen's Advocate	Mosquito Indians Title to British protection under Treaty of Managua (January 28, 1860). Rights of Mosquito Indians within the territory assigned to them by Treaty. Grant to Commander Pim	70
109	Oct. 6,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Mercury." Application should be made to Columbian Government for repayment of charges illegally levied on Messrs. Longton and Co., the owners of the vessel.	71
110	Nov. 10,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. W. Yates. Claim to compensation for illegal imprisonment. Her Majesty's Government should not interfere pending appeal to Executive Government	72

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

111	Sept. 7,	Law Officers	Opinion relative to Court established in the Navigators' Islands for the trial by jury of foreigners accused of offences against life and property. Her Majesty's Government should avoid any appearance of sanction of such Court	73

1864

PERSIA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
112	June 25, 1864	Queen's Advocate	Instructions to be forwarded to Consul at Zanzibar relative to the disposal of slaves captured on the coast of that State ..	73
113	Nov. 29,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. P. Ralli to indemnity on account of losses sustained by him through unjust interference with his trade at Tabreez. Claim should be supported by Her Majesty's Government	74

PORTUGAL.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
114	June 4,	Law Officers ..	Mediation between Great Britain and Brazil. Approving draft of Memorandum to be presented to Count Lavradio regarding terms of mediation.	74
115	July 28,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mr. Lindsay. Cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to give his claim on the Portuguese Government a more energetic support	75
116	29,	Law Officers ..	Further Report on case of Mr. Lindsay with regard to opinion expressed by Dr. Twiss	77
117	Oct. 6,	Law Officers ..	Approving proposed reply to note of Portuguese Minister regarding basis for settlement of differences between Brazil and Great Britain	79
118	Dec. 6,	Attorney and Solicitor-General	Case of Mr. Lindsay and the British shareholders of the Union Mercantile Company. Unofficial support to be rendered by Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon	80

PRUSSIA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
119	Mar. 18,	Queen's Advocate	Danish blockade of Swinemünde. Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to publish denial of blockade as stated by Prussian Ambassador	80
120	22,	Queen's Advocate	Prussian instruction regarding the capture of enemies and suspected vessels should be published in "Gazette" ..	81
121	31,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Swinemünde. As to publication in "Gazette" of announcement of non-effective blockade	81
122	Apr. 7,	Law Officers ..	Blockade of Swinemünde. Announcement of blockade by Danish Minister previous to its being effectively instituted. Measures to be adopted	82
123	30,	Law Officers ..	Case of Messrs. Delcomyn. Destruction of property of a British subject by an enemy in the country of a belligerent. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere	83
123*	June 21,	Queen's Advocate	Statement of Prussian Plenipotentiaries in Conference as to Declaration of Paris Congress of March 30, 1856 ..	319
124	July 25,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the Norwegian steamer "Viken." Fired at by Prussian troops. The insult being to the Norwegian flag, Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to make representations on account of the British subjects on board.	83
125	Aug. 25,	Law Officers ..	Observations on Prussian Prize Court. Regulations ..	83
126	29,	Law Officers ..	Report on proposed modification of Convention with Prussia for the mutual surrender of criminals. Question regarding political offences	84
127	Sept. 15,	Law Officers ..	Prussian Prize Court regulations. Communication to be made to Prussian Government of non-acquiescence of Great Britain in principles contained in regulations	86

RIVER PLATE.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
128	Sept. 8, 1864	Queen's Advocate	Condemning practice of Consuls in granting to foreign vessels British provisional certificates of registry ..	86
129	Dec. 26,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Monte Video by the Brazils. Her Majesty's Representatives at Monte Video and Buenos Ayres should insist upon due notice being given to British vessels of existence of blockade, and also that British vessels already in port should be allowed a fair time to depart with their cargoes	87

SALVADOR.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
130	June 25,	Law Officers ..	Articles in new Constitution of the State of Salvador relating to the naturalization and future position of foreigners in that Republic. Approving representation made by Mr. Fraser ..	87
131	Aug. 13,	Queen's Advocate	Marriage by British Consul of Mr. and Mrs. Hocking, two Roman Catholic British subjects. Imprisonment of Mr. Hocking for having been married contrary to the laws of Salvador. Civil character of marriages by Consuls. Necessity of obtaining recognition of provisions of Consular Act by Government of Salvador	88

SAN DOMINGO.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
132	Jan. 1,	Queen's Advocate	Spanish blockade of coast of San Domingo. Spanish Government should be informed that Great Britain cannot recognize a blockade which is unsupported by an adequate force ..	89
133	19,	Queen's Advocate	Position of Mr. Heneken, with regard to his rights as a British subject, by his acceptance of the office of member of the Council of Administration at San Domingo	89
134	26,	Law Officers ..	Claims on account of destruction of British property, arising out of operations of Spanish troops for suppression of civil war in San Domingo. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	90
135	Mar. 17,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Julia." Capture during Spanish blockade. Question of a de facto blockade	91
136	23,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Julia." Protest of Messrs. Remouard and Bode, the owners of the vessel. They should protect their interests before Spanish Prize Court previous to obtaining assistance of Her Majesty's Government	92
137	Apr. 11,	Law Officers ..	Capture by Spanish cruizers of the British schooners "Rapid" and "Darrill." Illegal character of capture. Assistance to be rendered by Her Majesty's Consul at Port-au-Prinee ..	92
138	28,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Rapid." Illegal and cruel treatment of crew by Spanish authorities. Owners of British captured vessels should be informed that they should seek redress in Spanish Courts previous to appeal to Her Majesty's Government ..	93
139	28,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Julia." Her condemnation by Spanish Court. Non-effective character of blockade. Her Majesty's Government should apply for a new trial	93
140	May 26,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mrs. Good to compensation on account of death of her son, who was killed in the house of the British Vice-Consul at Puerto Plata by Spanish soldiery. Vice-Consul should report circumstances	94
141	31,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Darrill." Her Majesty's Government should interfere to obtain redress from Spanish Government for outrage committed by Spanish officers	95

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
142	May 31, 1864	Law Officers	Case of the "Rapid." Are still of opinion that the capture was illegal	95
143	Aug. 22,	Law Officers	Seizure and detention of British subjects and vessels by Spanish authorities on coast of San Domingo. Necessity of British Government recognizing the belligerent rights of both the contending parties in San Domingo. Claim of Spain to jurisdiction of six miles from the mainland. Cases of the "President," "Pioneer," and "Forward." William Abbot.	96
144	29,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Rapid," "Forward," and "President." Seizure by Spanish cruizers off coast of San Domingo. Satisfactory explanation of Spanish Government with regard to the "Rapid." Owners of British vessels should be informed that they must appear in Spanish Prize Courts	98
145	Sept. 7,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Messrs. Levy and Tweedy. Claim in connection with investments in the Haytian funds	99
146	8,	Law Officers	Opinion of proposed Proclamation of Governor of Jamaica relative to blockade of San Domingo	99
147	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "President." Illegal seizure by Spanish cruizers. Her Majesty's Government should support claim of owner (Mr. Hinson), as also that of Mr. Ambroise	100
148	22,	Law Officers	Opinion with regard to the recognition by Great Britain of the belligerent rights of the insurgents of San Domingo. Consider that the Declaration of Paris with regard to privateering would be equally binding on the insurgents as on Spain.	100

SIAM.

149	Dec. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Complaint of Mr. C. O. Johnstone against proceedings of Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok in the case of Moung Shwe Gan v. the Chief of Chang Mai	102

SPAIN.

150	Mar. 22,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Criticado." No further steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government	104
151	Apr. 6,	Queen's Advocate	Imprisonment of American seamen at Cadiz forming portion of crew of the British vessel "Continental." Complaint of American Minister at Madrid	104
152	Aug. 17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Azorian." Losses sustained by owners in consequence of the defective sanitary laws of Spain. Further application should be made to the Spanish Government for an indemnity	105
153	Sept. 5,	Law Officers	Case of the "Colorado." Application of Messrs. Rothery for official papers should not be granted, but usual steps should be taken by them if required for use in a court of law. Foreign Office should not furnish official documents for private litigation	106
154	Oct. 6,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. W. Goodman. No pecuniary demand should be made on Spanish Government on account of Mr. Goodman's imprisonment in Cuba	106
155	Nov. 3,	Law Officers	Report as to extent of maritime jurisdiction claimed by Great Britain from mainland. Three-mile jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over maritime creeks and inlets, and the mouths of river. Possession of rocks, reefs, or banks. Importance of an agreement between great Maritime Powers extending the three-miles limit	107
156	Dec. 16,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Joaquina." Dispute between master and seamen. Question of jurisdiction arising out of Treaty stipulations between Great Britain and Spain. Necessity of Spanish Consul pleading objection to jurisdiction of Scotch law courts	107

SWITZERLAND.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
157	Jan. 11, 1864	Law Officers	Marriages of British subjects abroad according to the lex loci not recognized by the law of England, if within the prohibited degrees, either of consanguinity or affinity	108
158	Dec. 15,	Law Officers	Suggests that certificates of marriage of British subjects wheresoever celebrated by ministers in holy orders, as well as at the Legation, should be transmitted to the Bishop of London's office	109

TUNIS.

159	Aug. 29,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Heyn. Claim against Her Majesty's Government on account of losses sustained by him owing to state of affairs at Sfax	110

TURKEY.

160	Jan. 2,	Attorney-General	Requests copy of Treaty of 1858 concerning the Principalities	110
161	8,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Price. Forfeiture of deposit-money by Turkish Government, on account of non-fulfilment of contract for proposed railway between Samsoon and Sivas. Legality of forfeiture. As to interference of Her Majesty's Government	111
162	12,	Law Officers	Case of the Ionian monk Niphon. Seizure of monastic property by Government of Principalities. Effect of stipulations of Treaty of 1858 on such property. Measures to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government	112
163	19,	Law Officers	Intended cession of Ionian Islands to Greece. Temporary grant of British protection to Ionian subjects pending settlement of cession	113
164	Feb. 20,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion as to interpretation of IVth Article of Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Turkey of 1861 with regard to duty to be levied on the produce of Turkey, when exported by a British subject to any other place than a British possession	114
165	Mar. 7,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Turkish subjects to certain lands in Thebes. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	114
166	14,	Law Officers	Murder of a Turkish soldier by an Ionian at Smyrna. Approving conduct of Vice-Consul Logie. Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople should represent that the Ionian had been condemned without a proper trial	115
167	Apr. 9,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Turkish subjects to lands near Thebes. Observations on Treaty stipulations. No adequate case for the intervention of Protecting Powers	115
168	May 11,	Law Officers	Opinion as to right of British Consular Agent in Tripoli to exercise jurisdiction in cases in which the Plaintiff is an Ottoman subject and the Defendant a British subject. Expediency of communicating with other foreign Powers on the subject	117
169	June 14,	Law Officers	Are of opinion that the right of navigating the rivers and canals of the Ottoman Empire under the British flag is not secured to Her Majesty's subjects by the most favoured nation Treaty clauses	118
170	23,	Law Officers	Case of Dionysius Focca. Claim on the Government of Principalities to compensation or indemnity on account of his illegal dispossession of certain landed property	119
171	July 14,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Leahy. Claim on Turkish Government on account of plans furnished for a railway between Belgrade and Constantinople. Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to interfere further in the matter	120

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
172	July 23, 1864	Law Officers	Claim of Messrs. Gregory and Spiridion Cuppa to be registered as British subjects	121
173	Aug. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Ada." Legality of seizure of arms found on board by Turkish officers	121
174	13,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the widow Derdavit, a British protected subject married to a Turkish subject. Claim to dowry out of personal property left by late husband	122
175	22,	Law Officers	Approving revised Order in Council respecting British Indian subjects in Ottoman dominions	122
176	24,	Law Officers	Proposed amalgamation of offices of Consul-General and Judge at Constantinople. Supplemental Order in Council required to effect changes contemplated	123
177	Oct. 10,	Law Officers	Case of the "Mars" and "Smyrna." Collision on the River Danube. Question of validity of the regulations issued by the European Commission of the Danube on the 27th June, 1860	123
178	28,	Queen's Advocate	Refusal of British Consul at Trebizond to give up the occupatiou of a house belonging to the Apostolic Mission at Trebizond. Her Majesty's Government should desire Mr. Stevens to cease occupation	128
179	Nov. 14,	Law Officers	Are of opinion that the export duty of 5 per cent. imposed by Prince Couza in the Principalities is contrary to the IVth Article of the Treaty of Kanlidja	128
180	14,	Law Officers	Trading privileges granted by Turkey to Austria on the frontier provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovine are contrary to Treaty stipulations with Great Britain	129
181	17,	Law Officers	Draft of a new Order in Council concerning regulations for navigation of the Danube	129
182	29,	Law Officers	Circular issued by Moldo-Wallachian authorities with regard to the expulsion of foreigners from the Principalities. Terms of circular are not contrary to the Capitulations and Treaties between the Porte and Great Britain	130
183	Dec. 6,	Law Officers	Opinion that the fees imposed by the Levant Orders in Council in lieu of probate duties, &c., are not payable in respect of the interest of a British subject in Turkish real estate	131
184	17,	Law Officers	Claim of British and American missionaries at Bagdad to same privileges with regard to Customs duties as are accorded to Roman Catholic religious establishments	131

UNITED STATES.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
185	Jan. 6, 1864	Law Officers	Case of the "Pacifique." Capture by United States' cruizer on Coast of Florida, and subsequent release by Prize Court. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to claim indemnity for capture and detention	132
186	9,	Law Officers	Approving views of Lord Lyons as to claiming release of British subjects captured whilst serving by compulsion in Confederate army. Case of J. Taylor. Oath of allegiance and oath of neutrality	133
186A	11,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Kennedy. His arrest by United States' authorities for having served in Confederate army. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	133
187	11,	Law Officers	Case of W. Thompson. Illegality of imprisonment of British subjects for attempting to run a blockade	134
188	12,	Law Officers	Cases of the "St. George," "Anglia," "Scotia," and "Emma." Legality of capture and condemnation	134
189	12,	Law Officers	Case of the "Science." Her illegal seizure by a Federal cruizer at Matamoros. Remonstrance to be made to United States' Government. Shipment of specie by Lizardi and Co. on board the "Dashing Wave"	135

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
190	Jan. 12, 1864	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. Hansard. Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to protect British subjects who voluntarily reside in a country in which civil war exists.	136
191	14,	Queen's Advocate	Repair of blockade runners in Government dockyards at Bermuda. A neutral Gevernment not called upon to assist in maintaining a belligerent blockade	136
192	15,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. J. Crutchett. Claim to compensation on account of the appropriation of his property near Washington for military purposes. Mr. Crutchett, having become a domiciled citizen of the United States, cannot claim intervention of Her Majesty's Government	137
193	15,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Her seizure during a voyage between New York and Portland, by Confederate passengers holding a Commission from Confederate Government, and taken into port of Halifax. Violation of Her Majesty's territory by officers of the United States' ship "Ella" and "Annie." Escape of Wade	138
194	15,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Her seizure at Angra Pequena by the United States' ship "Vanderbilt." Explanation to be required of United States' Government	140
195	..	Attorney and Solicitor-General	Case of Mr. Hardcastle, a British subject shot by a sentry during his illegal detention in prison at Washington. Sacred character of a safe-conduct pass. Representation to be made to United States' Government	140
196	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Labuan." Illegal capture at Matamoros. Prize Court has no jurisdiction or power to award damages against United States' Government, or against captors; but question of damages should be decided, extra-judicially, between Government and Government	141
197	19,	Law Officers	Slave Trade Treaty. Article IX of Treaty at variance with Act of Parliament, 25 and 26 Vict., cap. 40, sec. 16, regarding the surrender of persons found on board Slave Trade vessels. A foreign subject found on board should be delivered up to the State to which the vessel belonged	143
198	23,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sir W. Peel." Her illegal seizure in neutral waters. Right of a neutral to whom the injured vessel belongs to make representation	143
199	27,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Opinion as to issue of a warrant without previous reference to depositions. Necessity of magistrate receiving evidence previous to issuing warrant. Possible necessity of reference to Her Majesty's Governmen previous to delivery of person committed. Copy of depositions should be allowed to prisoners' Counsel. Sufficiency of apology of the United States' Government for violation of British territory. Violation of Foreign Enlistment Act should alleged pirates be subjects of Nova Scotia	145
200	27,	Law Officers	Case of the "Stephen Hart." Legality of condemnation	146
201	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Shooting of James Gray by officer of the "Vanderbilt." Officer should be tried for murder	146
202	30,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Query as to possessory rights of Great Britain over Penguin Island	147
203	30,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Sir W. Peel," "Science," "Volant," and "Dashing Wave," vessels seized in neutral Mexican waters. Representations to be made to United States' Government. Right of seizure of vessels within United States' waters, with contraband of war actually on board. Illegality of seizure of a vessel supposed to have carried contraband of war on outward voyage. Seizure of neutral vessels trading simpliciter with Confederates, apart from questions of contraband or blockade. Admiral Milne should be instructed to prevent, by force if necessary, the seizure of British vessels in Mexican waters	147
204	30,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Shaver. Opinion against compromise proposed by the United States' Government	149

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
205	Feb. 2, 1864	Law Officers	Liverpool iron-clads. Period at which case will come before Court of Exchequer	149
206	2,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sir W. Peel." Lord Lyons should remonstrate. Illegality of considering Confederate cotton as contraband of war	149
207	2,	Law Officers	Capture of the "Sea Bride" by the "Alabama." Further note from Mr. Adams claiming compensation. "Sea Bride" was not captured within British waters. Answer to be sent to claim for compensation	150
208	2,	Law Officers	Observations on Report of the United States' Secretary of the Navy, with regard to maintenance of neutrality by Great Britain during the civil war, and also the recognition of belligerent rights of Confederates	151
209	5,	Law Officers	Case of the "Labuan." Approving instructions to Lord Lyons	152
210	6,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Approving instructions to Lord Lyons. Opinion as to taking evidence of second mate of the "Saxon"	152
211	8,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sea Bride." Opinion with regard to the status of the "Tuscaloosa," as a captured vessel, but subsequently commissioned as a ship of war, previous to being judicially condemned by a court of competent jurisdiction	153
212	8,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. A. Nicol. Destruction of property by Federal troops at Kingston, North Carolina. Answer to be sent to Mr. Nicol	155
213	9,	Law Officers	Iron-clads at Liverpool. Inexpedient to present correspondence to Parliament previous to trial	156
214	9,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion as to effect on validity of blockade, of the grant of permission by the United States to French Government to export certain tobacco at Richmond, purchased previous to the civil war	156
215	9,	Law Officers	Case of the "H. G. Berry." Her detention by United States' authorities at New Orleans when bound for Matamoros, in order to prevent communication of military intelligence. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to remonstrate	157
216	10,	Law Officers	Approving instructions of Admiralty to commanding officer in the East Indies respecting treatment of Confederate vessels of war in British ports	158
217	10,	Law Officers	Case of the "Margaret" and "Jessie." Violation of Her Majesty's territorial jurisdiction by United States' gunboat "Rhode Island"	158
218	10,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion against course of United States' Government in declaring cotton, articles of food, and materials of clothing to be contraband of war	159
219	11,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Approves conduct of Governor of New Brunswick in allowing the accused copies of requisition and warrant	160
220	11,	Law Officers	Case of the "H. G. Berry." Further Report	160
221	12,	Law Officers	Observations on complaints of Mr. Adams at abuse of belligerent privileges by blockade-runners	161
222	13,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Query as to British jurisdiction over Angra Pequena. Employment of the "Saxon" in conveying a prize cargo landed from the "Tuscaloosa." Right of widow of mate of the "Saxon" to compensation. Coals taken by the "Vanderbilt" from Penguin Island	162
223	13,	Law Officers	Harsh treatment of crews captured on board blockade-runners. Cases of the "Granite City," O'Neill, P. Hamilton, and "Banshee"	163

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
224	Feb. 16, 1864	Law Officers	Imprisonment of Messrs. Canty, Eneas, and Rahming. Approving instructions to Lord Lyons	164
225	16,	Law Officers	Investigation by a Military Commission into cases of British subjects confined in Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren	164
226	18,	Law Officers	Imprisonment of J. McHugh. Case of the "Bermuda"	165
227	18,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion expressed in his Report of the 10th instant (see No. 218) does apply to the export of cotton from, as well as import of cotton into, the Confederate States	165
228	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Seizure of coals on Penguin Island, the property of Messrs. Anderson, Saxon, and Co., by the United States' ship "Vanderbilt"	166
229	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Springbok." Evidence justifies condemnation	166
230	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Antona." Evidence justifies condemnation	167
231	19,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Crutchett. Claim to compensation for occupation of his property by military authorities at Washington. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	167
232	20,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Evidence of H. Carrew regarding murder of Mr. Gray	168
233	20,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Alliance," "Gondar," and "Empress." Question of award of costs and damages against the officers making the capture	169
234	20,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tuscaloosa." Her detention by British authorities at the Cape. Should be restored to Confederate commander	170
235	20,	Law Officers	Application of Mr. J. Mulholland for assistance to procure the permission of the United States' Government to allow of the removal of certain cotton, the property of British subjects, from the Confederate States	171
236	22,	Law Officers	Captures by private armed or non-commissioned vessels	171
237	22,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tuscaloosa." Amended draft of instructions to Lord Lyons	172
238	22,	Law Officers	Island of Sombrero. Proposed grant of lease to Mr. Dumas. Reservation of rights of United States	172
239	22,	Law Officers	Case of Lieutenant Rooke, an officer in Her Majesty's service. His imprisonment in Fort Lafayette for conveying letters for belligerents	173
240	26,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Banshee" and Mr. P. Hamilton. Right of Federal authorities to treat British subjects found on board Confederate vessels as prisoners of war	173
241	27,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. J. M. Wilson. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere to obtain restoration of his landed property in the State of Pennsylvania	174
242	27,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tuscaloosa." Further papers do not require alteration in draft of instructions to Lord Lyons.	175
243	Mar. 1,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Murder of Mr. Gray. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to recognize the decision of the court-martial	175
244	2,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. H. A. Lewers. Seizure of property of a British subject by military authorities in the United States. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere, Mr. Lewers being entitled to same redress as American citizens	176
245	2,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Observations on Mr. Seward's letter to Lord Lyons	176

1864

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
246	Mar. 4, 1864	Law Officers	Cases of the "Alabama" and "Chesapeake." Application of United States' Consul to Governor of Newfoundland for detention of those vessels should they visit that Colony. No grounds for such detention	177
247	4,	Law Officers	Opinion on proposed instructions to naval officers with regard to treatment of belligerent cruizers and their prizes in ports of Her Majesty's dominions	177
248	5,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Dashing Wave," "Volant," and "Sir W. Peel." Opinion on proposed instructions to Lord Lyons	178
249	5,	Law Officers	Treatment of British subjects captured on board blockade-runners. Approving letters to Mr. Adams and Lord Lyons	179
250	7,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. Mc Hugh, and treatment of vessels belonging to Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm, and Co. Approving instructions to Lord Lyons	179
251	7,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Importance of Her Majesty's Government maintaining the principles of international law with regard to treatment of British subjects captured on board blockade-runners	179
252	7,	Law Officers	Case of the "Echo." Non-interference pending appeal	180
253	7,	Law Officers	Case of the "Blanche" or "General Rusk." Illegality of her capture in neutral waters. Her Majesty's Government should continue to maintain position hitherto assumed	181
254	9,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tuscaloosa." Opinion on draft of instructions to Lord Lyons	182
255	15,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Princess Royal" and of other vessels brought before District Prize Court at Philadelphia	182
256	14,	Law Officers	Treatment of British subjects confined in Fort Lafayette. Representation to be made by Lord Lyons	183
257	14,	Law Officers	Cases of T. Rich, J. Ring, and Vice-Consul Butterfield	183
258	14,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. W. H. Ross. Appropriation of property near Washington by United States' authorities for military purposes. Lord Lyons should use friendly offices	184
259	15,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. J. M. Wilson. Should seek redress in United States' courts of law, with regard to injury inflicted on his property	185
260	16,	Law Officers	Case of J. McHugh	185
261	17,	Law Officers	Case of the "Stephen Hart"	186
262	18,	Law Officers	Murder of Mr. J. Gray, the mate of the "Saxon." For the present Her Majesty's Government should rest satisfied with trial by court-martial	186
263	18,	Law Officers	Case of the "Victor." Treatment of crew	186
264	19,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. R. Atkin, Captain of the "Dennis Hill." Illegal conduct towards the seaman Broom. Jurisdiction of United States' Admiralty Court	187
265	21,	Law Officers	Trial of British subjects confined in Fort Lafayette by a Military Commission. Illegality of proceeding. Representation to be made to United States' Government	188
266	22,	Law Officers	Case of the "Dart." Violation of British territory by the United States' ship "Vanderbilt"	189
267	22,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. Gray. Capture on board the blockade-runner "Ella and Annie." His long residence in Georgia, and his having identified himself with the Confederate cause, would not necessitate official interference	189
268	23,	Law Officers	Seizure of iron-clads at Birkenhead. Observations on correspondence with Messrs. Bravay	189
269	Mar. 23, 1864	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Observations on proceedings of Colonial authorities in New Brunswick, regarding the extradition of persons who seized that vessel	190
270	23,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Her seizure and detention in consequence of having on board a portion of the cargo of the "Conrad," which had been captured by the "Alabama." Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere at present	191
271	23,	Law Officers	Case of the "Hiawatha." Appeal to be made to the United States' Government not to carry sentence into effect	192
272	23,	Law Officers	Case of the "Amphion," a frigate sold out of Her Majesty's navy and supposed to be fitting out for Confederate service. No case for interference	192
273	23,	Law Officers	Claim of beneficiaries under the settlement of the late Mr. J. Purvis. Question of compensation for damage done to real estate during civil war. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	193
274	29,	Law Officers	Iron-clads. Amended draft of letter of Admiralty to Messrs. Bravay	193
275	29,	Law Officers	Arrest of Consul-General for the United States at Montreal. Seizure of cattle of Messrs. West and Davies. Opinion of order prohibiting export of live stock	194
276	31,	Law Officers	Case of the "Amphion." Deficiency of evidence to prove intention to violate Foreign Enlistment Act	194
277	April 4,	Law Officers	Case of the "Kearsarge." Approving answer to Mr. Adams' request that the "Kearsarge" might be repaired in the Victoria Docks	195
278	4,	Law Officers	Opinion regarding the right of a neutral ship of war to enter a blockaded port	195
279	6,	Law Officers	Case of James O'Neill. Remonstrance to be made by Lord Lyons	197
280	6,	Law Officers	Treatment of British subjects captured on board blockade-runners. Violation of international law. Policy to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government	198
281	6,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Hardcastle. Amended draft of instructions to Lord Lyons	199
282	6,	Law Officers	Violation of despatches addressed by British Consul at Galveston to British Minister at Washington, and found in letter-bag of a belligerent. Representation to be made to United States' Government	200
283	6,	Law Officers	Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, terminating the blockade of Brownsville, in Texas, but placing certain restrictions on trade. Opinion as to legality of restriction	200
284	6,	Law Officers	Restrictions on trade between New York and British Colonies contrary to Treaty obligations. Instructions to be sent to Lord Lyons. Case of C. Harris	201
285	7,	Law Officers	Demand of United States' Ministers for extradition of persons accused of piracy on board the "Joseph L. Gerrity." Amended draft of answer to Mr. Adams	202
286	9,	Law Officers	Imprisonment of British subjects found on board the Confederate steamer "Antonica," property of Barnett and Jones. Instructions to be sent to Lord Lyons	202
287	11,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sylvanus." Imprisonment of crew without trial. Treatment of crews captured on board blockade-runners. Strong remonstrance to be made by Lord Lyons	203
288	11,	Law Officers	Case of the "Don José." Illegality of capture. Lord Lyons should renew application for compensation	203

1864

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
289	April 12, 1864	Law Officers	Cases of the "Peterhoff," "Dolphin," and "Pearl." Legality of decisions of United States' Prize Courts	204
290	12,	Law Officers	Case of the "Banshee." Illegality of long imprisonment of the crew	205
291	12,	Law Officers	New Conscription Act of the United States. Further instructions to Lord Lyons unnecessary	205
292	15,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Crutchett. No reason to change former opinion	206
293	19,	Lord Advocate	Case of the "Hawk." Not sufficient evidence to cause her detention	206
294	19,	Law Officers	Children of United States' citizens born on British territory. British Government not called upon to claim exemption from conscription	206
295	21,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Restitution of vessel and cargo. Question of damages. Case of Mr. J. Gray. Claim on account of coals sent to Angra Pequena to supply the "Alabama"	207
296	22,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Sea Bride," a vessel destroyed by the Confederates, and cargo sent to the Mauritius. The Governor of that Colony had no power to seize the cargo	208
297	22,	Law Officers	Case of the "Blanche." Approving instructions to Lord Lyons	208
298	26,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Approving course pursued by Lord Lyons with regard to trial of officers accused of murder of Mr. Gray	208
299	26,	Law Officers	Opinion as to relaxation of Neutrality Proclamation with regard to United States' vessels of war employed on coast of Africa for suppression of Slave Trade	209
300	26,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Sir W. Peel" and the "Matamoros." Captures in the Rio Grande. Illegality of hearsay evidence	210
301	26,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Approving conduct of General Doyle. Suggests substitution of a permanent salary for fees to Judge in High Court of Admiralty in New Brunswick. Decision in extradition case was satisfactory	210
302	26,	Law Officers	Case of the "Hawk." Insufficiency of evidence to prove that she had been fitted out for the Confederate service	211
303	28,	Law Officers	Enlistment of British subjects for Confederate service. Proceedings should be taken against Messrs. Seymour, Bradshaw, Cunningham, and Buchanan	212
304	28,	Law Officers	Opinion on proposed Return to Address of House of Lords respecting claims of British subjects on United States' Government. Observations on Memorandum attached	212
305	May 6,	Law Officers	Treatment as prisoners of war of British subjects captured on board of blockade-runners. Crews of the "Marianne" and "Don"	213
306	7,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. Turner	213
307	7,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Report on further papers	213
308	7,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tuscaloosa." Question of restoration of prizes illegally captured. Proposed instructions to Colonial Governors	214
309	9,	Law Officers	Treatment of British subjects captured on board blockade-runners. Firm representation to be made to United States' Government	216
310	9,	Law Officers	Case of the "Scylla," a British vessel inveigled into American waters and seized as a prize	217
311	10,	Law Officers	Restrictions on trade between New York and British North American Colonies. Violation of Treaty obligations	217

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
312	May 10, 1864	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. J. Turner. Seizure of goods by Customs' authorities at Boston, in consequence of under-valuation. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	218
313	11,	Law Officers	Claim of United States' Consul at the Mauritius to restitution of cargo of the "Sea Bride," a Confederate prize, and brought to that island by the French vessel "Sirène." Question should be decided by civil tribunals	219
314	12,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. McHugh. False imprisonment. Lord Lyons should press for his release	220
315	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "Georgia," a Confederate cruizer. Arrival at Liverpool, and proposed repairs. Rumours of her intended sale. Measures to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government	220
316	16,	Law Officers	Case of the "Springbok." Report on article in the "Mémorial Diplomatique," and Judgment of Judge Betts. Supports view of the latter on subject of capture of contraband of war during voyage between neutral ports	221
317	21,	Law Officers	Fraudulent enlistment in the United States of certain British subjects induced to proceed to that country under false pretences. Lord Lyons should demand release	223
318	21,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Nicol. Claim on account of losses sustained by him on occupation of town of Kingston by Federal troops. Should seek same remedies as are competent to American citizens	223
319	24,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. G. T. Jones to compensation on account of his imprisonment at St. Louis	224
320	24,	Law Officers	Case of the "Excelsior." Evidence insufficient to advise interference	225
321	25,	Law Officers	Case of the "Matamoras." Capture of vessels in the Rio Grande—"Sir W. Peel," "Dashing Wave," "Science," and "Volant." Illegality of captures in neutral waters upon suspicion	225
322	25,	Law Officers	Case of the "York." Right of owners to compensation. Destruction of a neutral vessel bound on a lawful voyage	226
323	25,	Law Officers	Case of the "Clyde." Unable to form opinion without a copy of Judgment	227
324	27,	Law Officers	Case of the "Lilla." Justice of condemnation. Refusal of United States to acknowledge jurisdiction of Confederate Prize Court	227
325	31,	Law Officers	Opinion on Bill in United States' Senate, for the adjustment of the claims of aliens for loss of their property during civil war	228
326	June 1,	Law Officers	Case of the "Florida." Opinion on measures proposed to be adopted by Admiral Hope with regard to the destruction of British vessels by the "Florida." Question should be discussed by British and Confederate Governments, and not decided by the Admiral	229
327	4,	Law Officers	Case of the "Pearl," captured on suspicion. Payment of costs of judicial investigation	229
328	6,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Opinion on trial of United States' officer for murder of Mr. Gray	230
329	6,	Queen's Advocate	Instructions might be sent to Lord Lyons to take steps to serve legal notices on Major Hoffman of the United States' army, as requested by War Office	231
330	7,	Law Officers	Case of the "Georgia." Her Majesty's Government not called upon to take further steps	232
331	9,	Law Officers	Approving instructions proposed to be sent to Admiral Hope	232

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
332	June 13, 1864	Law Officers	Treatment of British subjects captured on board blockade-runners as prisoners of war is contrary to international law. Expediency of a joint representation of the Maritime States against such violation	233
333	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "Dantzic," suspected of being fitted out for Confederate service. Measures to be adopted	234
334	17,	Law Officers	Case of the "Rappahannock." Proceedings against agents employed for enlistment of seamen	234
335	17,	Law Officers	Case of the "Betsey." Evidence insufficient to call for interference of Her Majesty's Government	235
336	17,	Law Officers	Case of the "Teresita." Approving judgment of United States' Court	235
337	18,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. G. A. Mason. Imprisonment in Fort Warren justified by his conduct. Position of British subjects who are domiciled in the United States	236
338	20,	Law Officers	Case of T. Tulley and others. Kidnapping of British subjects into the naval and military service of the United States. Her Majesty's Government should remonstrate	237
339	20,	Law Officers	Proclamation of President of the United States on the termination of the blockade of Brownsville. Restrictions on trade. Right of blockade cannot lawfully be enforced against neutrals by a belligerent who is actually in possession of port said to be blockaded	237
340	24,	Law Officers	Case of Peter Needham. Alleged abduction from Canada by United States' authorities	238
341	27,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Eneas and Mr. Rahming. Imprisonment on account of participation in Confederate hostilities. Delay in trial	238
342	28,	Law Officers	Case of the "Betsey." Sale of a ship by a belligerent to a neutral. Liability to capture in the event of such transfer not being bonâ fide	239
343	28,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. R. Hall. Violation of military line. No ground for remonstrance	240
344	28,	Law Officers	Summons addressed by military authorities at Baltimore to Her Majesty's Consul to appear as a witness on a trial	240
345	29,	Law Officers	Approving Ordinance issued at Hong Kong for the observance of neutrality during hostilities in the United States	241
346	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Dart." Refusal of a neutral to lie-to on being summoned by a belligerent. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	241
347	July 5,	Law Officers	Case of the "Alabama." Answer to be returned to complaint of Mr. Adams respecting conduct of the owner of the "Deerhound"	242
348	5,	Law Officers	Treatment of British subjects captured on board Confederate vessels	243
349	11,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Abigail," "Fanny Crenshaw," and "Ann E. Grant." Sale of belligerent ships to neutrals. Illegal pretension of United States' Minister respecting right of seizure in Brazilian waters. Vessels cannot be protected on the high seas by a British ship of war against belligerent right of search	244
350	12,	Law Officers	Restrictions on trade between New York and British North American Colonies	244
351	15,	Law Officers	Arrest of certain British Canadian subjects at San Francisco on suspicion of conspiring to seize one of the Panama line of steamers. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	246

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
352	July 15, 1864	Law Officers	Cases of the "Flying Scud," "Cosmopolite," and "Amelia Ann"	246
353	15,	Law Officers	Privileges of British Consuls in the United States. Summons issued to Her Majesty's Consul at Baltimore to appear as a witness before a Military Commission. Expediency of arrangements being made with the United States for the mutual surrender of deserters	247
354	19,	Law Officers	Proceedings of Philadelphia Prize Courts	248
355	20,	Law Officers	Case of the "Pearl"	248
356	20,	Law Officers	Order issued by Military Authorities at Memphis, prohibiting foreigners not enrolled in the Militia from carrying on business. Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake to protect British subjects domiciled in a foreign city in time of civil war	249
357	20,	Law Officers	Case of Dr. Booth; his claim for compensation, 1st, for imprisonment; 2nd, for injuries inflicted on his landed property, &c., by soldiers of the United States. The refusal of Dr. Booth to give his parole "not to do anything inimical to the United States," justified his detention. Should obtain compensation for losses by the same means as other landed proprietors	250
358	21,	Law Officers	Case of the "Saxon." Illegal seizure of coals at Angra Pequena by United States' ship of war. Violation of international law	250
359	21,	Law Officers	Case of the "Greyhound"	251
360	21,	Law Officers	Case of Clarke King. His enlistment whilst in a state of intoxication. Representation to be made by Lord Lyons	252
361	26,	Law Officers	Approving letter to Mr. Adams relating to conduct of Mr. Lancaster on the occasion of the sinking of the "Alabama"	252
362	26,	Law Officers	Case of the "Volant." Seizure by United States' cruizers in the Rio Grande. Observations on Judgment condemning the "Volant." Course to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government	253
363	26,	Law Officers	Observations on proposed Bill introduced into the United States' House of Representatives "to increase duties on imports and for other purposes"	254
364	26,	Law Officers	Applicability of Extradition Treaty to Hudson's Bay Settlement	256
365	28,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sylvanus." Unsatisfactory report of United States' Secretary of the Navy respecting the sinking of the "Sylvanus." United States' Government should be distinctly apprised that Her Majesty's Government will not permit British subjects captured on board blockade-runners to be punished by penal treatment	256
366	28,	Law Officers	Case of the "Grey Jacket," a captured Confederate vessel. The release of British seamen serving on board cannot be officially demanded	257
367	30,	Law Officers	Case of J. O'Neill. The witness M. Murphy required to appear at trial of United States' officers should be sent to the United States	258
368	Aug. 1,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sir W. Peel." Illegal decision of Prize Courts.	258
369	1,	Law Officers	Case of the "Georgia." Belligerent vessels should not be allowed to enter Liverpool to be dismantled or sold	259
370	4,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. Gray. Report on finding of court-martial on Lieutenant Danenhower	259
371	11,	Law Officers	Case of the "Margaret and Jessie." Violation of neutral territory. Cannon range	260

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
372	Aug. 12, 1864	Law Officers	Case of the "Volant." The owners should be urged to appeal against decision of Prize Court	261
373	12,	Law Officers	Case of the "Florida." Observations on proceeding of Admiral Hope	261
374	12,	Law Officers	Case of Peter Needham, Ira Lee, and George Cooper. Arrests on Canadian frontier	262
375	22,	Law Officers	Case of the "H. G. Berry." Her Majesty's Government ought not to press claim for demurrage or damages, the detention of the vessel being caused by military necessity	263
376	25,	Law Officers	Opinion respecting complaints of improper practices in the disposition of prize cases at New York. Delay in deciding causes in Appellate Courts	263
377	26,	Law Officers	Island of Sombrero. Mr. R. W. Wood might be informed that the Island of Sombrero belongs to Great Britain, without infringing on understanding with United States	264
378	26,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. S. G. Levey. False imprisonment. Justice of claim on the United States for compensation	265
379	29,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. Tovell. His claim on the United States' Government for compensation on account of his imprisonment. His long residence in Tennessee, and employment by the Press, renders interference of Her Majesty's Government unnecessary	265
380	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Florida." Approving course adopted by Governor of Bermuda regarding supply of coal	266
381	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Florida." Answer to be sent to Mr. Adams' note regarding her reception at Bermuda	267
382	29,	Law Officers	Case of Adolphus Russell	267
383	29,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Hardcastle. Regret at refusal of United States' Government to grant compensation. Opinion of observations of United States' Judge Advocate-General regarding flags of truce	268
384	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Science." Her release. Right of captor to appeal	269
385	29,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. G. A. Mason. Claim on United States' Government to compensation for imprisonment. Should be apprized that Her Majesty's Government cannot support his claim	269
386	29,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. Ardill, the Engineer of the "Victor"	270
387	29,	Law Officers	Restrictions imposed by the United States' Government on trade with Brownsville, Texas	270
388	29,	Law Officers	Opinion on Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to regulate prize proceedings, &c." Claim of the United States' Government to appropriate to their own use captured neutral vessels, previous to condemnation, is contrary to international law	271
389	Sept. 1,	Law Officers	Case of the "Georgia." Her sale to British owners, and subsequent capture by a United States' vessel of war	272
390	5,	Law Officers	Transmitting notification for "Gazette" for exclusion of belligerent ships of war from British ports, so as to prevent their being dismantled or sold	272
391	5,	Law Officers	Case of Messrs. Pollard and Seawell. Capture on board a neutral ship, the "Greyhound." As to British Government claiming release of Confederates captured on board British vessels	273
392	5,	Law Officers	Case of vessels captured in the Rio Grande—"Sir W. Peel," "Dashing Wave," "Volant"	274
393	6,	Law Officers	Cases of Mr. J. W. Binney and Mr. J. J. Crawford	275
394	Sept. 8, 1864	Law Officers	Orders issued preventing foreigners at Memphis, not enrolled in the Militia, from carrying on business	276
395	9,	Law Officers	Restrictions on import of gold into New Orleans	276
396	9,	Law Officers	Opinion of oath exacted from foreigners by military authorities at New Orleans	277
397	9,	Law Officers	Cases of Mr. W. P. Hopkins and Mr. A. J. Kennedy. Treatment of British subjects captured on board blockade-runners	278
398	14,	Law Officers	Cases of Messrs. Binney and Crawford	278
399	15,	Law Officers	Approving proposed answer to Mr. Adams' note respecting rescue of the crew of the "Alabama" by owner of the "Deerhound"	279
400	15,	Law Officers	Case of the "Georgia." Legality of her capture by the "Niagara." Answer to be sent to note of Mr. E. Bates claiming compensation	280
401	15,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Tovell. Approving instructions to Lord Lyons.	281
402	22,	Law Officers	Opinion of rules and regulations issued by the United States' Government on subject of commercial intercourse with Confederate States	281
403	23,	Law Officers	Legality of renewal of the blockade of Brownsville, on withdrawal of Federal forces	281
404	23,	Law Officers	Opinion on new Customs Act lately passed by United States' Congress. As to exemption of British shipping from differential duty	282
405	23,	Law Officers	Employment of neutral foreigners as police at New Orleans is in accordance with international law	282
406	26,	Law Officers	Case of the "Georgia." Documents to be supplied to Mr. Bates. Amount of support to be given to Mr. Bates by Lord Lyons. Her Majesty's Government not responsible on account of grant of registration, as a British ship, of a vessel purchased by a British subject of a foreigner	283
407	29,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. John Jackson. Removal from Knoxsville by order of United States' military authorities	284
408	30,	Law Officers	Desertion of seamen belonging to United States' ship "Iroquois." Law of Great Britain does not admit of their being delivered up	284
409	Oct. 4,	Law Officers	Case of the "Tuscaloosa." Approving letter to Admiralty respecting the disposal of the "Tuscaloosa"	284
410	6,	Law Officers	Consular privileges. Proposed Conventions with France and United States for regulating. Suggests provisions to be introduced into a Bill in Parliament	285
411	8,	Law Officers	Case of the "Scylla." Approving answer to Mr. C. W. Adams.	286
412	8,	Law Officers	Approving Proclamation issued by Governor of Nova Scotia, relative to place of anchorage of vessels of war belonging to belligerent States of North America	287
413	10,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. J. J. Crawford	287
414	18,	Law Officers	Case of the "Dashing Wave." Opinion on evidence in Prize Court	287
415	20,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Binney. In consequence of his release, it is not necessary to make further inquiries regarding decision of Judge Betts	288
416	20,	Law Officers	Case of the "Clyde." No further steps required to be taken	288
417	20,	Law Officers	Opinion of conduct of United States' authorities with regard to the enlistment of certain Irishmen at Portland into the army	289

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
418	Oct. 20, 1864	Law Officers	Seizure of coal on the Island of Angra Pequena. Observations on answer of United States' Government to representations of Lord Lyons. Contrary to international law to maintain that the "Alabama" was a pirate	289
419	21,	Law Officers	Shipment of stores on board the United States' ship "Iroquois" at Dover. Measures to be adopted to prevent evasion of Her Majesty's Orders of 31st January, 1862	290
420	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Margaret and Jessie." Suggests extension of neutral territory to eight miles from shore	291
421	31,	Law Officers	Case of W. C. Heslop. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere with regard to his imprisonment, it being clear that he was domiciled in Western Virginia	291
422	Nov. 1,	Law Officers	Case of Miss Hill. Her imprisonment by the United States' authorities was perfectly justified	292
423	1,	Law Officers	Case of David Boyle. Question of compensation for imprisonment	293
424	5,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sylvanus." Treatment of crews of blockade-runners as prisoners of war	293
425	10,	Law Officers	Seizure of coals at Angra Pequena. Suggests certain alterations in letter to Mr. Burnley	294
426	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "Peterhoff." Mr. Wilson should be informed that Her Majesty's Government cannot intervene	294
427	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "Alexandra." Expedient to adopt compromise within limit of 4,000*l.* for damages	295
428	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sea King" and "Laurel." Equipment at sea of the "Sea King," a British steamer, as a vessel of war of Confederate States. Non-infringement of Foreign Enlistment Act, which extends only to the dominions of Her Majesty	295
429	15,	Law Officers	Enlistment of Irishmen at Portland by United States' officers	296
430	15,	Law Officers	Opinion of proposed letter to Treasury respecting supply of stores to belligerent vessels. Limit of three months	297
431	16,	Law Officers	Case of James O'Neill. Approving sentence of Court-martial on Acting Master Everson	298
432	18,	Law Officers	Case of the "Alexandra." Fine levied upon master on account of violation of an Act passed on the 7th July, 1838, called the Steam-boat Act. Opinion that that Act does not apply to British vessels	298
433	24,	Law Officers	Case of the "Dashing Wave" and other vessels captured in the Rio Grande and Matamoros. Opinion on Judgments	299
434	23,	Law Officers	Case of Captain Paulson. Illegality of his seizure on land, on account of his having been engaged in blockade-running	300
435	25,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Demand made by the United States for their extradition. As to necessity of a special Act being passed by the Canadian Legislature	300
436	28,	Law Officers	Case of the "Betsey." Her Majesty's Government should not interfere. Owners should appeal against sentence	301
437	30,	Law Officers	Case of the "Alexandra." Fine levied in consequence of vessels touching at places besides ports of entry	302
438	Dec. 1,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sea King." Foreign Jurisdiction Act. Infringement of, by enlistment of seamen to serve on board the "Sea King," a vessel fitted out on the high sea as a vessel of war for the Confederates. Captain Corbett should be indicted	302
439	3,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Wyoming." Approving course pursued by Governor of Hong Kong	303

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
440	Dec. 5, 1864	Law Officers	Approving amended order of Governor of Nova Scotia, with regard to anchorage of belligerent vessels of war in Halifax	303
441	6,	Law Officers	Case of the "Madeira." Claim to compensation in consequence of the "Madeira" being run down by a United States' ship of war. Owners should proceed against the "Clyde" in United States' Court of Admiralty	304
442	6,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Jenkins. British subjects residing permanently in a foreign State cannot claim exemptiom from military service	304
443	6,	Law Officers	Case of the "Etta." Approving condemnation	305
444	8,	Queen's Advocate	Proclamation of raising of blockade of Norfolk, &c. Notice should not appear in "Gazette" until it has been officially notified to Her Majesty's Government	306
445	13,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Demand for extradition	306
446	15,	Law Officers	Case of the "Roanoke." Capture by Confederate passengers holding a Commission from Confederate Government. Arrest of captain and crew by authorities at Bermuda	307
447	15,	Law Officers	Course which the Government of the Confederate States wish to pursue with regard to the disposal of neutral property found on board vessels captured by their cruizers. Necessity of such property being adjudicated before a regular Prize Court	308
448	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Night Hawk," a British vessel which had run on shore in attempting to run a blockade, and was subsequently burnt by a party sent from a United States' vessel of war. The conduct of United States' officers was a breach of international law	309
449	20,	Law Officers	Case of the "Matagorda." Her capture for breach of blockade. The vessel being unprovided with either flag or papers, the release of the crew cannot be insisted upon	310
450	20,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Hardcastle. Observations on answer of United States' Government to representations of Lord Lyons	310
451	20,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sir W. Peel." Must see opinion of Judge of United States' Prize Courts previous to giving Report	312
452	22,	Law Officers	Opinion on new Customs Act passed by the United States' Congress	312
453	22,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Approving proposed instruction to Governor-General of Canada	312
454	27,	Law Officers	Case of James O'Neill. Approving sentence of court martial on Acting Master Everson	313
455	29,	Law Officers	Capture of the American vessel "Kate Prince" by the "Shenandoah," a Confederate vessel of war, supposed formerly to have been the "Sea King." Approving letter to the London, Bombay, and Calcutta Steam Ship Company, former owners of the "Sea King"	313
456	31,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sir W. Peel"	314
457	31,	Law Officers	Case of the "Roanoke." Approving answer to protest of Mr. Adams against proceedings of Colonial authorities	314

VENEZUELA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
458	Aug. 17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. M. Ellul. Claim on Government of Venezuela on account of losses sustained by him by the seizure of his cattle and horses by both Government troops and insurgents in 1849. Claim should be supported by Her Majesty's Government	315

1864

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
459	Oct. 21, 1864	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of State of Ciudad Bolivar by Government of Venezuela. Legality of notification of the blockade of the coasts of a country during a period of insurrection	315
460	28,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "Gazette" of the blockade of the coast of Guayana by Government of Venezuela	316
461	Nov. 19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Albion." Seizure by insurgents whilst employed in conveyance of Government troops. The owner should apply to his employers, the Venezuelan Government, for compensation and redress	317

SECOND APPENDIX.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

3	Law Officers	Sept. 5, 1864	Supreme Consular Court for China and Japan. Proposed establishment at Shanghae. Opposed to appellate jurisdiction being left to Superintendent of Trade in China, or Consul-General in Japan. New Order in Council necessary. As to repeal, &c., of existing Orders. Will instruct Mr. Reilly	322
4	Law Officers	15,	Supreme Consular Court for China and Japan. Receipt of further despatch. No need for any additional remarks	323

EGYPT.

1	Law Officers	Mar. 7, 1864	Case of M. Ninet. Proceedings against him for contempt of British Consular Court at Alexandria. Mr. Fonblanque free from blame in the matter. In favour of adoption of course recommended by M. Ruyssenaers in such cases	321
6	Law Officers	Apr. 25,	Mr. Fonblanque's charges against the Alexandria police. Papers insufficient for a decided opinion. Case seems to require investigation	325
7	Law Officers	26,	Trial of Mr. Huggins for accidentally killing an Arab in Egypt. Mr. Fonblanque's opinion that the Capitulations are not in force is erroneous. Case should have been tried at Cairo. Capitulations extend to suit for compensation	326
2	Law Officers	May 23,	Suppression in Egypt of a newspaper, "Il Popolo," edited by a British subject. The Local Government has the right of suppression. Mr. Fonblanque ought to have assisted in such suppression	322
5	Law Officers	Nov. 24,	Trial of British subjects for murder in Egypt of an Egyptian. Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Fonblanque wrong in claiming exclusive jurisdiction for British Consular Court. Such jurisdiction, hitherto partially granted, not strictly in accordance with the Capitulations, on the observance of which the Turkish authorities are entitled to insist	323

1864

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. December 1865.

CONFIDENTIAL.

LAW OFFICERS' REPORTS: 1864.

Africa.

No. 1.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

Doctors' Commons, May 30, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a Memorial from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Queen, praying that Her Majesty would be pleased to grant her licence under her Royal Signet and Sign-Manual authorizing and empowering His Grace to consecrate the Rev. Samuel Adjai Crowther, Clerk, Master of Arts, a British subject, whose sufficiency in good learning, soundness of faith, and purity of manners he has fully ascertained, to be Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland in the countries in Western Africa beyond the limits of Her Majesty's dominions. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of a licence to the effect prayed for by the Archbishop; and to request that I would take the Memorial of the Archbishop, as well as the draft of the licence, into consideration, with reference to the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, and also with reference to my Reports of the 13th and 29th of January, 1863, relative to the consecration of Bishops Tozer and Twells, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty can properly issue the Royal licence as prayed for by the Archbishop in the terms of the inclosed draft.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have perused the Memorial of His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury to Her Majesty, and that I am of opinion that it would be proper to grant the prayer of the Memorial. That I have perused the draft licence with reference to the aforesaid Statute and Reports, and that I am of opinion that the draft is correctly drawn, and in testimony thereof I have affixed my initials to it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Austria.

No. 2.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 2.)

Doctors' Commons, March 2, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Admiralty, asking, with reference to a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna (No. 111) also inclosed, whether any instructions should be given to Her Majesty's officers in the Mediterranean and home ports for their conduct towards the belligerent cruizers and their prizes; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I assume that Her Majesty is at present neutral in the war between Denmark and Austria, and that both these States adhere to the principles of maritime law laid down in the Declaration of Paris, which they have subscribed. Questions will most probably arise as to the release of neutral property found on board the vessels of the belligerent, and of neutral vessels captured as belligerent. Austria must of course establish, as Denmark has already done, a proper Prize Court, capable of administering justice upon the recognized principles of international law to the subjects of neutral States, whose interests may be affected by the seizures of belligerent cruizers. It remains to be seen whether the King of Italy will forbid prizes to be brought into any port of his kingdom, and what course the Porte and the King of Greece will pursue upon this subject: questions of considerable practical importance, and concerning which I would humbly suggest it would be expedient to obtain the earliest information. But at present the proper instructions to be given to Her Majesty's officers in the Mediterranean ports would be, as a general rule, not to interfere in cases of capture of British vessels made upon the high seas by the ships of war of either belligerent; and with respect to captures of British vessels unquestionably made within the territorial waters of a neutral State, remonstrance should be made to the captor by the proper officer of Her Majesty's ship (who probably would act simultaneously with the authority of the neutral territory), and restitution of the vessel be promptly required. But in the event of the place of capture being denied, and it being asserted by the captor that the seizure was made without the territorial waters of the neutral State, the matter must, if the captor insist upon his belligerent right (so far as any action on the part of officers of Her Majesty's ships is concerned), be allowed to be referred to the Prize Court.

With respect to home ports, I presume that Her Majesty will issue instructions relative to prizes in this war similar to those issued in the American war, by which prizes in this, as in that war, will be forbidden to be brought into any of Her Majesty's ports or harbours, and in this case the officers of Her Majesty's ships will of course be directed to aid in the execution of these instructions. If the Ionian Islands have not yet finally lost their former relation to the Crown of Great Britain, I think the Lord High Commissioner should be instructed to take the proper measures to proclaim that the bringing in of prizes into the ports of these territories will not be permitted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 3.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 16, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna (No. 168), forwarding regulations issued by the Austrian Government with regard to the capture of enemy's ships at sea: and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether, in my opinion, there is any objection to the publication of the regulations in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I think these regulations should be published in the "London Gazette."

I assume that the original German text will be published with an English translation. I venture to point out that the latter should be carefully made from the original German, and not from the French translation.

Paragraphs 12 and 15 are very important, and ought to be most correctly rendered. The French translation of 15 might mislead; and that of 12 is, I venture to think, in the latter part so incorrect as to reverse the sense of the original, though it is possible that the negative inserted in the French translation may have been accidentally omitted in the German text, but if so the provision itself contained in this paragraph would require serious consideration.

I must also observe that in paragraph 10 there is a provision that the prize is to be brought, if possible, "into an Austrian port;" otherwise "into the nearest place in which the captured ship can be placed under military protection or guard." Unless it be intended that "the nearest (Austrian) place" is meant, and also unless, in the further provision for ships entering ports with prizes in case of distress, Austrian ports are meant, these provisions would clearly interfere with the rights of neutral States to make what orders they pleased as to the admission of prizes into their ports.

I observe that the doctrine of the neutral vessel under convoy being exempt from visitation, which doctrine England has always resisted, is promulgated in these, as in the Danish regulations; but no approbation of this doctrine will be implied by the publication, without comment, in the Gazette.

I make the observation, as it would be inexpedient that any form of approbation of it should be conveyed.

I also observe that the cruizer is instructed to summon on board the master of the arrested vessel, with his papers, in the first instance, instead of, according to the more general usage, sending an officer on board to examine, but I do not think that this is likely to be injurious to the neutral.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 4.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 5th instant from the War Office, forwarding a report from the Governor of Gibraltar of the arrival in that port of a Danish vessel with an Austrian prize crew on board, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to the Governor of Gibraltar in this matter. And to inquire whether we have been able as yet to prepare the rules which, as we were aware, Her Majesty's Government desire to lay down in accordance with the views with which we were acquainted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Governor of Gibraltar should be instructed to give notice to the prize vessel brought into that port by the Austrian prize crew, that she cannot be permitted to remain there, and to require her immediate departure.

We have prepared the draft instructions which accompany this Report, as suitable to be given to the Governor of Gibraltar, and to Her Majesty's civil and naval authorities abroad for their guidance during the present contest. We think also that copies of these instructions should be communicated to the Ministers in this country of all the belligerent Powers.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 4.

Draft Instructions, &c.

1. DURING the continuance of the present hostilities between His Majesty the King of Denmark on the one side, and His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, His Majesty the King of Prussia, and the Germanic Confederation, or any of these Powers, on the other side, no prize captured or taken by any armed ship or privateer of any of the belligerent Powers, or by any officers or persons in the service of any of the said Powers, shall be permitted to be brought into any of the ports, harbours, roadsteads, or waters belonging to Her Majesty, either in the United Kingdom or elsewhere.

2. All ships of war and privateers of any of the said belligerents are strictly prohibited from making use of any port or roadstead in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in the Channel Islands, or in any of Her Majesty's colonies or possessions abroad, as a station or place of resort for any warlike purpose, or for any purpose of warlike equipment; and no ship of war or privateer of any of the said belligerents shall hereafter be permitted to sail out of or to leave any port, roadstead, or waters subject to British jurisdiction, from which any vessel of the Power or Powers with whom such belligerent is at war (whether the same shall be a ship of war, or privateer, or a merchant ship), shall have previously departed, until after the expiration of at least twenty-four hours from the departure of such last mentioned vessel beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

1864

3. These orders are to be in force, and to be strictly observed in every case, until Her Majesty shall be pleased to make any further or other order to the contrary.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 5.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 30, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter of the same date from the Admiralty, reporting that the Austrian ships of war which have arrived in the Downs have sent to Ramsgate for a collier; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take this letter into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether the term of "warlike equipment," employed in the draft instructions inclosed in our letter of the 6th instant, includes coal.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That however desirable it may be that orders should be given having for their object to prevent belligerents in the Danish war from coaling in our ports, we are unable to come to the clear conclusion that by the terms of the present orders such coaling is prohibited.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 6.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 15.)

Doctors' Commons, October 14, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated the 10th instant, from a Mr. McDonnell, asking for the interference of Her Majesty's Government to establish the validity of a certificate which he forwards of the marriage of his parents; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. McDonnell's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I see no objection to so far conceding the request of Mr. McDonnell as to send an answer to him to this effect: That in every State Courts of Justice are at liberty to follow their own rules of evidence, without regard to the admissibility or non-admissibility of such evidence in the place of domicil of the litigant. That the certificate in question was considered by the official authorities in England sufficient evidence that Mr. McDonnell's mother was the legitimate widow of his father, and that upon such evidence her pension as an officer's widow was granted to her, which I understand to have been the case; and that Mr. McDonnell is at liberty to make use of this letter, if it can be of service to him, in an Austrian Court of Justice.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Bavaria.

No. 7.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 16.)

Doctors' Commons, January 13, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Munich (No. 122), requesting instructions as to the course he should take respecting a will left by the late Major-General Arnaud, now stated to be informal and invalid; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would report to your Lordship what instructions should be given upon the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as it appeared to me that Lord A. Loftus could not have expressed himself with perfect legal accuracy as to all the facts of this case, I thought it expedient to send for Mr. Lawrie (whose letter was amongst the papers submitted to me), in order to ascertain with precision what had actually happened with respect to this will. I find the circumstances to be as follows:—

That Major-General Arnaud died at Munich, a domiciled British subject; his will, therefore, in order to be valid, must have been executed according to English law. That law requires that there should be two witnesses, who attest in each other's presence, as well as that of the testator, the signature of the testator. In this case two witnesses had attested the signature separately, and not in each other's presence, and they made a statement to that effect in the presence of Lord A. Loftus at the first interview, which his Lordship mentions. After this interview, the widow again appeared before Lord A. Loftus to take an oath that her husband had died intestate; this oath his Lordship refused to administer, and gave her a written statement to forward to her legal adviser in London: this she did, and obtained legal advice to the effect that the will was invalid, and that on an affidavit being made by the witnesses as to the fact of their having signed separately, administration would be granted in London, as in cases of intestacy. This affidavit was sworn before Lord A. Loftus at the third interview, and is the instrument which his Lordship erroneously describes "as a fresh document to which they were prepared to take oath with the intention of giving validity to the will." On this affidavit being sent to London, a Registrar of the Court of Probate made the usual minute that the will was invalid, and directions were forwarded to the widow to take the usual oath necessary to obtain administration as in the case of an intestacy. This was the oath which, at the last interview, the widow presented herself before A. Loftus to take, and which oath his Lordship conceived that he ought not to administer; but I am clearly of opinion that he was wrong in refusing to do so, and that he ought to administer the oath to her in the usual form as she requested him to do: and I therefore advise your Lordship that Lord A. Loftus should be instructed to this effect.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

China.

No. 8.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 25, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us that it has been decided to send to Peking early in the present year a force consisting of one serjeant and six men chosen from the Metropolitan Police, to act as the escort and guard for Her Majesty's Legation at Peking, in lieu of the detachment of military which has hitherto performed this service.

1864

That, among other arrangements connected with the despatch of these men, it is considered desirable that each of them should sign a formal agreement, binding himself, under certain penalties, to fulfil the conditions of the service upon which he is about to enter, and the accompanying draft Agreement has accordingly been prepared by Captain Harris, the Assistant Commissioner of Police, and submitted to your Lordship as a fit and proper instrument for the purpose. That before, however, your Lordship approves the draft Agreement, he is desirous of ascertaining whether it meets with our concurrence, viewed more particularly with reference to the possible bearing upon it of the Order in Council (China) of the 13th of June, 1853; and Mr. Hammond was therefore to request that we would take the draft Agreement into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not see any objection to the proposed Agreement, either as considered per se or with reference to the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853.

We concur, however, in the suggestion made in the margin, that the 4th Article in Captain Harris' part of the Agreement had probably better be omitted.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 9.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that, with reference to the Law Officers' Reports of the 8th of October, 11th of November, and 9th of December, 1863, and 20th of May, 3rd and 24th of July, 1862, relative to the restriction imposed at Hong Kong and Singapore on the sale of arms, with the view of preventing supplies of arms and warlike stores from reaching the Taepings, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers and with the correspondence which has passed on the subject since the date of the last-mentioned Report, the accompanying letters and their inclosures from the Colonial and India Offices, and a letter addressed to your Lordship by Mr. Laird, complaining of his having been prevented by those restrictions from disposing of some guns of the value of 2,000*l*., which he purchased at Woolwich in June last for exportation to those markets; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Mr. Laird's representations into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Laird has not established any claim against Her Majesty's Government.

That the trade of Mr. Laird, like that of any other merchant, must be subject to the political and public exigencies which render necessary the exercise of Her Majesty's prerogative for the safety and welfare of her dominions at home and abroad; and his claim has not even that amount of reason which might have been suggested if he had made his purchase before the date of the Order in Council. The case does not seem to us to be at all altered by his statement that, in his tender, he mentioned his intention of exporting the guns, &c., purchased by him to Hong Kong or Singapore. Importation into those places is not prohibited by the Order in Council; and, practically, even exportation from them is still permitted, under licence, when the Colonial Government is satisfied that the true destination is not to the Chinese insurgents.

In this particular instance, it is by no means certain that any loss need be sustained by Mr. Laird.

The guns transported to Hong Kong may probably be exported, under special licence, if satisfactory proof can be given that they are not destined for the use or aid of the rebels in China. This, however, is a matter about which Mr. Laird must exercise his own discretion.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 10.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 16, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 177, November 16), relative to a proposal made by him to the Chinese Government for establishing a means of openly investigating cases in which the penalty of confiscation is imposed on goods seized by the Chinese Custom-house; and to request that we would take this proposal into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the scheme proposed by Sir Frederick Bruce does not appear to us open to any objection.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
BOBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 11.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 18, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of answer which, in conformity with our Report of the 8th instant, your Lordship proposes to return to the letter from Mr. Laird, complaining of the restrictions imposed on the exportation of arms and warlike stores from Hong Kong and Singapore; and to request that we would take the proposed answer into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to return the previous papers for reference, if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter which your Lordship proposes to send to Mr. Laird appears to us right and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 12.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence as marked in the margin* respecting a fine of 500 taels imposed upon

---

* Messrs. Rodham, March 13; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 69, May 4; Sir F. Bruce, No. 93, July 7; Consul Harvey, December 16, 1863; Treaty.

1864

Her Majesty's Consul at Ningpo on the master of the British ship "Orissa;" and also a copy of the Treaty of Tien-tsin referred to by Mr. Harvey, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to Mr. Consul Harvey's proceedings.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that Messrs. Rodham and Co. are bound by the act of the master of the "Orissa," so far as penal consequences might attach to that vessel from his conduct. The substantial question in this case appears to us to be, whether the master of the ship "discovered a mistake" which he ought to have been allowed to correct within twenty-four hours; or whether he "presented" a "false manifest," knowing it to be such. The Consul was the proper judge of the fact; and he appears to have concluded, upon grounds from which we see no reason to dissent, that the misrepresentation was wilful: and, in such circumstances, we think that what he did was right.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 13.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 182, November 24), inclosing a copy of an instruction which he had addressed to the Acting British Consul at Shanghae, relative to British subjects at that port who have been in rebel employ. And to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that part of the instructions of Sir F. Bruce which forbids the remaining at Shanghae of British subjects and their employment on the Yang-tze River goes beyond the authority given to him by the Order in Council, and is therefore illegal: and that with respect to that part of the instructions requiring the Consul to call upon suspected persons to find security for keeping the peace, that power can only be exercised (see Sect. 22 of Order) after information laid before the Consul, by one or more credible witnesses, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend that such persons will commit a breach of the peace. In other respects, the instructions appear to be warranted by the Order in Council referred to.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 14.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 176, November 14, 1863), relative to a notification with regard to piracy which has been issued by the Consuls of foreign Powers at Hankow; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although the measure taken by the Consuls may be, and probably is, as Sir F. Bruce thinks very expedient, we are constrained to be of opinion that without direct authority from the Emperor of China, it is not, strictly speaking, competent to the Commanders of foreign ships of war to visit, search, and arrest vessels suspected of piracy within the Chinese waters, except in the case where the vessel belongs to the country of the visiting ship.

By Article LIII of the Treaty of Tien-tsin it was provided that China and Great Britain should "agree to concert measures for the suppression of piracy in the seas of China," but we are not aware that any practical steps have been taken in consequence of this provision; and we think that the latter part of the notice, rendering persons subject to arrest and imprisonment who do not report their vessels at the Consular Office within twenty-four hours after their arrival at Hankow cannot be legally enforced, under the authority of this instrument, upon British subjects. No arrest, compulsory examination, fine, or imprisonment, can be imposed upon a British subject in the dominions of the Emperor of China except under the authority of the provisions of the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853; they extend from Article 18 to Article 25 inclusive, and relate to the trial of all crimes committed by British subjects; while Articles 22 and 23 deal with the case of suspected persons, whom Her Majesty's Consuls may require to give security to keep the peace, or cause to be deported from the country. Article 3 provides that rules and regulations for the "peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects within the dominions of the Emperor of China, and within one hundred miles of the coast, may be made from time to time by the Chief Superintendent or Consul of the place," and Article 4 provides the mode in which such rules and regulations are to be promulgated, so as to have binding effect.

Article 40, which provides for a registry of British subjects, does not make summary arrest and imprisonment the penalty of non-registration; but says only that British protection shall be withheld from those who do not register themselves within a reasonable time to be appointed for that purpose.

The notification in question, not being in accordance with these provisions of the Order in Council, is, we think, illegal; and we must further observe, that even if it had not, in substance, exceeded the limits of the powers of the British Consul under the Treaty and the Order in Council, it must still have been disallowed, as purporting to be made, not, by the sole authority of the British Consul but by the joint authority of the British and three other Consuls, and as purporting to bind Europeans in general and not British subjects in particular.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 15.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 5, 1854.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 22nd March, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from Captain Sherard Osborn,† inclosing a correct copy of the agreement under which the officers and men of the Anglo-Chinese fleet sailed from this country.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that a letter from Captain Osborn, dated the 21st March, was also inclosed. And that your Lordship feels disposed to inform the Admiralty that you are ready to sanction the course proposed by Captain Osborn in his letter of the 26th of March, but not so far as to save any of the parties from actions at law; but that he was, however, to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and advise your Lordship as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue therein.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That assuming the statements in Mr. Lay's letter to your Lordship of November 10, 1863, to be correct, so far as relates to his authority on behalf of the Chinese Government

---

* Captain Osborn, March 26; Parliamentary Paper; Captain Osborn, February 29; to Captain Osborn, March 24, 1864.

† Captain Osborn, March 21, 1864.

1864

to enter into the agreement of the 16th January, 1863, of which the copy has been sent to us, we think that the best mode of settling the question will be, to sanction the course proposed by Captain Sherard Osborn in his letter of the 26th March. Should any of the officers or men decline to settle on those terms, of course any remedy by action or otherwise, which they may think fit to adopt, will be open to them.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

No. 16.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th February last, on the subject of the instructions addressed by Her Majesty's Minister at Peking to the Acting British Consul at Shanghae, with regard to British subjects who had served with the Chinese insurgents, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the despatch above referred to and the answer thereto,* a further despatch from Sir F. Bruce,† adverting to the insufficiency of the powers possessed by Her Majesty's Consuls in China to punish such persons. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of the Order in Council of the 12th of September last, which would not appear to have been received by Sir F. Bruce when his despatch was written, and which disposes of one of the questions therein raised, namely, the course to be pursued with regard to individuals who shall return to China after having been deported; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the proposition of Sir F. Bruce that a provision should be made by Order in Council authorizing the British authorities in China to imprison for a short time British subjects who may have aided the rebels in China, and afterwards to deport them from the country, appears to us reasonable and proper to be carried into effect.

We think, however, that any such Order in Council should be applicable to those persons only who, after the date and promulgation thereof, shall have given aid to the Chinese rebels. Any past offences of the like kind must be dealt with according to the law in force when they were committed, and not subjected to additional punishment by retrospective legislation.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 17.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 23, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying papers* respecting a fine of 500 taels imposed by the Custom-house authorities at Ningpo upon a vessel belonging to Mr. W. Hart, for an infraction of the XXXVIIIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

A copy of the Treaty was also sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Sir F. Bruce, No. 182, November 24, 1863; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 47, March 8, 1864.

† Sir F. Bruce, No. 187, December 7, 1863.

‡ Colonel Sykes, October 28; Mr. Hart, October 27; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 189; Sir F. Bruce, No. 13, 1863.

That I see no reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter. The fact of the violation of the XXXVIIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin is clear, and, indeed, not denied. The fine imposed is certainly authorized by that Article, and the penalty of a confiscation of the landed goods, which might also have been enforced, has been remitted. There seems to be no ground whatever for blaming the conduct of Lieutenant Huxham. It is stated that though the rule existed, it had not been previously enforced. But looking to the facts of the case, and the statements of Mr. Consul Harvey in his letter to Sir F. Bruce (Inclosure 3 in No. 13), I am of opinion that the rule, the validity of which is undoubted, has not been harshly enforced against Mr. Hart.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 18.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 21, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter dated the 14th of April, from Mr. Frederick Hogg, stating certain circumstances connected with the forced departure of his friend Mr. James Andrews from Peking, and requesting to be favoured with your Lordship's view of the intent and meaning of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, so far as it applies to the term "trading" at Peking. Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a despatch, and its inclosures, from Sir Frederick Bruce on the subject (No. 11, January 18), and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our observations thereupon, and also with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Hogg.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if Mr. James Andrews was in the habit of purchasing articles of art for the purpose of sending them to England, or elsewhere, for sale, we think he did come within the category of those who "enter the capital city of Peking for purposes of trade," and an answer to this effect may, in our opinion, properly be sent to Mr. Hogg. If any further question as to the real object of Mr. Andrews' purchases should afterwards arise, the matter may then be referred to Sir F. Bruce for his report thereupon.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 19.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 21, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 25th April, from Captain Sherard Osborn, proposing that, with your Lordship's permission, he should rid himself of all further responsibility in regard to the vessels of the late Anglo-Chinese fleet at Bombay "by substituting a mercantile firm at Bombay as the agents to carry out Sir F. Bruce's instructions."

That the Attorney and Solicitor-General have already been consulted with regard to the terms to be offered by Captain Osborn to the officers and crews of that fleet, and that their Report of the 5th instant formed the groundwork of the answer returned on the 19th instant to Captain Osborn's letter on this subject of the 26th ultimo.

That as, however, Captain Osborn now proposes to rid himself of all further responsibility in regard to these vessels, i.e., to cast the whole of it upon Sir Frederick Bruce and Her Majesty's Government, it appears to your Lordship that it deserves very serious consideration what further answer should be made to him.

Mr. Layard was accordingly to send us the annexed papers, and to request that we would consider, and advise your Lordship, how far Her Majesty's Government are called upon to accept the responsibility of which Captain Osborn wishes to rid himself, in consequence either of the measures taken by Sir F. Bruce, as shown in the papers laid before Parliament, or of the instructions transmitted to the Indian Government with regard to the disposal of the vessels; and if we should be of opinion that Her Majesty's Government are not bound to accept that responsibility, that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Captain Osborn.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That it seems necessary to enter upon the consideration of this question with a clear view of the position in which Her Majesty's Government has been already placed by the course hitherto taken, as well as of the practical consequences of any decision which may now be adopted.

No original responsibility was undertaken by Her Majesty's Government for any of the arrangements made between the Chinese Government and Captain Sherard Osborn. But Her Majesty's Government after having approved, by the despatch of the 15th of February last (No. 26 of Parliamentary Papers), the arrangements made by Sir F. Bruce with Prince Kung, in consequence of the differences between the Chinese Government and Captain Osborn, is not now equally free from obligation with respect to the fulfilment of these last arrangements.

On the 20th of October, 1863, Sir F. Bruce wrote to Prince Kung that "as Her Majesty's Government took an active part in promoting the equipment of the vessels," he should request instructions from them "as to the disposal of the ships and stores," and would cause them in the meantime to be detained. On the 6th of November Sir F. Bruce again wrote, "The British Government had placed ships, officers, and men at your disposal, but it certainly did not intend to force them on your acceptance, in the event of your deciding that the conditions on which alone this force could act were such as you could not agree to;" and he at the same time announced that he had instructed Captain Osborn "to dispose of the vessels on the most advantageous terms, and remit the balance, after payment of expenses, to the Chinese Government;" adding, "I feel assured that Her Majesty's Government will appreciate the considerate spirit in which your Imperial Highness has acted, and will willingly assist Captain Osborn in carrying out his instructions."

On the same day Sir F. Bruce also wrote to Captain Osborn, "As you are aware, the scheme of keeping the ships of the flotilla in deposit awaiting instructions from Her Majesty's Government has been abandoned; and the Chinese Government has requested me to send the vessels to England to be disposed of. . . . I have therefore to request that you will take charge of the vessels and men with a view to the disposal of the former in England or in India, as you think best."

The result of the whole transaction is, that it was deemed inexpedient by Her Majesty's Representative in China that these vessels (which had been paid for by the Chinese Government, and which were and still are their property, subject to any lien for the pay of the officers and men) should either remain in China, or be sold upon the spot; and it was therefore settled that they should be taken by Captain Osborn to England or India for sale, on account of the Chinese Government; and that Her Majesty's Government would do whatever might be in their power to facilitate such sale.

When, however, Captain Osborn arrived at Bombay, the sale of any of these ships at that place was prohibited by the local Government, under the apprehension that, if sold there, they might be purchased by agents for the Confederate States of America. Instructions directing such a sale to be prevented by all legal means were also sent on the 11th of January last by the Board of Admiralty at home to the naval authorities at Bombay, under which instructions the sale of the despatch-boat "Thule," which had been advertised, was actually stopped, and all the vessels have ever since been detained in the custody of the Bombay Government. On the 15th of April further orders were sent from the India Office, permitting the despatch-boat to be sold, but ordering the other vessels still to be retained till further orders.

Under these circumstances (the Board of Admiralty having declined to purchase any of them for Her Majesty's service), Captain Osborn now desires to have your Lordship's sanction for the transfer of the duty of "carrying out Sir F. Bruce's instructions" to a mercantile firm at Bombay, with a view "to rid himself of all further responsibility," conceiving (as appears from his letter), that it would be "illegal for him to attempt to sell these armed ships of war."

Upon this we must first observe that we conceive Captain Osborn to be in error when he supposes that the sale within Her Majesty"s dominions, even to a belligerent Power, of armed ships of war, already lawfully equipped with a view to a different object, under Her Majesty's licence, would be illegal. The Foreign Enlistment Act does not, in our opinion, prohibit such a sale. The error, however, is one into which the Bombay Government, when they prevented the sale of the "Thule," appear also to have fallen; and the Admiralty instructions of the 11th of January were evidently written under the same impression.

Viewing this as a question not of law but of policy, we presume that it may still be the policy of Her Majesty's Government to prevent, if possible, the sale of these ships to the Confederate States; but we see no means of securing that object (even if the law were other than it is), consistently either with justice to Captain Osborn, or good faith towards the Chinese Government, unless Her Majesty's Government themselves choose to purchase the ships, or can find purchasers for them.

The second observation which we have to offer is, that Captain Osborn, in his letter of the 25th of April, appears disposed to look to Her Majesty's Government and to Sir F. Bruce, as if they, and they only, were the principals, to whom he is accountable. But he is strictly and properly the agent of the Chinese Government; though under arrangements to which Her Majesty's Government, through Sir F. Bruce, were parties, and in respect of which they have since added to the responsibility originally contracted by them, by delaying, and for a time prohibiting, the sale of the ships at Bombay.

In strictness, Captain Osborn cannot be held entitled, even with the concurrence of Her Majesty's Government, to liberate himself from the responsibility to the Chinese Government for the performance of the duty which he has undertaken.

The practical conclusion at which we have arrived is, that unless Her Majesty's Government are prepared to leave Captain Osborn at full liberty to sell these ships in the best market which he can find for them, either in England or in India, at his own time, and under his own arrangements, to any customer who may be willing to purchase, they are morally bound to take upon themselves the responsibility from which he now desires to be freed. But if, on the other hand, they are prepared to allow him henceforth full liberty in this respect, we do not think that they are as yet bound, by anything which which has taken place, to accept the responsibility which he desires to throw upon them. If it should be determined (after weighing the probable consequence, namely, a sale to the Confederate States) to decline that responsibility, we think the proper answer to his letter will be, that Her Majesty's Government look upon him as undertaken an agency on account of the Chinese Government, for the disposal of these vessels, from which it is not in their power to relieve him; that they do not propose any longer to interpose any objection to his selling them to any person, or in any way that he may think fit; such sale (provided no addition is made to their equipments or furniture before delivery to the purchaser, for the purposes of any belligerent Power), being in no way contrary to law; but that they cannot take upon themselves to authorize the transfer of his agency to any mercantile firm, either at Bombay or elsewhere, and that if he employs any such firm he must do so upon his own responsibility.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 20.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 24, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th April, stating that it appeared to us that Sir F. Bruce's proposition to authorize by Order in Council the British authorities in China to imprison for a short time British subjects who might aid the rebels, and afterwards to deport them from the country, was reasonable and proper, he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would prepare the draft of such an Order in Council for effecting this object. That your Lordship agrees with us in thinking that it should be applicable to those persons only who, after the date and promulgation thereof, shall have given aid to the rebels.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to return copies of the previous papers and of the Orders in Council of the 3rd of March, 1859, and September 12, 1863; and to state that the Orders in Council of the 13th June, 1853, and February 2, 1857, will be found respectively in Hertslet, vol. ix, p. 210, and vol. x, p. 732.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that, with reference to the correspondence which was laid before Parliament in 1862, respecting the employment under the Government of China of officers in the naval or military service of Her Majesty, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that it has just been discovered that, besides the Colonial Ordinance No. 1, 1855, for enforcing neutrality during the contest in China therein referred to, the first section of which appears from the Colonial Office letter of the 1st of July, 1862, to be no longer in force, a Consular Ordinance, issued under the Act 6 & 7 Vict., cap. 80, bearing the same date as the Colonial Ordinance, and enacting the same penalties for the breach of neutrality, has not been repealed, and is therefore still in force. That, under these circumstances, a question must arise, how far British subjects taking part in the contest, either with or without the sanction of the Crown, may not, either for services heretofore performed or still being performed, have rendered themselves, and be still liable, to the penalties enacted by that Ordinance; and to request that we would take the matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship as to the course which should be pursued.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have prepared the following draft Order in Council which is appended to this Report. It will be seen that, in this draft Order, provision is made to meet the difficulty arising out of the recently discovered Consular Ordinance of the 17th of January, 1855, to which subject our attention was directed by the letter of Mr. Hammond of the 11th instant.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 21.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

Doctors' Commons, June 25, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence* which has taken place respecting an assault committed at Tamsuy, Formosa, on Mr. Sullivan, master of the British schooner "Wild Wave." That these papers would put me in possession of the circumstances of the case, and of the proceedings of Her Majesty's officers in China in regard thereto; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the merits of the case; and as to the instructions which should be given to Vice-Admiral Kuper with regard to the disposal of the sum of 1,200 dollars paid by the Chinese authorities as compensation for the assault in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I entirely agree with the view taken by his Excellency Sir F. Bruce of the merits of this case, and as to the error in judgment which led the naval officers to act in defiance of Mr. Consul Braune's legitimate authority in this matter. It is, in my opinion, to be much regretted that any pecuniary compensation was demanded in this case. It is clear that, though the brutal treatment of Mr. Sullivan was unjustifiable, it was, in the first instance, provoked by the insolence, violence, and obstinacy of the sufferer himself. Moreover, the ground upon which it was paid by the Chinese authorities, namely, a respect for Sir J. Hope's services and character, renders the payment, as a matter of justice, still more unsatisfactory. The only circumstance which raises any doubt in my mind as to the disposition of the 1,200 dollars is, the statement of Mr. Consul Braune, in his letter to Governor Seu (Inclosure 5 in Sir F. Bruce's No. 33, of March 30, 1863), that Mr. Sullivan was entitled to compensation. Nevertheless, my opinion is that this money was wrongfully exacted, and therefore should be paid back to the Chinese authorities, in w[illegible]ver way may be most prudent and expedient. I venture to suggest that it should be accompanied by a statement that Her Majesty's Government were satisfied with the degradation and deposition of the Taoutae, and the punishment of the subalterns, and that as further inquiry left no doubt that Mr. Sullivan, though unwarrantably treated, had not been himself free from blame, Her Majesty's Government, desiring to act on all occasions with perfect fairness towards the Chinese Government, and according to the spirit as well as the letter of the Treaty obligations subsisting between the two countries, thought it proper to remit the compensation money in this particular case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 22.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 21, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter dated the 14th ultimo from Messrs. E. P. and C. R. Rayner of Sutherland, inquiring as to the power with which Her Majesty's Consuls in China are invested to hear and decide claims between British or foreign merchants and British ship-masters, and also a letter dated the 27th ultimo from the Board of Trade in answer to an inquiry on the subject which your Lordship caused to be addressed to that Department; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Lords of the Privy Council for Trade have arrived at a right conclusion with respect to the substance of your Lordship's letter, viz., that apart from the jurisdiction conferred by the Orders in Council, the Consuls in China would have no power to take cognizance of such claims against ships or ship-masters as are the subject of Messrs. Rayner's inquiry. The Mercantile Marine Act, 17th and 18th Vict., cap. 104, gives in some cases, to Consuls expressly, and in other cases to Justices of the Peace (whose powers are, for this purpose, vested in Her Majesty's Consuls in China by the 41st section of the Order in Council of 13th June, 1863), authority to inquire into complaints by the master, mate, or any seaman of a British merchant-ship, and to decide questions as to wages, fines, or forfeitures, arising on such complaints; and to enforce payment of wages (not exceeding 50*l.*), and of certain other pecuniary liabilities under that Act (See particularly sections 188, 229, 260, 263, 518), and, by sections 521, and 523 of the same Act (read in connection with the 41st section of the same Order in Council), Her Majesty's Consuls in China are empowered to exercise jurisdiction over British ships in Chinese waters, as well as over all persons on board such ships; and in case of non-payment by the master or owner of any wages, penalties, or other sums of money ordered to be paid by such master or owner under that Act, to levy the amount remaining unpaid by distress or sale of the ship itself. But the civil jurisdiction given by this Act, relates exclusively to questions arising between the owners or masters of ships on the one hand, and their officers or seamen on the other; while the inquiry of Messrs. Rayner relates to a totally different subject, viz., "the settlement of disputes between merchants and the Chinese ports, and the captains of ships trading there."

With respect to such last named disputes, we apprehend that Her Majesty's Consuls in China have the jurisdiction given to them by the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 14th sections of the Order in Council of the 13th June, 1853, and no other jurisdiction. Under those sections, they may hear and determine any suit of a civil nature arising in China in which a British subject is defendant, and likewise any such suit in which a British subject is plaintiff and a foreigner defendant, if the latter submits to the jurisdiction; and they may enforce, by distress or imprisonment (and not otherwise), any Judgment which may be awarded in any such suit. Any question, therefore, between a merchant and the captain of a British ship, arising in China which can be the subject of a civil suit, may be adjudicated upon by the Consul; and any Judgment against the captain may be enforced by distress upon the ship or other property belonging to himself, but cannot be enforced by the detention of any ship which is not his property. The ship's certificate of registry (as to which, see section 50 of the 17th and 18th Vic., cap. 104), and other papers, cannot be detained for the purpose of enforcing any such decision, in any case in which the ship itself is not liable to be distrained for the same purpose.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Sir F. Bruce, Nos. 33, 42, and 157; Admiralty, June 22 and September 3, 1863; and June 15, 1864.

1864

No. 23.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 15th instant from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Hong Kong, forwarding for the Queen's confirmation an Ordinance which has been passed by the Legislature of that Colony, to render admissible in certain cases the depositions of witnesses who cannot be produced at the trial, and to make provision for the reception in evidence of the statements of the accused.

And to request that we would take this Ordinance into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That we think Her Majesty's confirmation should be given to this Ordinance. It appears possible, indeed, that subsequent alterations in the mode of trying criminal cases in Japan and China may render the Ordinance hereafter unnecessary; but it is proper to provide against the possibility, during the intermediate period, of an entire failure of justice in this class of criminal cases.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 24.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 86), reporting the case of a fishing-boat run down by a steamer belonging to Messrs. Jardine and Co., and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which it would be proper to address to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking relative to the steps which ought to be taken in this case, which, as we should perceive, has also a bearing upon the question of establishing a Consular Court for China and Japan, submitted to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th of July.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as the papers before us enable us to form an opinion, we think that an Admiralty Court would hold that the steamer was, notwithstanding any alteration of the helm of the fishing-boat, exclusively to blame for this collision. A steamer, it has been often decided, is not at liberty to make the experiment how near she can go to a small vessel without coming into collision; she is bound to give a wide berth in the first instance, and cannot escape from the responsibility of not having done so, by alleging that, in the moment of alarm and just before the collision, the small vessel executed some unskilful nautical manœuvre. We think, therefore, that the Chinese fisherman would, in all probability, recover the whole value of his vessel and tackle, with costs, in a suit in the Vice-Admiralty Court. It is much to be regretted that the expense of such a suit should deter the Chinese from seeking this remedy. The proposal to submit the matter to arbitration is very reasonable, but it may be refused by the owners of the "Carthage;" and in this event (as Sir F. Bruce seems to be of opinion that British steamers are in the habit of running down small Chinese craft with practical impunity), we think it might be desirable that the Attorney-General at Hong Kong should receive orders to proceed against the "Carthage" in the Vice-Admiralty Court on behalf of the injured party, if the requisite evidence is likely to be forthcoming, and if there is any public fund out of which the expense of such a proceeding can properly be defrayed. Care should (in that case) be taken to explain that the special circumstances of this case had alone induced Her Majesty's Government to take this step, and that it was not to form a precedent for other cases.

With regard to the suggestion of Sir F. Bruce that such cases as these might be properly dealt with by the Consular Courts, it seems to us highly desirable when the proposed new Consular Court is established at Shanghae that a jurisdiction in maritime cases, similar to that now possessed by the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, should be given to that tribunal.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 25.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 94), respecting certain Port Regulations recently established by the Chinese authorities at Amoy. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose copies of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, and of the Order in Council of June 13, 1853, and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the perusal of the Articles of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, and of the Articles of the Order in Council of June 13, 1853, satisfy us that the opinion expressed by Sir F. Bruce to Mr. Consul Pedder, upon the subject of the proposed Amoy Port Regulations, is correct, and that it would not be competent to the Consul, or to the Chinese authorities, to enforce the penalty of a fine against British ships entering a Chinese dock without a permit.

It is proper, however, to observe that, by Article XLVI of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, the Chinese authorities at each port are at liberty "to adopt the means they shall judge most proper to prevent the revenue suffering from fraud or smuggling;" and by Article XLVIII all smuggled goods are made "subject to confiscation by the Chinese authorities." If, therefore, a permit is required before a ship goes into dock, with a view to the better prevention of smuggling, it would be right that all proper means should be taken to enable Her Majesty's Consular Agents in China to enforce such a rule against British subjects.

We think it would be competent for Sir F. Bruce, if duly and officially requested so to do, to publish, according to the provisions of the Order in Council, a Regulation having for its object to enforce a penalty for entering a dock without a permit, and we think it should be left to his discretion to determine whether such a Regulation is, under the existing circumstances, proper and expedient, or not.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 26.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 7.)

Doctors' Commons, November 7, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking (No. 15, July 25), respecting the seizure at Ningpo, in 1862, of certain munitions of war on board the barque "Paragon" and the forcible removal of that vessel to Shanghae. Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to me a letter dated the 20th October on the subject from Mr. Harvey, late Her Majesty's Consul at Ningpo, but now Her Majesty's Consul at Chin-kiang, who is in this country on leave of absence; and was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion with regard to the claim which has been advanced for compensation.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that the claim for compensation on behalf of the owners of the barque "Paragon" ought not to be acceded to by Her Majesty's Government. I agree entirely with the opinion expressed by his Excellency Sir F. Bruce on this matter, in his letter dated Peking, No. 4, 1862, and addressed to Messrs. Brown of Singapore.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Denmark.

No. 27.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 27, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 11th November ultimo from the Board of Trade relative to a question as to the administration of the effects of a deceased Danish seaman, which has formed the subject of correspondence between that Department and the Danish Consul-General in London.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us at the same time a Memorandum on the subject which has been drawn up in your Lordship's Department, and to request that we would take the matter into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that in all those cases in which there have been Treaties of Reciprocity between England and foreign countries, and in which the provisions of such Treaties have unfortunately not been enforced by a statute in this country, it is not competent to Her Majesty's Government to execute the provisions of such Treaties, when they are not in accordance with our municipal law. We are of opinion, therefore, that the former Reports of the Queen's Advocate in this matter were well founded in law, and that the XVth Article of the Treaty between England and Denmark of the 11th July, 1670, cannot be put in force at the request of the Danish Minister, in any cases but those of personal property under 50*l.* in value belonging to Danish seamen. To these cases, the provisions of the statutes referred to in the memorandum apply; but as to personal property above this value, application must be made by the Danish Consul or person entitled to represent the deceased Dane, for probate or letters of administration in the usual form in the Court of Probate in this country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 28.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us memorials which have been addressed to your Lordship by certain merchants at Leith, and by the Dundee Chamber of Commerce, requesting that steps may be taken to secure the exportation of produce purchased by British merchants in Prussian ports, in case those ports are blockaded by Denmark; that your Lordship proposes to send copies of these memorials to Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, with instructions to lay them before the Danish Government, and to request that in the event of a blockade being established, cargoes purchased on British account may be allowed a reasonable time to pass outward, through the blockade, even though not actually on shipboard before the commencement of the blockade; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would inform your Lordship at our earliest convenience whether we concur in this instruction being sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that it would be right and proper to send the instructions in this matter proposed by your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 29.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th of February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note which had been addressed to you by the Danish Minister at this Court making various suggestions with a view of securing from seizure an iron-clad vessel which his Government has recently purchased at Glasgow; and to request that we would take M. de Bille's proposal into our immediate consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the request of the Danish Minister to allow the iron-clad ship to be finished, so far as to admit of her being launched, is, in the circumstances, reasonable and proper to be granted, and that we think that if the Danish Minister will pledge his word that the ship shall not quit this country until the permission of Her Majesty's Government has been obtained, no other security need be taken.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 30.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 17.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a memorandum showing the engagements of Great Britain and other Powers towards Denmark relative to the Duchy of Schleswig, together with volumes containing the Treaties referred to in the marginal notes, namely, the Treaty of Stockholm of the 3rd June, 1720, between Denmark and Sweden, which was followed by the Acts of Guarantee of England and France having reference to the Duchy of Schleswig; the Treaty of Alliance between Denmark, Great Britain, and France of 1727, in the Preamble to which reference is made to the guarantee of Schleswig; and the Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and Denmark of the 14th January, 1814, in which no specific mention is made of the Act of Guarantee of 1720, but of which the VIIth Article provides for the renewal of all ancient Treaties of Peace and Commerce between the two Crowns in their full extent and in all their clauses, so far as they were not contradictory to the provisions of the new Treaty.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the points on which your Lordship would be glad to have our opinion at our earliest convenience, were :—

1864

1st. Whether the Act of Guarantee of 1720, which seems neither to have been a Treaty nor to have been annexed to a Treaty, was abrogated, like all other Treaties, by the state of war which at a later period prevailed between Great Britain and Denmark; and if so,

2nd. Whether the stipulations of the Treaty of Peace of 1814 for the renewal of ancient Treaties of Peace and Commerce between Great Britain and Denmark recalled the Act of Guarantee into force.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he had sent, for convenience of reference, Dr. Twiss' work on the subject.

And that there was a further question on which your Lordship would also be glad of our opinion, namely, whether the change in direct succession to the possessions of the Danish Crown adverted to in the Treaty of May 1852 would have any effect in invalidating the Act of Guarantee at the present time, supposing that without such change that Act would now have held good.

We have also been honoured with several subsequent letters by Mr. Hammond, forwarding further papers upon this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these questions into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the first question, namely, as to whether the Act or Treaty of Guarantee of 1720 was or was not abrogated, apart from other considerations, by subsequent wars between Great Britain and Denmark, we are unanimously of opinion that this Act or Treaty of Guarantee belonged to the category of Conventions which are abrogated by subsequent war between the contracting parties, or between the guaranteeing and guaranteed States.

That with respect to the third question, namely, the effect of the change in the direct line of succession to the possessions of the Danish Crown adverted to in the Treaty of London of May 1852, upon this Act or Treaty of Guarantee, we are unanimously of opinion that it does not dissolve the obligations which Great Britain incurred by the guarantee of 1720, if otherwise still subsisting.

With respect to the second question, namely, whether the obligations of this guarantee were or were not revived by the Treaty of Kiel (14th January, 1814) between Great Britain and Denmark, the Attorney and Solicitor-General are of opinion that the guarantee was not revived by that Treaty. The words of Article XIII are: "All the ancient Treaties of Peace and Commerce concluded between the predecessors of their Britannic and Danish Majesties are hereby renewed in their full extent and in all their clauses, so far as they are not contradictory to the stipulations contained in the Articles of the present Treaty."

The Attorney and Solicitor-General are of opinion that Treaties of Peace (which are the words; not, "of or relating to Peace") do not in their natural and plain meaning (a meaning which receives illustration from the occasion and language of the Treaty of Kiel itself) include Treaties or Conventions of Alliance or Guarantee made between Powers who were not at war with each other at the time of the negotiation of such Treaties or Conventions; and that as there had been Treaties concluded between Great Britain and Denmark before 1814 (see vol. i, State Papers, p. 375, &c.), which would fall within the legitimate meaning of "Treaties of Peace," namely, Treaties concluding a war (as well as Treaties of Commerce), it is not necessary, in order to satisfy the terms of reference in the Treaty of 1814, to extend those terms to a Convention formerly entered into by Great Britain as a neutral or mediating Power, upon the termination of a war to which she was no party.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General, while entertaining the view above expressed, of the proper construction and effect of the terms of the XIIIth Article of the Treaty of Kiel, think it proper (at the same time) to observe, that in various diplomatic communications which took place in the year 1848, between the Courts of Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, and France, on the subject of the affairs of Schleswig-Holstein and Denmark, references were frequently made by the Ministers of all these Powers (Great Britain included) to the guarantee in question, in terms apparently implying the recognition of that guarantee as a valid and still subsisting engagement. It does not, however, appear that the questions now proposed for the opinion of the Law Officers were then considered; and whatever may have passed in communications with other Powers, the Attorney and Solicitor-General are not aware that the validity of the guarantee as a subsisting engagement was then, or at any other time since 1814, admitted on the part of Great Britain, in any direct communication between Great Britain and Denmark. If any such admission was in fact made, or if, when the Treaty of Kiel was itself under discussion or negotiation, anything passed between the two Courts on this particular subject, the effect which such circumstances might possibly have upon the present question would deserve further and very serious consideration.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

I agree to the answers to the first and third questions (which are in order in this Report first and second), and I refer to my separate Report on the second question.

ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

With respect to the second question submitted to us, namely, whether the Act or Treaty of Guarantee given by the Crown of Great Britain in 1720 was or was not revived by the XIIIth Article of the Treaty of Kiel, between Denmark and Great Britain in 1814, I incline to the opinion that the guarantee was revived by that Treaty and is now in force.

The following reasons have principally led me to this conclusion:—

1. The Article in question contemplates the revival of two classes of Treaties—

(1.) Treaties of Peace.

(2.) Treaties of Commerce.

The guarantee of 1720 clearly does not belong to the latter class.

The sole question is, does it belong to the former class?

The answer must be derived from various considerations—the ordinary meaning of the language employed; the peculiar phraseology of diplomatic instruments, aided by the light which the history of the facts surrounding the guarantee of 1720, and the reviving Treaty of 1814, and any subsequent recognition by the guaranteeing State, may throw upon the subject.

2. It is to be observed in limine, that Treaties are, by the consent of all writers, contractus optima fidei, and to be construed in the most liberal spirit, and with the utmost latitude that the preservation of good faith seems to demand, provided always that the sense be not wrested from its plain and obvious meaning.

3. The books contain many divisions and subdivisions of Treaties, but the great general division of Treaties is—

(1.) Into transitory Conventions, which are limited to a particular object or period.

(2.) Into Treaties more properly so called, of which the obligations are, except on account of certain well-known causes, perpetually binding on the Contracting Parties or Party; for a Treaty, like a covenant, may be unilateral.

4. I do not find in the writings of any jurist or publicist, or in the practice of States, so far as that is to be collected from public acts and documents, the position that Acts of Guarantee generally are excluded from the category of Treaties of (or relating to) Peace.* And I may here observe that the Treaties of 1660-61, and 1670, between the Crowns of Great Britain and Denmark, which are entitled "Treaties of Peace and Commerce," provided expressly for "defensive alliances" between the two Contracting Parties. (State Papers, vol. i, pp. 375, 381.)

5. I think that title is, generally, large enough to embrace all such Acts, but especially when, as in the present case, the Act of Guarantee is nominally and really an adjunct (pactum accessorium) to a Treaty of Peace concluding a war.

---

* "Un Traité (en Latin fœdus) est un pacte fait en vue du bien public par des Puissances supérieures, soit à perpétuité soit pour un terme considérable. Les pactes qui ont pour objet des affaires transitoires s'appellent accords, conventions, pactions. Ils s'accomplissent par un acte unique et non point par des prestations réitérées. Ces pactes se consomment dans leur exécution une fois pour toutes. Les Traités reçoivent une exécution successive, dont la durée égale celle du Traité.—Vattel, secs. 152, 153; Martens, sec. 61; Vattel, chap. xvi; Hoffters, sec. 97; Kluber, sec. 157.

"Jure specialia fœdera porro subdividuntur in æqualia et inæqualia. . . . . Utraque tum æqualia tum inæqualia fiunt vel pacis vel societatis causâ.

"Pacis causâ, quo pertinent fœdera de pace constituenda, de reddendis captivis (quæ vocantur 'cartels'), de induciis, de munimentis quibusdam a tertii milite custodiendis."—Barriere Tractaten.

"The Convention of Guaranty is one of the most usual international contracts. It is an engagement by which one State promises to aid another when it is interrupted or threatened to be disturbed in the peaceable enjoyment of its rights by a third Power. It may be applied to every species of right and obligation that can exist between nations; to the possessions and boundaries of territories, the sovereignty of the State, its constitution of government, the right of succession, &c.; but it is most commonly applied to Treaties of Peace. The guaranty may also be contained in a distinct and separate Convention, or included among the stipulations annexed to the principal Treaty intended to be guaranteed. It then becomes an accessory obligation."—Laurence's "Wheaton on International Law," Parts i, ii, and iii, vol. i, p. 476.

6. If there be no proposition of general law, and no usage derived from general practice which controls the construction of the words of the Treaty of Kiel, the surrounding history supports, as it seems to me strongly, the opinion that the guarantee of 1720 is revived.

7. The language of the guarantee of 1720, "Ainsi Sa Majesté Britannique promet et s'oblige, pour soi, ses héritiers et successeurs, à Sa Majesté le Roi de Dannemarck, ses héritiers et successeurs, de lui garantir et conserver dans une possession continuelle et paisible la partie Ducale du Duché de Sleswick, laquelle Sa Majesté Danoise a entre les mains, et de la défendre la mieux possible contre tous et chacun qui tacheroit de la troubler soit directement ou indirectement;" (then follow very important words)—"le tout en vertu du Traité conclu en 1715, avec Sa Majesté Britannique comme Electeur de Brunswick et de Lunebourg, aussi bien que la dite Convention faite le 30 Octobre de l'année passée dans un Acte séparé pour la continuation."

8. Two questions immediately arise:—

What was the Treaty of 1715? What was the Convention of 30th October, 1719, "in virtue of which," and, by fair construction, as a complement to which, this guarantee was given?

9. The Treaty of 1715 contained the most express obligation of the King of Great Britain, as Elector of Hanover, to defend the possession of the Duchy of Schleswig by the King of Denmark against the King of Sweden during the then existing war, and afterwards contra quoscunque; and in return for this promised succour Denmark gave up Bremen and Verden to Hanover, which that country has ever since possessed.

10. The Convention of 1789 (executed at Copenhagen between Denmark and Great Britain) recited that Sweden and Denmark had consented to an armistice, but that Denmark had made a condition of her consent that the King of Great Britain should guarantee to her, in his capacity as King of Great Britain, that possession of Schleswig which he had already, as Elector of Hanover, guaranteed to her by the Treaty of 1715.

11. The guarantee in question, namely, that of 1720, was the complement of this Convention, and it seems to me impossible to contend that this guarantee, which is expressly declared to be "in virtue" of the Treaty of 1715, and the Convention of 1719, was not bonâ fide and substantially a "Treaty of Peace;" and if it was, the Treaty of Kiel, construed in the narrowest sense, revived it.

12. Further history confirms this view:—

France signed an Act of Guarantee contemporaneously with Great Britain in 1720; it was rather more in detail, and referred to the Treaty of Stockholm, but it was substantially the same.

In 1727, Denmark feared an attack upon Schleswig from the Muscovites passing through Prussia; France, England, and Denmark, entered into a Convention which recited their obligation, consequent on their guarantees, to defend Denmark in her possession of Schleswig contra quoscunque, and bound the Contracting Parties to assist Prussia if attacked for refusing passage to the Muscovite troops.

13. It cannot be denied that if the words of a Treaty, unilateral or bilateral, are equivocal, a State which is a Contracting Party to it may by words or by conduct, directly or by necessary implication, put such a construction upon them as will be binding upon such State. Let me apply this position to the present case.

14. When it is remembered that on the same day when Denmark signed, in 1814, the Treaty of Kiel with Great Britain, in which the Article reviving in the most solemn manner "all the ancient Treaties of Peace and Commerce" occurs, she signed a Treaty with Sweden surrendering Norway, at the urgent instance of Great Britain, to Sweden, another reason presents itself for giving the widest construction to terms which might have the effect of reviving the guarantee of Great Britain for the security of its remaining possessions to the Crown of Denmark.

15. It appears from correspondence contained in the book sent to us from the Foreign Office (1845-48, Schleswig and Holstein), and the accompanying printed papers, that in the year 1848, Denmark, in direct terms, pressed the obligations of the guarantee upon Great Britain. It is true that Great Britain did not in express terms acknowledge the obligation, but it was not denied, and the abrogation of it was never suggested. On the contrary, directions were given to the Representatives of the Crown in foreign parts, and especially to the British Ambassador at Berlin, to call attention to this Treaty; and the reply of Prussia is remarkable,* as it expressly recognizes the guarantee of Great Britain as then subsisting:—"Dans votre office du 18 courant et dans les pièces qui l'accompagnent il est encore question de la garantie d'une partie du Slesvig donnée par la Grande Bretagne. Le Gouvernement du Roi connaît et reconnaît parfaitement cette garantie, mais il est d'avis que le différend actuel n'y touche en aucune manière. La garantie de la Grande Bretagne conserve tout son effet et restera aussi intacte que la souveraineté du Roi de Danemark sur son Duché de Slesvig-Holstein."

It appears also that the French Governement at that time recognized the existence and obligation of their corresponding guarantee.*

16. Upon all grounds therefore, namely, the duty of placing the most liberal construction on terms used to express the engagements of a Treaty, the plain meaning of the terms employed in Article XIII of the Treaty of Kiel, the general usage of States with respect to such terms, the exposition of them afforded, in this particular instance, by contemporaneous and by very recent history (and both are lawful exponents of international contracts*), I think that the guarantee of 1720 was revived by the Treaty of Kiel, 1814.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 31.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 27.)

Doctors' Commons, February 27, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note which has been addressed to your Lordship by the Danish Minister at this Court, notifying the establishment of a blockade of the east coast of Schleswig and Holstein; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this note into consideration, and if I should be satisfied with the sufficiency of the notice, that I would prepare the usual notification for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the notice of blockade referred to into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I consider the same sufficient, and have prepared and herewith transmit a notification thereof, proper for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 31.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, February , 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the King of Denmark at this Court a notification, dated the 26th of February, 1864, of the blockade by the Danish naval forces of all ports and inlets on the east coast of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein from the 25th of this month (February), with the exception of Neustadt, the Islands of Als and Aeroe, and such other places as are actually under the authority of His Majesty the King of Denmark, and further notifying that the blockade will successively be raised for every place that comes again into the power of the Royal Government and public notice thereof be given.

The following is the official communication received by Earl Russell:—

(Here insert verbatim a copy of the Danish Minister's communication to Earl Russell dated 26th February, 1864.)

R. J. P.

---

* Baron Arnim to Lord Palmerston, Berlin, April 19, 1848.

* "Quant à nous, qui avons en 1720 donné notre garantie au Traité par lequel la possession du Slesvig est assurée au Danemark, et qui avons renouvellé cette garantie il y a quelques jours, nous garderons notre parole donnée, et nous exigerons qu'aucune modification ne soit apportée aux Traités existants sans notre concours et notre consentement."—Foreign Office Book, p. 641; M. Bastide to M. Beaumont.

† Martens. "Erneuerung der Verträge," p. 25.

1864

No. 32.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 1.)

Doctors' Commons, March 1, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 29th February ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen (No. 103), forwarding translations of the regulations published by the Danish Government with regard to the blockade of enemies' ports and to the adjudication of matters concerning the capture of hostile or suspected vessels, and to request that I would take these papers into immediate consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon; and to state that if there is no objection thereto your Lordship proposes to publish them in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That there is no reason why these regulations should not be gazetted; both those which relate to the Prize Court and those which relate to the blockade indicate that the belligerent proposes to exercise his rights with lenity towards neutrals.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 33.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 3, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of a letter to the Board of Admiralty on the subject of the instructions to be given to Her Majesty's naval officers in regard to the hostilities between Denmark and Austria and Prussia; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, this letter is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have perused and considered the draft letter referred to, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that this letter is right and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 34.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 5.)

Doctors' Commons, March 4, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Home Office on the subject of a form of notice relative to the determination of the Danish Government to seize German vessels which has been forwarded to the Corporation of the port of Dublin by the Oldenburg Consul in that city, with the request that it may be distributed by their pilots to German vessels; and to request that I would take this letter and its inclosures into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government ought to pursue in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am not aware whether the Corporation of Dublin stands in any peculiar relation to Her Majesty's Government, or what the regulations may be respecting the government of the pilots.

If I am, however, right in assuming that, directly or indirectly, the sanction of Her Majesty's Government is required for the distribution of these notices, I am clearly of opinion that they ought not to give it, inasmuch as the object of the notice is to render material assistance to one of the belligerents, in a war in which Her Majesty is neutral; and I think that the answer to the Corporation should be to this effect.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 35.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 8.)

Doctors' Commons, March 8, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 26th ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note dated the 7th instant which has been addressed to your Lordship by the Danish Minister at this Court, notifying the establishment of a blockade of the port of Neustadt; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this note into consideration, and if I should be satisfied with the sufficiency of the notice that I would prepare the usual notification for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the notice is sufficient, and proper to be inserted in the Gazette.

I have accordingly prepared the notice of which I annex a draft to this Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 35.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, March 8, 1864.

IT is hereby notified that on the 7th instant, Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, received from the Danish Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of St. James's the announcement that the port of Neustadt will from the 5th of this month (March) be blockaded (by the Danish naval forces), together with the other ports and inlets on the east coast of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein mentioned in his (the said Danish Minister's) note of February 26th last, and notice of which was given in the (Supplemental) "London Gazette" of Monday the 29th February last.

The following is the official communication received by Earl Russell:—

(Here insert copy, verbatim, of Danish Minister's communication of the 7th instant.)

R. P.

No. 36.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Doctors' Commons, March 15, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen reporting the establishment by Denmark of a blockade of the ports of Cammin, Swinemünde, Wolgast, Greifswalde, Stralsund, and Barth; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this despatch into my immediate consideration, and if satisfied with the sufficiency of the notice, that I would prepare the usual notification for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have considered the notification referred to, and am of opinion that the same is sufficient, and proper to be inserted in the Gazette.

I have accordingly prepared, and herewith transmit, a form of notice for insertion in that paper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864 -

Inclosure in No. 36.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, March , 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen a notification, dated the 8th March, 1864, addressed to him by the Danish Minister, M. Quaade, of the blockade from the 15th instant (March), by the Danish naval forces, of the ports of Cammin, Swinemünde, Wolgast, Greifswalde, Stralsund, and Barth.

The following is the official notification referred to:—

(Here insert verbatim, a copy of the official notification (in English) signed "O. Lutken," Danish Minister of Marine.)

R. J. P.

No. 37.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Doctors' Commons, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 21st instant from certain merchants of Belfast requesting that a safe-conduct may be obtained from the Danish Government to allow a Prussian vessel laden with flax-seed belonging to them, now in the port of Marstrand in Sweden, to deliver her cargo at Belfast; and to request that I would take this letter into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I am of opinion that any steps should be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I think it would be proper that your Lordship should submit the petition of the memorialists to the Danish Government, and request their favourable consideration of it. The circumstances of the case are very peculiar, and with reference to them the prayer of the Memorialists appears to me reasonable.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 38.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 29.)

Doctors' Commons, March 29, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 27th March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 25th instant from Messrs. Berry, Barclay and Co. making inquiry as to the constitution of an effective and legal blockade of the port of Swinemünde; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the parties.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration and have the honour to report—

That an answer should be sent to Messrs. Berry, Barclay and Co. to the following effect:—That a notification to the Consul is not indispensably necessary to the constitution of an effective and legal blockade; that the certificate in question cannot be safely considered as affording certain evidence that there was no effective blockade of Swinemünde on the 19th instant.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 39.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 29.)

Doctors' Commons, March 29, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen (No. 177), stating that a notification of the blockade of the Island of Fehmern has appeared in the official papers; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and if satisfied of the sufficiency of the notice that I would prepare the usual notification for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that this notification is sufficient, and ought to be published in the "London Gazette." I have therefore prepared a notification, the draft of which I annex to this Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 39.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, March 29, 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen stating that a notification from the Ministry of Marine dated the 22nd instant appeared in the official paper of the 23rd instant, stating that the Island of Fehmern is declared in a state of blockade.

R. J. P.

No. 40.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 2.)

Doctors' Commons, April 2, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 17th ultimo, which has been sent to the Foreign Office by Mr. Dalglish, M.P., inquiring whether a free pass could be obtained from the Danish Government for a Prussian vessel now in the blockaded port of Wolgast on the ground of a cargo belonging to a British merchant having been shipped on it before the outbreak of hostilities; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the applicant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That the proper answer to send to Mr. Dalglish in this case would be to the effect that Her Majesty's Government cannot directly interfere in this matter; but if Mr. Lamb wishes to memorialise the Danish Government as to his case, your Lordship will cause the memorial to be forwarded, but that your Lordship cannot hold out any hope that the request of Mr. Lamb will be granted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 41.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 19.)

Doctors' Commons, April 18, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, forwarding a notification of the blockade of Dantzic and Pillau by the Danish fleet; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and, if satisfied of the sufficiency of the notice, that I would prepare the usual notification for insertion in the "London Gazette."

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have perused the paper sent to me announcing the blockade of Dantzic and Pillau by the Danish naval fleet, and, considering such notice to be sufficient, have prepared, and herewith transmit, a notification thereof proper for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 41.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, April 19, 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen an official notification, issued by the Ministry of Marine of the King of Denmark, and dated the 13th of April, 1864, announcing that besides the ports and entrances blockaded by the Danish naval forces according to previous publications, the ports of Dantzic and Pillau will be blockaded from the 19th of this month (April).

The following is the official notification received by Earl Russell:—

(Here insert the notification in English of the blockade of Dantzic and Pillau.)

R. P.

No. 42.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 19.)

Doctors' Commons, May 19, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen, forwarding a notification from the Danish Government of the termination of the blockade of the Prussian ports in the Baltic and of the ports of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and if I should be satisfied of the sufficiency of the notice that I would prepare a notification for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have considered these papers, and being satisfied of the sufficiency of the notice in question, have prepared, and herewith transmit to your Lordship, a notification proper for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 42.

Notification of the Raising of the Blockade of the Prussian Ports in the Baltic, and the Ports of Schleswig and Holstein.

Foreign Office, May 19, 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen an official notification issued by the Ministry of Marine of the King of Denmark, and dated the 10th of May, 1864, announcing that the blockade, by the Danish naval forces, of the Prussian ports in the Baltic, and of the ports of Schleswig and Holstein (which ports and places are particularly named in the official notice hereunder set forth), will from the 12th of this present month (May 1864) be raised and cease to be in force.

The following is the official notification received by Earl Russell:—

(Here insert, verbatim, the official notification in English referred to.)

R. P.

No. 43.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 21.)

Doctors' Commons, May 21, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 18th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a petition from a Mr. Gunn, praying that your Lordship would take steps to procure the restoration of his vessel, the "Alma," captured by a Danish vessel of war, under the circumstances stated in the petition, while on a voyage, as is alleged, to the unblockaded port of Colberg; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Gunn.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that the notifications of blockaded ports which were officially published in the "London Gazette," and in which the ports so blockaded were enumerated, were prepared in compliance with the suggestions contained in my Reports of the 8th and 14th of March last.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the statement of the memorialist, his vessel was not guilty of a breach of the blockade. But this is a question perfectly proper to be decided by the Danish Prize Court; and I cannot see any special circumstances in this case which should induce your Lordship to make a particular application to the Danish Government. I humbly advise your Lordship to answer the memorialist to the effect that your Lordship is advised that the proper course for him to pursue is, to cause his case to be properly stated before the Danish Prize Court, and to require from that tribunal restitution of this vessel. If it has been improperly seized it will be restored, and with or without costs and damages, accordingly as there may or may not appear to have been probable cause of capture. It would, I think, be well to add that this is the course which Her Majesty's Government would point out to the Danish Government as proper to be pursued if, England being belligerent and Denmark neutral, the Danish Government had made application for the restitution of a Danish vessel captured in circumstances similar to those in which the "Alma" appears to have been captured.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 44.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Königsberg, inclosing a petition from James Duncan, master of the British schooner "Princess Helena," stating that he has inadvertently entered the port of Pillau since the institution of the blockade of that port, and requesting your Lordship to exert your influence with the Danish Government to procure a free pass to enable his vessel to leave the port; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the case is one in which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in interfering in behalf of the blockaded ship.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the petition of James Duncan seems to us reasonable; and that (unless the question has been practically settled in Mr. Duncan's favour by the terms of the present suspension of hostilities), Her Majesty's Government would be justified in representing to the Danish Government the circumstances alleged by Duncan, and founding on them a request that he might be permitted to leave Pillau in ballast.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 45.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

Doctors' Commons, May 30, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a letter from the Danish Minister announcing that the blockade of the German ports will be re-established on the 12th of June next, unless the questions pending between Denmark and Germany are settled by that time, and a letter from your Lordship acknowledging its receipt; and to acquaint me that if I see no objection, your Lordship proposes to publish this correspondence in the "London Gazette" on Tuesday next.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this correspondence into consideration and have the honour to report—

That I see no objection to the publication of the aforesaid correspondence in the "London Gazette" of Tuesday next.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 46.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 7th of April last relative to the objections raised by Prussia to the efficiency of the Danish blockade of the Prussian ports in the Baltic, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us further correspondence on the subject as marked in the margin,* and to state to us that, having in view the contingency of the blockade being re-established, your Lordship was desirous of being favoured with our opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in regard to this question.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that the former correspondence was annexed for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That the proper answer to the complaint of the Prussian Government appears to us to be that Denmark has not claimed, and does not claim, any exemption from the agreement contained in the Declaration of Paris as to the necessity of an effective de facto blockade in all cases in which the international maritime rights of a belligerent incident to the institution of a blockade are sought to be exercised. That there is, in truth, no question of law, but only a question of fact, in controversy between Prussia and Denmark. That it is always a question of fact whether there be or be not a sufficiently effective force on the spot which the belligerent declares to be blockaded. The Danish Government assert that the Prussian statements as to the absence of Danish men-of-war and the ineffectiveness of the blockade are unfounded. The letter of M. Bille dated the 17th ultimo to your Lordship contains a detailed and absolute refutation of them, and at the same time a correct exposition of the leading principles of the law of blockade. The reports of Her Majesty's Consuls from the Prussian ports substantially confirm this statement of facts made by M. Bille.

As to the period between the 15th and 27th of March, the absence of due notification to foreign Consuls (which, as M. Bille justly says, does not vitiate a blockade existing de facto) is accounted for by M. Bille's assertion that the Prussian authorities actually fired upon the ship sent with a flag of truce to announce to the blockaded ports the institution of the blockade.

Even if, in the first instance, there had been (as there not unfrequently is) some irregularity in the commencement of the blockade, it certainly appears to have been quite effectively constituted after the lapse of a very short interval; and it does not appear that any neutral vessels have been condemned for entering any belligerent port which was not duly blockaded.

Lastly, we would venture to suggest that it would be very desirable that a copy of the above-named despatch of M. Bille of the 17th May to your Lordship should be transmitted to the Prussian Government in any further communications which may take place between Her Majesty's Government and Prussia, and also that whenever an opportunity presents itself general publicity should be given to the document.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Consul Blackwell, April 14; Count Bernstorff, April 16; M. Bille, April 17 and 19; Consul Hertslet, April 20 and 23; M. Bille to Count Bernstorff, May 9 and 23, 1864.

No. 47.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying note from the Danish Minister at this Court, requesting to be informed whether Her Majesty's Government would place any obstacle in the way of the sale by him, under the circumstances detailed in his note, of the iron-clad frigate now nearly completed on account of the Danish Government, by Messrs. Thomson, of Glasgow; and to request that we would favour your Lordship, in the course of this day, with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Danish Minister.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to add, by way of postscript, that he had the honour, for our better information, to inclose some correspondence which passed in the early part of this year respecting the ram in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no objection to the proposed sale of the iron-clad frigate by the Danish Government; that Government undertaking to pledge itself that the vessel shall not pass into the possession of any other belligerent Government, and will, under no circumstances, revert into the possession of Denmark herself.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 48.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

Doctors' Commons, July 5, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen and Her Majesty's Consul at Stettin,* forwarding notifications of the blockade of the German ports in the Baltic, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and if I should consider the notice sufficient, that I would prepare a notification of the blockade in the usual form for insertion in to-day's "Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I consider the notices sufficient, and have prepared the notifications accordingly, which are annexed to this Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 48.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, July 5, 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at

---

* Sir A. Paget, No. 289; Consul Blackwell, No. 16.

1864

Copenhagen and Her Majesty's Consul at Stettin, inclosing the following official notification of the blockade of the German ports of the Baltic:—

"The Ministry of Marine notifies herewith that the blockade of the Prussian ports of Colberg, Cammin, Swinemünde, Wolgast, Greifswalde, Stralsund, and Barth, is effectuated the 27th instant, and that the blockade of the ports of Holstein and Schleswig, mentioned in the notification of the 25th instant, is likewise effectuated the 26th instant.

"Ministry of Marine, Copenhagen, June 28, 1864.

(Signed) "O. LUTKEN."

With respect to neutral vessels in the above-mentioned ports it is officially notified that they may complete the lading of their cargoes and leave these ports without being interrupted up to the 16th of July, but that on the 17th of July and afterwards all neutral vessels leaving these ports will be liable to seizure by the Danish blockading force.

With respect to the harbour of Pillau, Earl Russell has received a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Königsberg containing the following notification from the captain of His Danish Majesty's frigate "Jylland," certified by the Danish Consul at Pillau.

(Here insert, verbatim, the letter from the Danish Captain, Holm, and translation of the same.)

R. P.

No. 49.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 13.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 11, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence* which has taken place relative to the capture and condemnation by a Danish Prize Court of the British vessel "Estella" for breach of blockade; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether, pending the result of the appeal against the decision of the Prize Court, it will be advisable to enter into a discussion with Messrs. Stoess and Co. upon the merits of the case, and if so, as to what answer should be returned to the letter from those gentlemen of the 5th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I advise your Lordship not to enter into a discussion with Messrs. Stoess and Co. upon the merits of this case, pending the appeal to the Superior Court.

If the sentence of the Court below be confirmed by the Superior Court, it will be expedient that your Lordship should be furnished with an accurate Report of the Judgment itself, and also with any observations that Her Majesty's Consul may have to offer upon the case, and the proceedings of the Prize Tribunals.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 50.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 19, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at St. Croix (No. 11, June 9), regarding the succession to property left by Mr. Hugh Lang, a British subject deceased in that island.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to forward to us a letter, dated the 29th ultimo, from Messrs. Lawrence, Markby and Co. on the same subject; and also further to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions to be given to the Consul, and as to the answer to be returned to the attorneys.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think it expedient that Mr. Consul Rainals should be instructed to contest the interpretation put by the Governor of St. Croix upon the effect of taking out of a burgher licence by a British subject, especially in the present case, as it seems probable, from the facts stated, that Mr. Hugh Lang was domiciled in St. Croix at the time of his death. But we think that it would be expedient that some arrangement should be entered into with the Danish authorities, whereby the absent heirs and next of kin of a British subject, with a burgher licence, having died in Danish territory, should be apprized, by notice in the "London Gazette," of the intended distribution of such property by Danish Tribunals.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 51.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 20.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 19, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Moser and Son, asking to be furnished with documents to prove that some iron belonging to them, and which has been saved from a cargo wrecked on the north coast of Jutland, is British property; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer that should be returned to Messrs. Moser's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think the proper reply to the application of Messrs. Moser would be to the effect that your Lordship has no reason to doubt that the documents will be considered sufficient to prove the ownership of the iron in question; that the Foreign Office cannot add to the evidence which they furnish, but will receive any further communication which Messrs. Moser may find it necessary to make in the event of any difficulty arising from the Prussian occupation of Jutland. In the meantime Messrs. Moser's correspondent in Jutland would do well to address himself to the British Consul near the spot, if any difficulty should occur.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 52.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 21.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 20, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Flux and Argles relative to the detention under embargo at Elsinore of the Prussian vessel "Ernst Jacob," insured by the English and Scottish Marine Insurance Company, and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer that should be returned to it. The accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Representatives at Berlin, Hanover, and Copenhagen, on the subject of the embargo, were inclosed for my information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from a despatch of Sir A. Paget (No. 96, February 20, 1864) that the "Ernst Jacob" was one of three Prussian ships detained at Elsinore as to which his Excellency addressed a letter to the Secretary at Lloyds, which I understand was forwarded through the Foreign Office to its destination. It will be proper, therefore, to send an answer to Messrs. Flux and Argles to the following effect: that it would not be according to the practice of the Foreign Office to furnish them with information for the

---

* Messrs. Stoess and Co., June 29 and July 5; to Messrs. Stoess and Co., May 27 and July 1, 1864.

1864

purpose required. But that on making proper application to Lloyds they will probably learn that the information which they desire can be obtained.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 53.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 21.)

Doctors' Commons, July 20, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a copy of a telegram from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, stating that the blockades of ports in the Baltic are to be raised during the suspension of arms which has been concluded between Denmark and the German Powers; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and if I should consider that notice of the suspension of the blockades should be published, that I would prepare a notification to that effect in the usual form for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered the paper referred to me, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion the suspension of the blockades should be notified in the "London Gazette." I have therefore prepared a notification (which I herewith transmit) proper for the purpose.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 54.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 23.)

Doctors' Commons, July 22, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a Memorandum which has been communicated to your Lordship by Mr. Grant Duff, M.P., relative to the seizure by a Danish cruizer of the British vessel "Glen Grant" for an alleged attempt to break the blockade of Colberg; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I am of opinion that this is a case in which Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere on behalf of the owners of the vessel.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That at present there is no ground laid for the interference of Her Majesty's Government. The guilt or innocence of the "Glen Grant" with respect to the violation of the blockade is, as I understand, actually undergoing judicial inquiry before the Danish Prize Court, which is the proper Tribunal, and which it must be presumed will do justice in the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 55.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 29.)

Doctors' Commons, July 28, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, inclosing the official notification which has been published by the Danish Ministry of Marine of the raising of the blockade in the Baltic during the existing suspension of hostilities, and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether it will be advisable to insert in the "London Gazette" a further notification on the subject, or whether the notice already inserted in the form suggested in my letter of the 20th instant will be sufficient.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the whole I think it would be expedient to insert the further notification in the "London Gazette," and I have therefore prepared it, and have the honour to append it to this Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 55.

Notification of the Raising of the Danish Blockade of the Prussian Ports in the Baltic, and of all Ports and Harbours on the Coasts of Schleswig and Holstein.

Foreign Office, July 29, 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen an official notification (published by the Danish Ministry of Marine) of the raising of the blockade of the Prussian ports in the Baltic, and also of all ports on the coast of Schleswig and Holstein, from the 20th July instant.

The following is a copy of the said official notification above referred to:—

(Here insert a copy of the said notification, including signature.)

No. 56.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 25, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that with reference to our previous Reports respecting the iron-clad steamer purchased at Glasgow for the use of the Danish Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a recent correspondence with the Danish Minister,* from which it results: 1st, that your Lordship has released the Danish Minister from the engagements which he took in February last respecting this vessel; and 2ndly, that the Danish Minister will have made an engagement with Messrs. J. and G. Thomson, of Glasgow, for taking this vessel off their hands. Mr. Hammond also inclosed a copy of a letter which, by your Lordship's directions, he addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting that the vessel may be watched, and to state to us that your Lordship would be glad to receive our opinion—1st, as to whether it would be proper at once to warn Messrs. Thomson and Co. against selling the vessel to the Confederates; and 2ndly, as to whether any other steps can legally be taken by Her Majesty's Government to prevent the vessel passing into the possession of the Confederate States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we cannot advise your Lordship to warn Messrs. Thomson and Co. against selling this vessel to the Confederates, because we are of opinion that as the law now stands (and the law of the United States is the same) such a sale would not be illegal, unless some addition were made or attempted in this country to the present equipment, fittings, furniture, or armament of the vessel, with a view to her employment in the war-service of the Confederate States; and (unless such additional equipment, &c., were made or attempted) we are not aware of any other step which can legally be taken by Her Majesty's Government to prevent this vessel from passing into the possession of the Confederate States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* M. Bille, August 12; to M. Bille, August 15; M. Bille, August 16, 1864.

1864

No. 57.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 5.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 4, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two letters from Mr. Marwood of Sunderland relative to the capture of the English brig "Sarah," for alleged breach of blockade, by a Danish cruizer; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government could properly interfere to obtain from the Danish Government compensation for the loss sustained by the owner of the vessel in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government may properly interfere in this case.

It was the right of the neutral owner to be dismissed with costs and damages if she was improperly seized. The belligerent cannot escape from this obligation by releasing the vessel seized, without taking her into the Prize Court.

Upon the present statement of facts it would seem that the wrongful seizure of the "Sarah" is tacitly admitted by the Danish Government. I think that an application should be made to the Danish Government for reasonable costs and damages to the owner of the "Sarah."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 57A.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 5.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 4, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note which has been addressed by the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Danish Minister at this Court, instructing him to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the demands made by the German Powers on Denmark for compensation for losses sustained by the German shipping during the late war; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the claims put forward by the German Powers are in accordance with precedents and usage.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it has been usual, or at least not uncommon, at the end of a war that the belligerents should agree to a Mixed Commission, armed with authority to inquire into alleged cases of violations of maritime international law, committed during the pendency of the war, e. g., ships unlawfully seized, or improperly condemned by the Prize Court, which is an international tribunal, and ought to be governed by well-known principles and generally recognized laws. But the demands contained in the instrument intituled "specification of claims, &c.," and which are now pressed by the German Powers upon Denmark, in my opinion far exceed, both in principle and in detail, the limits of such international adjustments of differences as those to which I have adverted. There is one observation which has an obvious and important bearing upon the whole scheme, so to speak, of the compensation demanded. It was the undoubted right of the Danish Government to declare and maintain a lawful blockade of the coasts and harbours of the belligerents, and also to seize all vessels, private and public, belonging to those States. But the demand now put forward by the German Powers appears to proceed, both generally and in every specific instance, upon the hypothesis that the conduct of Denmark in this exercise of her unquestionable belligerent rights was at variance with the principles of international law; and though this result is more directly apparent from the claims which are included in Articles 3, 5, and 7, it does in truth lie at the root of the whole demand, the manifest effect of which is to throw upon Denmark the larger portion of the expenses of the whole war, because she exercised the belligerent rights of a maritime State.

I am not aware of any recognized usage or accredited precedent among civilized States which can be referred to as a warrant for this proceeding on the part of the German Powers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 57B.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 22.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 20, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, for my information, and for any observations which may suggest themselves to me, a copy of a report which has been communicated to your Lordship by the French Chargé d'Affaires at this Court, with regard to the demands of the German Powers on Denmark.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That looking at the subject from the same point of view in which it is considered by the French Memorial, I have the honour to express, with one reservation, my entire concurrence, both with the premises and the conclusions of the writer of that clear and able paper.

The reservation to which I have adverted relates to the position in the fourth paragraph or division, to the effect that the judgment of a Prize Court is not required to pass the property of an enemy after it has been once captured. That position must be limited to the title which the captor and his countrymen may acquire, for the sentence of the Prize Court is certainly necessary to convey to a neutral purchaser the property of a belligerent.

With all the main principles, however, contained in this document I entirely concur, namely—

1. That the distinction between just and unjust wars is wholly inadmissible to affect the question of the construction of the Treaty, which, as to this subject, must be interpreted as considering all parties upon equal footing.

2. That in the absence of any express stipulation to the contrary, all moveable, if not all, property de facto acquired by a belligerent during the war whatsoever must be treated as appertaining to the acquirer.

3. That the preliminaries of peace are of the nature of a contract, and subject to the same rules and principles of interpretation as the definitive Treaty itself.

4. That these preliminaries, inasmuch as they contain express provisions as to defraying the expenses of the war, must be taken to have excluded what they have not so specifically provided for; that inasmuch as the Preliminaries specify the restitution of goods seized on land before a certain period, they, by necessary implication, exempt goods seized on the high seas from the operation of their provisions. In other words, that the well-known doctrine "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" is applicable to this as to other contracts. All these appear to me incontrovertible propositions of equity, of good faith, and of the usage and practice of civilized States which are the foundations upon which all international law is built.

To these considerations may be added the legitimate consequences which flow from some of the preposterous demands of the German allies, for what are sometimes called by jurists "consequential damages."

For instance, the demand that the increased expenses, incident to all wars of every description, which press upon the merchant, native or commorant, in the belligerent State, whether from the necessity of heavier assurance, or from the dissolution of contracts made before the breaking out of the war, should be added to the "expenses of the war," which the vanquished belligerent is to pay, is about as reasonable and as usual as if he were called upon to pay the private consumer for the rise in the price of the provisions, or the holder of public stock for the fall in the value of the public funds or securities which are the usual effects of war.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 58.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 13, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th instant, inclosing to me (with reference to my letter of the 4th of October) the correspondence which has passed with Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen,* respecting the claim which has been made on the Danish Government for compensation for the detention of the British vessel "Sarah," for alleged breach of blockade, and stating that the Danish Government have refused, on the grounds stated in the note inclosed in Sir Augustus Paget's despatch No. 419 of the 30th ultimo, to indemnify the owner of the vessel in question; and Mr. Layard was directed by your Lordship to state that your Lordship, before bringing the matter again before the Danish Government, would be glad to be furnished with my opinion as to what sum would represent the "reasonable costs and damages" for which, in my former Report, I suggested that application should be made.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose to me my former Report, the previous papers bearing on the subject, and a further despatch which had been just received from Mr. Marwood.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the reasonable costs and damages would be such as would be estimated by the Consul, probably assisted by the merchants, on the usual scale of demurrage for unlawful detention of the vessel and the interruption of her voyage. The sum claimed is absolutely small, and would seem to be fair, but it may be relatively large; the Consul at Copenhagen would, I should think, be able to form an opinion on this point.

It is to be remembered that the vessel, which it would appear from the circumstances ought never to have been seized, was detained fourteen days; that the master and crew were subjected to frequent official examinations, but not to the judicial investigation to which the neutral owner of the neutral vessel was entitled. It is no answer on the part of the Danish Government to say that now the neutral owner may bring his action before the ordinary tribunal against the Danish Crown; he had a right to justice in the Prize Court at the time, and it must be presumed that the release of the vessel after several official examinations was equivalent to the admission that the captor had no case which he could sustain before the Prize Court.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Equator.

No. 59.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 21, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence noted in the margin,† respecting the circumstances under which the Equatorian Government have thought fit to revoke the exequatur of Mr. Mocatta, the British Vice-Consul at Guayaquil, but lately acting as the Acting British Consul-General in the Equator during Mr. Fagan's absence; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship such observations as we may have to make thereupon.

---

* Sir A. Paget, Nos. 385 and 409; to Sir A. Paget, No. 199; Mr. Marwood, September 17, 27, and October 25; Queen's Advocate, October 4, 1864.

† Señor Herrera, April 23; Mr. Mocatta, Nos. 18, 19, and 22.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th ultimo, transmitting to us another despatch (No. 17, May 4) and its inclosures relative to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as the papers before us enable us to form any judgment, the revocation of the exequatur of Mr. Mocatta appears to us unjustifiable.

The charges against him seem to rest upon the ex parte statements of persons of questionable character, none of whom (except the German, Augustin Haensek) profess to have been at any time in personal communication with him, or to speak otherwise than from hearsay; and no credit appears to have been given to their evidence, as against the persons directly inculpated by it, by the Judge who tried the cases in which it was given.

It is not very easy, however, to extract from Mr. Mocatta's own letters (the style of which is not perspicuous) whether he means to deny altogether any interference with political matters in Equator, or only to deny the specific charges made by the particular witnesses, as to his having given an order for the making of certain bombs; and, with respect even to these bombs, the admission of M. Méjer, who was employed by him in the British Consulate and enjoyed his confidence, that he (Méjer) accepted a commission from a M. Schmidt, resident in San Salvador, to procure firearms for that person, seems to us to require some further explanation than has yet been given.

We think that Her Majesty's Government should require specific reasons to be alleged by the Equatorian Government for the very strong and unusual step which they have taken. Previously, however, to so doing, it would be desirable to ascertain from Mr. Fagan, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Equator (if he be now in this country), what his opinion may be upon all the circumstances of this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

France.

No. 60.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 3.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 2, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the inclosed correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and the Colonial Department, with reference to the case of the French vessel "Persévérant," which in the course of her passage from Macao to Havana, with a cargo of coolies, was wrecked off Barbuda, and to a claim which the captain of the French ship of war "Marcian" had subsequently made on the Governor of Antigua on account of the passage money of a portion of the coolies who had gone over to that island and had taken service with the planters there; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the conduct of the Governor of Antigua in resisting the French claim should be approved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the conduct of the Governor of Antigua in resisting the French claim should be approved.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 61.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 6.)

Doctors' Commons, February 4, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform me that in the course of negotiations which have lately taken place between the Post Office and an Agent of the Austrian Post Office, with a view to the conclusion of a Postal Convention, the Austrian Agent has declined to admit into the proposed Convention, as applicable to the port of Trieste, Articles similar to Articles V, VI, VII, and VIII of the Postal Convention between Great Britain and France of the 24th of September, 1856.* Those Articles relate, on the one hand, to the privileges to be enjoyed by national vessels the property of the respective Governments, or by vessels chartered or subsidized by either Government for the conveyance of mails, as stipulated in Article I and II of the Convention, and, on the other hand, define the course to be pursued by the respective Post Offices with regard to the forwarding of the mails when the packets conveying them shall be compelled to put into a port other than that of their regular destination.

That the Austrian Agent alleges the provisions of the four Articles V to VIII do not apply to British mail packets entering or leaving the port of Marseilles, but are confined to packets conveying mails between the ports of the two countries in the Channel, and he states that such is the opinion of the French Post Office. That the British mail packets entering or leaving the port of Marseilles do not in point of fact enjoy the privileges in question, and the company which owns them have never claimed the same;† because besides conveying passengers, bullion, and coin, they engage largely in the general carrying trade, so that the question has not arisen between the British and French Governments. But your Lordship would be glad if I would state to your Lordship my opinion whether the Articles in question do, or do not, apply to all packets subsidized by the British Government for the conveyance of correspondence, to whatever port in France they may proceed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That the general scheme of this Treaty appears to me to provide for two objects, namely, postal communications specially between England and France on the Channel line by way of Dover and Calais, and postal communications generally between the ports of England and France. The former object is provided by the first, the latter object is introduced by the Second Article of the Treaty.

The four Articles from V to VIII appear to me to relate to both these objects, because they are (Article V) expressly said to be applicable to "packets employed by the British Post Office or by the French Post Office, in execution of Articles I and II of the present Convention," when those packets possess a particular character, i.e., are either Government vessels or vessels chartered and subsidized by Government.

In aid of this construction, I should observe that the provisions contained in these four Articles can scarcely be supposed to have contemplated the service between Calais and Dover alone; they are too large, so to speak, to be confined to such postal communications.

I am of opinion that the four Articles (V to VIII) do apply to all packets subsidized by the British Government for the conveyance of postal correspondence to any port in France.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 62.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd February instant, stating that, with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 8th of October last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence, as marked in the margin,* respecting the seizure of the British vessel "Caroline Goodyear," at Matamoros, on the 4th of July last, by a French ship of war, on the ground that the arms which it appeared she had on board were intended for the Mexicans, and that the vessel was therefore lawful prize.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive from the latter part of this correspondence that the vessel, which was taken to Vera Cruz for adjudication, was subsequently released, and that Mr. Goodyear, the owner, now claims from the French Government the sum of 1,810*l.* for alleged losses consequent upon the transaction in question; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, and to what extent, Mr. Goodyear's claim can properly be urged upon the French Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we find some difficulty in advising your Lordship upon the scanty information conveyed to us in the present papers; that we do not understand whether the vessel was formally brought into a Prize Court at Vera Cruz or not. That we are clearly of opinion that the character of her cargo, and the place where she was seized, would have fully justified her being so brought in for adjudication, and would not found any claim for compensation or damages upon that ground. The delay of six months appears unreasonable; but this was probably not the fault of the captor, and, according to the practice of our Prize Courts in such a case, the captor would probably have been allowed his costs, and certainly would not have been condemned in costs or damages.

We cannot, upon our present information, advise Her Majesty's Government to make any demand upon the French Government for compensation in this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 63.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform us, that subsequently to the receipt of our Report of the 22nd of December last, respecting Messrs. Kerford's claim against the French Government in consequence of the British schooner "Blue Jacket" having been prohibited by the French authorities from discharging her entire cargo at Campeachy, your Lordship considered it advisable to obtain, through the Admiralty, some further information as to the validity of the French blockade of the Coast of Mexico, as bearing upon this question: and to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty dated the 13th ultimo, together with a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Mexico on this subject (No. 3), and to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and that we would inform your Lordship whether they modify or alter the opinion we have already given on this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these further papers do not modify or alter the opinion which we have already given on this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Hertslet, vol. x, p. 108.

† See Article VI.

* Mr. Goodyear, September 1; to Earl Cowley, No. 1,088, September 11; Mr. Grey, No. 40, September 15; Admiralty, September 28; to Queen's Advocate, October 3; Queen's Advocate, October 8; Mr. Grey, No. 123, October 8; Messrs. Sinclair and Hamilton, October 12; to Messrs. Sinclair and Hamilton, October 14 and 15; to Mr. Goodyear, October 15; Admiralty, October 27; to Admiralty, October 30; to Messrs. Sinclair, Hamilton and Co., December 31, 1863; Mr. Goodyear, January 29, 1864.

1864

No. 64.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 22, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 2nd ultimo, respecting a claim made by the captain of the French ship of war "Marcian" on the Governor of Antigua, on account of the passage money of certain coolies shipwrecked in the French vessel "Persévérant," on their passage from Macao to Havana, and who had taken service in Antigua, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated the 12th instant, and its inclosures, from the French Ambassador at this Court, in support of the claim of the captain of the "Persévérant" to an indemnity of 48,496 francs 87 centimes, on the grounds already stated: and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these further papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether they in any way alter the merits of the case as reported in the Colonial Office letter of the 27th ultimo; and whether Her Majesty's Government can be considered justly liable for the amount claimed. The previous papers in the case were likewise inclosed to me.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further papers do not affect or alter the opinion which I expressed in my former Report. I see no ground whatever for considering Her Majesty's Government liable for the amount claimed, or liable for any amount whatever in this case. The coolies appear to have remained at Antigua of their own free will; and if so, nobody had any power or authority to compel them to return to the captain of the "Persévérant."

The letter of Governor Hill to Captain Vavin contains a very just and sound exposition of the law applicable to the facts of this case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 65.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 21.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April , 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing a copy of a letter from the Rear-Admiral commanding the French squadron in the Pacific, to Commander Pike, of Her Majesty's ship "Devastation," notifying the blockade of the ports of Acapulco and Manzanilla; and to request that I would prepare and forward to your Lordship the necessary notification upon this subject to be inserted in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have perused the notification referred to me, and considering the same sufficient, have prepared and herewith transmit a notification paper for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 65.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, April , 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from one of Her Majesty's Secretaries of the Admiralty a copy of a letter (dated the 29th of February, 1864) addressed by the Rear-Admiral commanding the French squadron in the Pacific to Commander Pike, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Devastation," notifying the effective blockade by the French naval forces of the ports of Acapulco and Manzanilla, on the West Coast of Mexico.

The following is a copy of the letter from the French Admiral above referred to, and translation:—

(Here print a copy of the French Admiral's communication, and then a translation thereof.)

R. P.

No. 66.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 26, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a draft of despatch founded upon our Reports of the 22nd December last, and the 14th ultimo, which your Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris in regard to the case of the "Blue Jacket," which vessel, it is stated, had been compelled by a French steamer to desist from discharging her entire cargo at Campeachy, and to repair in some other port.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter from Messrs. Morlet and Co., the charterers of the "Blue Jacket," which has been received since the instruction to Earl Cowley was prepared; in which, after stating the circumstances of the case, they calculate approximately the loss which they have sustained by the interference of the French ship of war at 10,000*l.*, and inclose various documents in support of their case; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether we have any alteration or addition to suggest in the draft instructions to Earl Cowley, in consequence of Messrs. Morlet and Co's. claim; and whether, in our opinion, the claim can in its present form be urged upon the French Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered these papers, and finding in them evidence (which we had not before seen) of special damage to a serious amount having been suffered by Messrs. Morlet, beyond the mere double duties exacted from them, and also finding that the "Milan" did not maintain an effective blockade of Campeachy, even after the "Blue Jacket" had been prevented from completing the discharge of her cargo there; we have come to the conclusion that the representation to the French Government may properly be extended, so as to cover a claim of reasonable compensation for the loss which Messrs. Morlet have sustained; and we have taken the liberty of altering your Lordship's draft despatch, both by making (with this view) certain additions thereto, and by omitting some passages which it seemed to us better to omit.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 67.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 29, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 28th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from the Acting British Consul at Vera Cruz, inclosing a copy of a Decree issued by the French Admiral on the Mexican station, notifying the blockade of the Rivers Goatzacoalcos and Tabasco; and Mr. Murray was to request that I would prepare and forward to your Lordship the necessary notification upon this subject for insertion in the "London Gazette," if I should be of opinion that the blockade is a valid one.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have perused and considered the notification of blockade referred to me, and deem the same sufficient.

---

* Colonial Office, January 13; Queen's Advocate, March 2, 1864.

1864

I have, therefore, prepared a form of notification (and herewith transmit the same) proper for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 67.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, April , 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Vera Cruz a copy of a Decree, dated the 17th March, 1864, issued by the French Admiral commanding the French naval forces in the Gulf of Mexico, notifying the effective blockade of the Rivers Goatzacoalcos and Tabasco (together with their "affluents") by the French naval forces.

The following is a copy of the notification of the blockade referred to:—

(Here insert the notice in French and Spanish, and then a translation thereof.)

R. P.

No. 68.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, June 17, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers bearing on the question, the accompanying summons which your Lordship has received to appear in Court before the Lord Chief Justice on the 22nd instant, in order to give evidence and produce documents relating to the case of "Glover v. Persigny and another;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, what suggestions we have to offer as to the steps to be taken by your Lordship in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that your Lordship should attend the Court in pursuance of the subpœna, and take with your Lordship such of the documents referred to in it as are in the Foreign Office. Should your Lordship be of opinion that the production of all or any of these documents would be injurious to the public service, it would be proper for your Lordship to state that your Lordship objects to produce them on this ground, and to submit to the Chief Justice that your Lordship is not compellable to produce them. Upon such objection being taken, we think it probable that the Chief Justice will rule in favour of it, in conformity with the view of the Court of Exchequer in the case of "Beatson v. Skene," 29 Law Journal (Exch.), 430.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 69.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, June 18, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith a correspondence with reference to two cases which have formed the subject, up to a certain point, of distinct representations to the French Government, but which involve a question of principle common to both. That the first of these cases refers to a complaint made by Messrs. Rossel, Fehr, and Co., in regard to the amount of duty charged by the French Custom-house on an importation of British refined petroleum, a fine having also been imposed on Messrs. Rossel and Co. for alleged false declaration of origin. That the second case is that of the detention by the French Custom-house authorities at Boulogne, and their subsequent reference to French experts, of certain sewing-machines consigned by Messrs. Pitt Brothers to a house in Paris, on the ground that they were not, as declared, of British manufacture; in consequence of which detention, and of losses alleged to have been thereby sustained, Messrs. Pitt claim the sum of 1,152*l.* 5*s.* from the French Government. That we should perceive that, independently of the minor questions involved in these two claims, the principle is raised in both of whether, as the Board of Trade affirm, certificates of origin, duly attested as required by the IInd Article of the first Supplemental Convention between this country and France of 1861, shall be deemed to establish the origin of British manufactures, so as to entitle them to the advantages conferred by Treaty; or whether, as the French Government maintain, the right of reference to experts, where the authenticity of the above certificates is doubted, exists under the existing commercial stipulations with France; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that we would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the merits of each case separately, upon the question of the Treaty right to which Mr. Murray referred, and also as to the communication or communications which it may appear desirable to make to the French Government with reference to these matters.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, transmitting a letter and its inclosures from Messrs. Pitt Brothers, with reference to the detention of their sewing-machines above referred to.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the principle which affects both these cases, namely, what is the true construction of the IInd Article of the first Supplemental Convention between this country and France (12th October, 1861), we agree in the opinion expressed by the Board of Trade (December 16, 1863, and May 16, 1864), that, according to the plain words of that Article, the British origin or manufacture of goods imported into France is to be established (1), either by an official declaration made before a British magistrate at the place of despatch; (2), or by a certificate from the chief officer of Customs at the port of embarkation; (3), or by a certificate granted by the Consul or Consular Agents of France at the places of despatch or the ports of embarkation. It is not, indeed, stipulated that such declarations or certificates are to be in all cases accepted as conclusive, so as to exclude any other evidence to the contrary in cases of fraud. But it is, in our opinion, stipulated that they shall be accepted as primâ facie sufficient, and to contend that they are liable to be arbitrarily set aside without any evidence to show that they are false or fraudulent, by the mere opinion and judgment of French experts, is to introduce an element of insecurity, which would deprive them of all practical value, and would rob the Treaty of some of the principal advantages which were proposed from its negotiation.

We also agree that the language of the IVth, VIth, VIIth, and VIIIth Articles throws some further light upon the question, by providing an arbitration, in the case of a difference as to the value of goods between the importer and the French Custom-house, that value being declared in the invoice attached to the certificate of origin. The absence of any stipulation for what is called "expertise" as to the place of origin or manufacture, coupled with the presence of these express provisions on the subject of value, seems to us to exclude, by almost necessary implication, the test of "expertise" upon the former subject, which, indeed, is in its nature one demanding a different kind of proof, inasmuch as it depends, not upon any scientific judgment, but upon a mere matter of fact. The answer of M. Drouyn de Lhuys seems to us, as it seemed to the Board of Trade, altogether unsatisfactory.

The position that a provision of municipal law cannot be abrogated except by positive words in a Treaty, is really one of municipal, and not of international, law. It is a position which cannot fairly be imported into a contract between two nations, in order to destroy the natural meaning of a particular Article, and the general scope of the Treaty. The argument of M. Drouyn de Lhuys does, in effect, place it in the power of the officers of the French Custom-house, or the experts whom they consult, to render nugatory all the provisions of the Treaty in respect of British goods which are really such, and which are imported with all those proofs of their being such which are required by the terms of the Treaty. Having said this much upon the general question, it remains for us to express our opinion as to the two particular cases of injury alleged to have been inflicted upon British merchants.

1864

With respect to the petroleum oil, a careful perusal of the papers leads us to adopt the conclusions expressed in the above-mentioned letters from the Board of Trade, as to the injustice done to Rossel, Fehr, and Co., by the French Custom-house authorities in this matter. It does appear to us that these merchants have been required to pay duty on goods boná fide manufactured in Great Britain, as if they had been manufactured in America, although their British origin was duly proved, not only by the certificate of the French Consul (which alone ought to have been sufficient), but also by the affidavits made before the Lord Mayor at the request of the French authorities, although subsequently disregarded by them. With respect, however, to these goods, as the article of petroleum oil does not appear to be one of those mentioned in the Treaty, we are not able to say (even with reference to the XIXth Article of the Treaty, and the French Convention with Belgium) that the case of Messrs. Rossel and Co. is within the scope of the IInd Article of the first Supplemental Convention between France and this country. With regard to the sewing-machines of Messrs. Pitt, we think the case of injustice on the part of the French authorities is still stronger. It is not denied that the French Custom-house fell into a great error with respect to all but one of these machines; and it seems plain that there is no more foundation in fact for the arbitrary decision of the experts, that one out of the number was of American manufacture, than there was for the original detention of the whole consignment, upon a suspicion of the same kind now admitted to be groundless. That some indemnity is due to Messrs. Pitt, is admitted; the question is as to the amount. The claim is now confined (Pitt Brothers, February 19, 1864) to the eight machines; and the amount of indemnity ought in great measure to be regulated by the date of the return of the machines to Boulogne to be delivered to Messrs. de Meyer and Buchard, and by the condition in which they actually were when returned. The position of Messrs. Pitt is, that they were not returned to Boulogne till the middle of December, after the intervention of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, and then in a disjointed and injured condition. But these are questions of fact, as to which it unhappily appears but too probable that much controversy may arise.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 70.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 4.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 3, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence* on the subject of an application from the French Ambassador at this Court, for the extradition to the French authorities at Réunion, of Edouard Dulac, a fraudulent bankrupt, who has taken refuge in the Mauritius; that the Colonial letter of the 21st instant, and its inclosures, show the difficulty which has prevented the Governor of the Mauritius from complying with the request of the French Ambassador in this matter, and the course which the Secretary of State purposes to pursue in order to meet the present, and any similar cases which may arise; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the propriety of concurring in the measures proposed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion, that the more expedient course would be that suggested by the Procureur-Général, namely, a mutual extension of the Extradition Treaty between France and England, so as to authorize such extradition to be made upon warrants properly issued by competent courts or magistrates in the Colonies and foreign possessions of both countries.

It would not, in our opinion, be expedient to attempt to cure the defects of the General Treaty by local legislation, in any particular British Colonies or Colony. For it is to be observed, that while, by the Treaty and Act of Parliament, it is necessary that there should be a warrant, &c., "issued by a Judge or competent Magistrate in France," to enable any British authority to deliver up any offender amenable to French jurisdiction, on the other hand, an offender amenable to British jurisdiction can only be demanded from French authorities, "after the production of a warrant of arrest, &c., issued by a Judge, or other competent authority in Great Britain."

There is, therefore, under the Treaty as it stands, complete reciprocity, and we do not think it can be amended by any merely Colonial legislation (see 6 Hertslet, p. 345).

With respect to the particular offence of "fraudulent bankruptcy," the Law Officers have before had occasion to point out that, in order to make the Treaty or the Statute operative in this respect, there must be, in the British territory where it may be sought to be put in force, some law in force, under which the facts alleged, as constituting such fraudulent bankruptcy, would amount to a crime or misdemeanour punishable by that law, if the same acts had been there done.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 71.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 6, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 872), with reference to the arrest in that city, at the instance of the Russian Embassy, of a British subject named James Thornley, who is accused of having left St. Petersburgh under a charge of forgery or fraudulent bankruptcy; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the legality of the proceedings taken against Mr. Thornley, and as to the instructions which should be addressed to Earl Cowley in this matter; and further, that we would enable your Lordship to return an answer to the general question which Lord Cowley has put as bearing upon cases like the present.

We are also honoured with Mr. Murray's letter of the 4th instant, transmitting a further despatch from Earl Cowley (No. 597), inclosing a copy of a letter from M. Drouyn de Lhuys in explanation of the prolonged detention of Thornley pending an inquiry into the charge against him, and from which it appears that the accused is stated to be a Russian subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are opinion that if Russia has no Treaty of Extradition with France, and if James Thornley be a British subject, his arrest in France by French authorities at the demand of Russia is not warranted by international law. If his statement be true, he is clearly a British subject by birth; it is possible that he may have been naturalized in Russia, and taken an oath of allegiance to the Government of that country. Such a state of facts might require a modification of our opinion. It would seem to us proper that Earl Cowley should draw M. Drouyn de Lhuys' attention to the fact, that Mr. Thornley states that he was born in the parish of St. James', Westminster, and is an English subject; and should state that Her Majesty's Government are not aware of any principle of international law which can warrant his imprisonment in France at the request of a third Power between whom and France their exists no Treaty of Extradition.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, January 19; to Colonial Office, January 20; Colonial Office, January 25; to Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, January 29; Colonial Office, July 21, 1864.

1864

No. 72.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of correspondence received from the Governor of Mauritius, with reference to the course pursued by the Curator of Vacant Estates in that island, in taking possession of the French ship "Jules," whilst lying in the harbour of Port Louis, on the ground that the "Jules" formed part of the property of a M. Reynaud, the owner and master of the ship, who died at that port in December last. That we should observe that the Secretary of State for the Colonies is desirable that the Procureur-Général should have a legal opinion with regard to the question adverted to in the 14th paragraph of his letter; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with a Report on this subject, for communication to the Procureur-Général, through the Colonial Department.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, according to the general practice of all civilized States, the Representatives constituted by the State of the domicil of a deceased person are allowed to distribute the personal or moveable effects of such person wherever he may happen to die; subject to such exceptions only as may arise out of litigation on the part of any of the parties claiming to be beneficially interested in the succession, in any country where part of such moveable effects may happen to be.

That we think the Curator of Vacant Estates at the Mauritius should endeavour to exercise his office so as to be ancillary, as far as possible, to this rule of international comity. That, though it may be the duty of his office to collect the goods and to pay local debts and funeral expenses of a deceased person who dies unexpectedly, and without having made provision for the care of his effects in the island, we are clearly of opinion that this duty ought not to be extended, except, perhaps, in some very special case in which interference may be necessary to prevent the loss or deterioration of the property, to the arrest of a foreign merchant-vessel belonging wholly or in part to the deceased person, which did not constitute part of his moveable effects in the island at the time of his decease, but which happens (as in the case of the "Jules,") to touch at the Mauritius after his decease, in the prosecution of a voyage to or from the country of his domicil.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 73.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th ultimo, respecting the arrest of James Thornley at Paris, by order of the French Government, on the application of the Russian Embassy, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two further despatches from Earl Cowley on this subject (No. 914, August 15, and No. 918, August 17), from the latter of which we should perceive that the Imperial Government contend that the right to surrender criminals exists in every State independently of any Treaty of Extradition, and that such a Treaty, in fact, only makes obligatory the act of extradition, which is in the competence of every State; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the principle laid down by the French Minister.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in our former Report we were careful to state that our opinion would be subject to modification in the event of its turning out to be the case, as we rather anticipated that it might, that James Thornley had taken the oath of allegiance to the Emperor of all the Russias; and if this person had not been set free, we should not, with our present information, have advised your Lordship to make any further application on his behalf. The Government of the country in which a foreigner is found residing cannot (we think) be called upon by either of two foreign nations, having conflicting claims on his allegiance (the one founded on birth, the other on naturalization), to give the preference to the one of those claims over the other.

With respect to the general question, as to the power of a State, in the absence of any Treaty of Extradition, to deliver up to another State with which it is in amity a criminal escaped from that State, we agree with M. Drouyn de Lhuys that, in the case of the criminal demanded, being a subject either by birth or allegiance, of the demanding State, it is a question of constitutional law, to be determined by each country for itself, whether it will or will not, without a specific Treaty, grant such extradition. Even with respect to a foreigner, not a subject of the State from which the demand proceeds, it would also be competent to the Government under which he is actually residing, to comply with such a demand, if there were a general law known to be in force in the country of such actual residence authorizing his extradition upon the request of any foreign Power under such circumstances. By coming to reside in that country he would have become subject to this, as to all other provisions of the local law. We do not, however, understand that any such general law is in force in France. If not, then (with great respect for M. Drouyn de Lhuys) we conceive that, by the comity of nations, an Englishman lawfully resident or sojourning in France must be entitled to the benefit of the same protection which the law of that country affords to its own subjects, so long as he commits no offence against that law.

We presume (indeed, it is involved in the assumption already made) that a natural-born Frenchman would not be liable, by the law of France, to be delivered up to the Russian Government, upon any representation which might be made by that Government to the Executive Government of France, imputing to such Frenchman the commission of a crime against the laws of Russia, at some period when he was resident in that country. We conceive it to be clear that there is not so much even as an imperfect obligation, by international law, for one nation to execute (or assist in executing) any part of the criminal law of another nation, in the absence of any Treaty to that effect; and, on the other hand, there is (as we conceive) a clear obligation upon every nation to protect, within the limits and according to the rule of its own laws, foreigners who are permitted to reside within its territory, in the same way that natural-born subjects are protected.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 74.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 17.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 18th of June last on the subject of the claim of Messrs. Pitt Brothers, upon the French Government, on account of losses sustained by them in consequence of the detention by the Custom-house authorities at Boulogne of certain sewing-machines consigned by Messrs. Pitt to a house in Paris, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Paris (No. 130, October 3), containing the reply of the French Government to the representations which had been made to it by Her Majesty's Ambassador in Paris on behalf of Messrs. Pitt, together with the subsequent correspondence which has taken place with those gentlemen and with the Board of Trade with reference to it.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that the former papers relating to this matter were also sent therewith, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which, under the circumstances, should now be pursued by Her Majesty's Government.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter dated the 7th instant from Messrs. Pitt Brothers, inclosing one from their agents at Boulogne, from which Messrs. Pitt appear apprehensive that the French authorities are endeavouring to force a settlement of their claim with reference to the detention of their sewing-machines; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those which were submitted to us in his letter of the 1st instant.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the claim of Messrs. Pitt, we think it is impossible for Her Majesty's Government to approve of or adopt the tone assumed by those gentlemen, or to insist upon the precise measure or amount of compensation claimed by them. The French Government have consented to grant them what may appear to be reasonable compensation, after proper inquiry, and Her Majesty's Government cannot, in our opinion, require anything more. Since, however, Messrs. Pitt desire that the particulars of their claim, as stated by themselves, should be communicated by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of France, we think it may not be improper for Her Majesty's Government to forward these particulars through the British Embassy at Paris, recommending them to the fair consideration of the French Government. It appears from Messrs. Pitt's letters that these gentlemen, or their agents, have already had notice of, and are invited to attend, the inquiry which the French Government propose to make, and it is for them to offer such evidence as they are able in support of their claim.

Upon the general question it is sufficient to say that we retain the views expressed in our former Report. We cannot doubt, after the explanations given by M. Drouyn de Lhuys, that the recourse to "expertise," in cases of this kind, is authorized by the municipal law of France. We think it, however, important to repeat that the decisions of the municipal tribunals of France upon the municipal law of France cannot properly affect the question of the true construction of the terms employed in the Treaty to express the mutual international engagements of France and England in this matter; and we certainly think it is against the good faith of the Treaty to refuse to act upon regular certificates of origin, such as the Treaty provides for, without any other evidence of the falsehood of these certificates than the mere opinion of experts. Upon a question not of science, but of fact, no "expertise" can really supply the place of evidence, and it would be much more consistent with the spirit and intention of the Treaty to hold the certificates of origin conclusive against the French Government in all cases (a proposition for which we have not contended, and do not contend) than to accept, in any case, the mere contrary opinion of the official experts as conclusive against those certificates.

If such is the rule upon which the French Government intend, for the future, to act in cases of this kind, we cannot but think it would be well that Her Majesty's subjects who are engaged in the trade with France should be made generally aware of it by some kind of public notification.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 75.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 24, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Serjeant Glover, inclosing a subpœna which, under the circumstances stated by him, he is desirous of having served through the Foreign Office on the French Ambassador; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course to be pursued in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, according to the settled principles of international law, an Ambassador is not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Courts of the nation to which he is accredited, either for the purpose of being summoned to give testimony, or for any other purpose; and that the conduct of Mr. Serjeant Glover in suing out, and attempting to serve, a writ of subpœna ad testificandum on his Excellency the Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, has been highly offensive and censurable, if it is not absolutely criminal, under the 4th section of the Act 7 Anne, cap. 12.

We are clearly of opinion that your Lordship must decline to be instrumental in any way in bringing this illegal subpœna under the notice of his Excellency. It would, of course, be competent to any Government to which an Ambassador was accredited in any case in which there might be reason for believing that the interests of justice would be promoted by his voluntary appearance as a witness before the Tribunals, to make any representation which they might think proper, with a view to induce him to consent to waive his undoubted privilege, and to give evidence, of course without any subpœna. But the case must be of a very exceptional character in which such an application could be discreetly made on the one side, or acceded to without loss of dignity on the other. A modern instance in which such a representation was unsuccessfully made by the United States' Government to the Dutch Minister at Washington, whose evidence was thought important in a case of homicide, will be found in the 1st volume of Mr. Lawrence's edition of "Wheaton's Elements" (pages 313 and 314, note 127).

In the present case we are not aware of any circumstances whatever which would make it at all proper or advisable for your Lordship to communicate in any way with his Excellency the Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne upon the subject of Mr. Glover's note.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
R. P. COLLIER.

No. 76.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 2, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd August last respecting the case of Edouard Dulac, a fraudulent bankrupt, whose extradition had been demanded by the French authorities at Réunion from the Governor of Mauritius, in which we recommend that in order to obviate existing difficulties in the extradition of criminals between French and English Colonies, the present Extradition Treaty between the two countries should be so extended as to authorize such extradition to be made on warrant issued by competent Courts or by Magistrates in the Colonies and possessions of both countries, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the French Ambassador at this Court, in which it is maintained that the Extradition Treaty of 1843, coupled with the Act of Parliament giving effect to it, is valid for cases of extradition in the Colonies, and has so been held and acted upon in former cases.

And Mr. Hammond was therefore to request that we would take this question again into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the arguments now advanced by the French Government on this question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to concur in the opinion expressed by the French Ambassador as to the construction of the Treaty and Statute of Extradition. According to both these instruments it is necessary that the Magistrate or Judge who issues the warrant, upon which the demand for extradition from British territories is to be founded, should be in France; as it is, that "the competent authority" who issues the warrant on which the demand for extradition from French dominions is to be founded should be in Great Britain. Whatever latitude of interpretation may be attributed elsewhere to the terms "France" and "Great Britain," we are of opinion that in the construction of the British Statute giving effect to the Treaty they cannot be extended beyond their ordinary geographical sense. With regard to the precedents alleged to be in favour of the French Ambassador's construction, we are not acquainted with them; but supposing them to exist, though they embarrass the political aspect of the question, they cannot affect the legal opinion upon the true construction of the Treaty and Statute which we have had the honour to report to your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 77.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to our Report of the 17th November, a correspondence which has since taken place with Messrs. Pitt Brothers, respecting the present state of their claim against the French Government; and to request that we would take their letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it, and as to any steps which should be taken thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day's date he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Paris, inclosing a copy of a note which, in accordance with the instructions sent to him on the 23rd November, founded on our opinion of the 17th of that month, he has addressed to the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, on behalf of Messrs. Pitt Brothers, and to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, together with those which were already before us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the perusal of the papers now sent does not suggest to us that anything can usefully be added to the advice given to your Lordship in our former Reports.

We retain the opinion which we have throughout expressed as to the proper construction of the Treaty. But the question of compensation must, we think, be considered with reference to the French law—British subjects having no privilege in France above French subjects; and (so looking at that question) we continue to think that the offer of compensation made by the French Government was reasonable, and that Her Majesty's Government could not require more. It is hardly necessary to add that the endeavour of Mr. Grey to obtain a reconsideration of the whole matter in favour of Messrs. Pitt ought not to be checked by this statement of our opinion; in which we confine ourselves to advising Her Majesty's Government as to the amount of compensation which it can strictly demand.

As to the larger views opened by Messrs. Pitt, with reference to the measure for compensation which ought to prevail in these cases, in order to place the mutual intercourse of nations having Commercial Treaties with each other on a footing of complete reciprocity with respect to remedies as well as rights, it does not seem to be our duty at present to offer any opinion. We fear that the reciprocity in this respect, contended for by Messrs. Pitt, goes beyond the stipulations of the Treaty, and cannot be claimed as of right on any settled principle of international law. The mode, however, of giving effect to the Treaty, with respect to what is to be considered evidence of the national origin of manufactures and preventing the recurrence of such injustice as that which has occurred in the case of Messrs. Pitt, requires serious consideration on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 78.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 10.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 9, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office, Mr. Westbrooke, and the British Embassy at Paris, in regard to an alleged assault committed upon Mr. Westbrooke by an official at the Paris station of the Paris and Rouen Railway; that I should perceive that your Lordship has declined to take up Mr. Westbrooke's case; but Mr. Hammond was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the matter, and whether it is one in which Her Majesty's Government can properly be called upon to interfere, and if so, in what manner and to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that this is not a case in which your Lordship can properly interfere.

Mr. Westbrooke must seek redress in the ordinary way, before the proper Court in France, for the injury which he alleges to have been inflicted upon him.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 79.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that, after communicating to the Board of Trade our Reports of the 17th of November and 8th of December respecting Messrs. Pitt's sewing-machines, and the construction placed by the French Government on Article II of the Convention of October 12, 1860, and receiving the opinion of that Department conveyed in the letter inclosed, your Lordship had addressed to Earl Cowley and to Messrs. Pitt the despatches and letter inclosed.*

Before, however, the letter to Messrs. Pitt was sent off, the further letter dated the 12th instant, which Mr. Hammond then inclosed for our consideration, was received from those gentlemen.

And that from this letter, Mr. Hammond was pleased to state, we should perceive that the experts, to whom was referred the question of the deterioration sustained by their machines, have made an award, against which Messrs. Pitt have directed their agent to protest.

And that it is upon the circumstances set forth in this last communication from Messrs. Pitt that your Lordship was desirous of receiving our opinion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that the French experts have considered the damage inflicted on these machines, while in the custody of the French authorities, to be of a very trifling character, chiefly, if not entirely, rust, which an ordinary cleaning would remove, the cost of which they estimate at 50 francs.

As the agents of Messrs. Pitt were invited to attend this inquiry, and declined to do so, we are of opinion that it must be considered that both the character of the damage and the cost of repairing it have been fairly stated by the French experts.

We confine, as we are desired, the expression of our opinion to this single point.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Frankfort.

No. 80.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 7.)

Doctors' Commons, May 6, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the

---

* To Messrs. Pitt, November 22; Messrs. Pitt, November 24, 1864.

* To Earl Cowley, Nos. 790 and 791; to Messrs. Pitt, December 14, 1864.

1864

accompanying despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort (No. 129) as to the right of a Mr. Grimm to claim protection as a British subject, that individual apparently grounding his claim to protection upon his having received a "Denization" Act issued by a Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeal in New South Wales in 1856, though he has been domiciled in Germany since 1859; and Mr. Layard was to request me to report to your Lordship my opinion as to what instruction should be addressed to Her Majesty's Minister upon the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear in the papers submitted to me what the original country of Mr. Grimm was.

If that country was the same as the one whose Court has tried and condemned him, Her Majesty's Minister ought not to interfere on his behalf on the ground of the alleged Act of Denization, which does not appear, but which I must assume was legally passed.

If Mr. Grimm has been tried in the Court of a third country, i.e., not the country of his original allegiance, then I think Her Majesty's Minister should be instructed to use his good offices in his behalf, in whatever manner he may think expedient and discreet.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

General.

No. 81.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received April 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 13, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of a despatch which, upon the receipt of our Report of the 23rd ultimo, your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, directing his Excellency to take legal advice as to the course which Her Majesty's Government could pursue in the French Law Courts in order to regain possession, or to prevent the publication, of the diplomatic correspondence now in the hands of Lady Jackson, and instructing his Excellency, if legally advised to do so, to cause proceedings to be instituted against Lady Jackson.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Earl Cowley, reporting the steps which he has taken in this matter, and transmitting a copy of the legal opinion which he has obtained thereupon, from which we would perceive the various points of view in which the case, as put as an abstract one by Lord Cowley, has been considered by the French Counsel, and the modes of proceeding which, in their opinion, are open to Her Majesty's Government with a view to regaining possession of the papers in question by legal process in France.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to state that before, however, furnishing Lord Cowley with the further instructions which his Excellency requests in this case, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion as to the course most advisable to be pursued, and to request particularly that we would inform your Lordship, with reference to the alternative of applying to the French Government for the seizure of the papers which are believed to be in Paris, whether a similar course has been ever pursued in this country, or would be according to English law, that is to say, proceedings of the nature now in question, taken at the instance of a foreign Government, against an individual or individuals also native of another State.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th of April instant, stating that, with reference to Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, requesting our opinion as to the course most advisable to be pursued in

---

General.

No. 80*.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th March instant, stating that, with reference to the Report of the Attorney- and Solicitor-General of the 22nd July, 1862, on the right of Lady Jackson to dispose of certain official correspondence between the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Her Majesty's Ministers at Berlin between the years 1772 and 1806, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter[*] from the Trustees of the British Museum upon the same subject, from which we would perceive that Lady Jackson now offers to sell to that Library the private correspondence of Her Majesty's Ministers at various foreign Courts from 1790 to 1807, for the sum of 3,000*l.* That we would also see that, in the event of her offer being accepted, Lady Jackson proposes to present the official correspondence of the same period to the British Museum.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship was informed that the papers in question are in Paris, and your Lordship was therefore unable to furnish us with any further information on the subject of their contents than that which is contained in Sir F. Madden's Report, which was inclosed in the letter from the British Museum; but, under the supposition that the whole of the official correspondence in Lady Jackson's possession form actually the archives of Her Majesty's Missions at foreign Courts during the periods above mentioned, he was to request that we would take the question into our early consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether any, and, if any, what, steps can be taken to prevent Lady Jackson from parting with this correspondence; and further, whether, being in France, she can be compelled to surrender the papers in her possession into the hands of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, for our information, the correspondence which passed on the same subject in 1862, together with a Memorandum,[†] drawn up at the Foreign Office, showing what steps have been taken on previous occasions when questions similar to that now under consideration have arisen with regard to the disposal by private individuals of foreign diplomatic correspondence.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th March instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 9th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the British Museum,[‡] inclosing a copy of a letter from Lady Jackson, in which that lady refuses to send the papers in her possession to this country for inspection, and hints at disposing of them to a foreign Government in the event of her offer to sell them to the British Museum for 3,000*l.* being declined; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our early decision as to the steps which we consider should be taken to prevent these official papers from falling into improper hands.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration and have the honour to report—

That, as both Lady Jackson herself, and the papers in question, are in Paris, it is not, at present, possible to take any effectual steps, either to prevent the sale or publication of these papers, or to assert such claim (if any) as Her Majesty's Government may have to the possession of them by any proceedings in this country.

---

[*] March 1, 1864.

[†] Memorandum (E. H.), March 8, 1864.

[‡] March 14, 1865.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS
1864

But we apprehend that the same proof which would be sufficient in this country to entitle Her Majesty's Government to an Order from the Court of Chancery for either of the above purposes would probably also be sufficient for the same purposes in France. And on the supposition (which we are now desired to make) that the papers in question can be shown to have originally constituted, and to have been improperly removed from, the archives of Her Majesty's Missions at certain foreign Courts during the periods of time to which they relate, we are of opinion that Her Majesty is entitled to the property in, and might in this country legally reclaim the possession of, these papers; and, of course, would also be entitled to prevent their sale or publication.

It also seems to us that Lady Jackson's letter to Sir F. Madden of the 2nd instant contains a sufficient intimation of her Ladyship's intention to "dispose of" these papers "out of England" if the Trustees of the British Museum will not accede to her terms, to justify immediate proceedings against her before the proper Tribunal.

Under these circumstances, we think that Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris had better be instructed to take good legal advice in that capital as to the remedies open to Her Majesty's Government in this case by the French law; and, if he should be advised that the objects desired would be likely to be attained by any mode of proceeding in the French Courts, we think that such proceeding may properly be taken.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

France by Her Majesty's Government, in order to recover possession of certain diplomatic correspondence detained by Lady Jackson, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that you had been informed that day, by telegraph from Paris, that Lady Jackson intended leaving that city for England on the following day, and did not intend to return to Paris; that, under these circumstances, he was to request that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the steps which might be legally open to Her Majesty's Government to take against Lady Jackson on her arrival in this country, and, if more than one mode of proceeding should be open to them, what course we would recommend.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if Lady Jackson were to remain in France we should recommend that the course advised by M. Rogron should be pursued.

It would be impossible, in this country, to seize papers in the hands of a foreigner, under similar circumstances, by the mere authority of the Executive Government, without judicial process; whether the possession of the papers were demanded by the foreign Sovereign, to whom the person having the papers owed allegiance, or by any other Government or person. We could not, therefore, recommend your Lordship to make an appeal to the arbitrary power of a foreign Government, in a case where there is a competent legal remedy, and which, if it had arisen in this country, could not be dealt with otherwise than in the due course of law.

But as it now appears that Lady Jackson has returned, or is about to return, to England, the remedy to be pursued against her must necessarily be that afforded by English law. And we should, therefore, advise that an information in Chancery should be immediately prepared and filed against her, in the name of the Attorney-General, on behalf of Her Majesty, praying for the delivery up of all such of the papers in her possession as are originals of, or copies of or extracts from, any official documents which belong to, or which ought to have been retained in, the archives of the Prussian or any other foreign Legation of Her Majesty, or which otherwise belong to Her Majesty; and also praying for an injunction to restrain the publication, &c., of any such documents, and of all other documents which came into the possession of Lady Jackson's late husband, or of any other person through or from whom he or she may have derived title thereto, in the course or for the purposes of any official or confidential employment or service by or on behalf of the Crown of Great Britain.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

No. 82.

The Attorney-General to Earl Russell.—(Received May 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 5, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint me that your Lordship had that day received a letter from Lady Jackson, stating that "she is perfectly willing to surrender to the Government the official papers which came into her possession on the death of her husband, Sir G. Jackson;" and to request that I would favour your Lordship with my opinion as to the reply, if any, which it would be advisable to return to her letter, now that the matter has been placed in my hands.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think the proper reply to Lady Jackson's letter will be to the effect that, before consenting to discontinue the pending proceedings in Chancery against her Ladyship upon the terms of her surrendering to the Government the official papers, which came into her possession on the death of her husband, Sir G. Jackson, it will be necessary that Her Majesty's Government should have the opportunity of ascertaining, from an inspection and examination of all the papers mentioned in the information, which of those documents ought properly to be regarded and claimed as official, and which (if any) of those which Lady Jackson may be entitled to retain are of such a nature as to give the Crown a right to prohibit the disposal or publication thereof by her Ladyship, without the permission of Her Majesty.

If Lady Jackson will consent to this, your Lordship will probably think fit to depute

1864

Mr. Hertslet to make the necessary inspection of all the papers; consulting, as far as possible, Lady Jackson's convenience as to the time and manner of doing so.

I may add that the Crown is legally entitled to the discovery and production of all these papers for the purposes of the suit; and that, if not voluntarily conceded by Lady Jackson, it may be enforced by the ordinary procedure of the Court of Chancery.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 83.

The Attorney-General to Earl Russell.—(Received June 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 14, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two further letters which have been received from Lady Jackson (dated the 11th and 19th May), respecting the surrender to Her Majesty's Government of certain official papers in her possession.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that I should perceive that her Ladyship now expresses her readiness to surrender all of the papers enumerated in the list inclosed in her letter of the 19th May, should they be claimed as the property of Her Majesty.

And also that Lady Jackson prays that all legal proceedings against her may accordingly be stayed; and that she may receive a liberal compensation at the hands of Her Majesty's Government for the loss she will sustain at parting with papers which had been so long in her husband's family, and which she had been always led to expect were her own property, and might be disposed of for her own benefit as she might think fit.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that in obedience to your Lordship's orders, Mr. Hertslet had called upon Lady Jackson, and made a cursory examination of all the papers in her Ladyship's possession; and that it would appear from his report that the collection consists of many thousand official despatches and copies of letters, including about 2,000 semi-official letters, extending over a period of nearly a century.

And that it would also appear that Lady Jackson possesses many similar papers of a far more recent date than those mentioned in the injunction, but that her Ladyship has expressed her entire readiness to part with every paper which she may possess, and only waits the orders of Her Majesty's Government as to their disposal.

Mr. Hammond was therefore to request that I would furnish him with a draft of such directions as might be necessary, with a view to placing the papers in question in the hands of Mr. Herlslet, as librarian and keeper of the papers of the Foreign Office; and that I would favour your Lordship with my opinion as to what recompense should be made to Lady Jackson for the trouble and expense she has been put to in preserving these records for so long a period.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have felt some embarrassment in dealing with this question, from my own entire inability to judge of the pecuniary value of the private correspondence included in these papers.

I think the best and most liberal course will be, to have a fair and reasonable value set upon them by some competent officer of the Foreign Office, or State Paper Office, or of the British Museum, and to pay Lady Jackson the value so ascertained.

In this estimate, such of the papers as are originals or copies of official despatches ought not to be included.

On this arrangement being made, and on the papers being delivered over, the information against Lady Jackson should be dismissed without costs: and all further proceedings in the suit should be stayed, in the meantime, until the arrangement is carried into effect.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 84.

The Attorney-General to Earl Russell.—(Received June 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1864.

My Lord,

I WAS honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th June instant, in which he stated that he was directed by you to transmit for my approval a letter which he proposes to address to Lady Jackson, informing her Ladyship of the conditions on which he will consent to dismiss the information against her in the Court of Chancery.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That the letter which your Lordship proposes to address to Lady Jackson appears to me to be in all respects proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 85.

The Attorney-General to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 27, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter dated the 23rd instant which your Lordship has received from Lady Jackson, in reply to the one your Lordship addressed to her on the 20th instant, and to request that I would inform your Lordship what reply should be returned to this communication.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not very easy to understand Lady Jackson's real meaning; but there cannot be any objection to a compliance with her Ladyship's wish that Mr. Hertslet should attend at her residence and select the documents to be handed over.

I see no reason why Her Majesty's Government should pay compensation for these documents on any other principle than that of putting a fair value on such of them as are not already Her Majesty's property.

Lady Jackson may, I think, properly be informed that Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant (by which no departure from the course understood to have been proposed by herself was intended) cannot be withdrawn; but that Mr. Hertslet will, nevertheless, wait upon her Ladyship in accordance with the desire now expressed by her, and will look over and select the documents to be delivered up to Her Majesty's Government. It should, at the same time, be distinctly stated that upon the subject of payment or remuneration your Lordship has nothing to add to the explanation which Mr. Hammond has already given.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 86.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 3rd of August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence* which had passed between the Foreign Office and the Colonial Office on a question raised by the Governor of Bermuda as to the competency of British magistrates to deal with breaches of foreign maritime law committed within British jurisdiction by the crews of foreign vessels; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which the Secretary of State for the Colonial Office proposes to return to the Governor of Bermuda upon this question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

* Colonial Office, June 22; to Colonial Office, June 30; Colonial Office, July 30, 1864.

1864

That we are of opinion that the answers of the Board of Trade to the two questions propounded by the Governor of Bermuda through the Colonial Office are correct; and that the reply proposed to be made by the Secretary of State to the Governor in accordance therewith is proper, and ought to be sent.

We do not see our way to recommending any measure whereby imprisonment in our gaols could be made the means of punishing breaches of engagements committed by foreign crews towards foreign masters in our waters.

I have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, the Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 87.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for any observations we might have to offer, the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Representatives in France, Austria, Prussia, Spain, Portugal, Russia, the United States, and the Netherlands, instructing them to invite the Governments of the countries to which they are accredited to join with Her Majesty's Government in declaring the Slave Trade piracy; and further to propose to their Legislatures that all persons, whatever their nationality, convicted of being engaged in this inhuman Traffic may be punished in accordance with the laws of the several countries.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That, if we rightly understand the proposal embodied in your Lordship's draft letter, the effect of its adoption by the Powers to whom that proposal is meant to be addressed would be, that Great Britain and the rest of those Powers would deal with the subjects, e. g., of Brazil, of Peru, or of Turkey, if found carrying on the Slave Trade upon the Coasts of Africa, or upon the high seas, in their own national vessels as pirates without any consent on the part of the national Governments of those countries.

We are aware that, so far as Brazil is concerned, something similar has already been done by Great Britain for some years under the Aberdeen Act. We have always, however, been under the impression that the Government which introduced and those which have maintained the Aberdeen Act did so upon the ground that the permanent Article of the Treaty of 1826 between Great Britain and Brazil* declared the Slave Trade to be piracy; and that Great Britain was, therefore, justified in so dealing with it in the case of Brazilian ships and subjects, although after the lapse of the period for which the Mixed Commission Courts were established by that Treaty, the Brazilian Government had declined to make any new arrangements for its suppression. Your Lordship is aware that this view was never acquiesced in by the Government of Brazil, and that it has been and is now strongly dissented from by many persons of influence and authority in this country. With respect to the other South American Governments and Turkey, legislation of this kind would, we conceive, be entirely new; and we are not aware that there are Treaties with any of those countries under which, if such justification be necessary, it could be justified.

We assume that the communication which your Lordship proposes to make is limited to the particular Powers enumerated in Mr. Hammond's letter, either because it is apprehended that it would answer no useful purpose to address it to any other Powers, or, perhaps, because it may be thought better, before inviting the concurrence of other Powers, to arrive, in the first instance, at a mutual agreement between the Great Christian Powers of Europe and the United States.

Without presuming (on this more than any other point) to offer any opinion as to the grave questions of policy which are involved in your Lordship's proposal, it may not be improper for us to suggest that the very absence of the invitation to some of the Powers who may be affected by it to concur in the original adoption of this policy would give additional force to the objections to which it would be exposed.

Upon the general principle,—assuming there to be some Powers against whom this policy, if adopted by others to whom the proposal is made, would be enforced notwithstanding their dissent,—it is our duty to observe that the proposal, correctly, as we think, implies that the Slave Trade is not now piracy by positive international law, and, therefore, that an agreement between certain great Powers to make it so for the future, and to enforce their decision in that respect, against all other Powers, can, as a question of international jurisprudence, be only considered a league, offensive and defensive, for a purpose considered important to the general interests of humanity; and that such a league must depend altogether upon the material strength of those who are parties to it for all the authority which it can possess.*

Assuming, however, these questions of policy to have been considered and determined by Her Majesty's Government, we think that there can be no objection to the form of the despatch proposed to be written by your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 88.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 16.)

Doctors' Commons, November 16, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence with the Colonial Office,† upon the subject of an Act passed by the Legislature of New South Wales, to amend and consolidate "the laws relating to merchant seamen;" and with reference to the letter from the Board of Trade inclosed in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 8th ultimo, Mr. Murray was to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion in regard to the provisions of the 4th paragraph of the Act as adverted to by the Board of Trade.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That after much consideration I must express my opinion that paragraph 4 of section 90 ought to be struck out of the Bill. The provisions of the Bill which that paragraph makes applicable to foreign seamen appear to me to infringe the principles of international comity, and to unnecessarily and injuriously interfere with the rights accorded by usage and custom, at least, to foreign Consuls.

For instance, section 7 (the first made applicable), seems entirely to disregard the fact that foreign seamen are shipped before their own Consul.

Sections 14 to 19 (also made applicable), would import, or attempt to import, the British law as to seamen's agreements (so far as they can), into foreign commercial law.

Section 21 inflicts a penalty on the master of a foreign vessel for not shipping his men according to our Colonial Law.

Sections 31 and 32 can only properly apply to British or Colonial vessels.

Section 79 would inflict a penalty upon a foreign seaman for having made a false statement of the name of his last (foreign) ship. This seems to me most objectionable.

Some of the other sections are either nugatory or inexpedient. None of these provisions have been thought necessary to be inserted in the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act.

I think them objectionable in principle, contrary to international usage and practice, and that they set a bad precedent which foreign States may avail themselves of in a manner injurious to our commercial marine.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Hertslet, vol. iii, p. 34.

* N.B.—The principle of such a league would certainly be difficult to reconcile with the celebrated judgment of Lord Stowell, in "Le Louis" (2 Dodson's Admiralty Reports, p. 210).—R. P., R. P. C., R. J. P.

† Colonial Office, October 8; to Colonial Office, October 26; Colonial Office, November 2, 1864.

1864

Hanover.

No. 89.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

Doctors' Commons, February 18, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose a letter, and its inclosures, which your Lordship has received from a Mr. Claypole, making various inquiries as to what would happen to a cargo belonging to him which is coming from the West Indies on board a Hanoverian ship, in case of her capture by the Danes; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take Mr. Claypole's letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answers to be returned to his queries; and Mr. Hammond was, at the same time, to inform me that Denmark has agreed to the Declaration of Paris on the subject of maritime rights.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with regard to the first question—

1. If the State of Hanover be at war with Denmark the vessel is liable to capture.

With regard to the second question—

2. If the cargo be exclusively British, and laden in the usual course of trade, and the vessel be not employed in breaking a blockade, as I am apprised that Denmark adheres to the Treaty of Paris, the cargo will not be liable to confiscation.

As to the third question—

3. It is not incumbent on Denmark to give any notice of the kind suggested. She may do so as a matter of grace and favour.

As to the fourth question—

4. No such document as suggested can be obtained from Her Majesty's Government in this country. The Danish Government may, if they please, give instructions to release such vessels when captured, but they are in no way bound to do so.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Hanse Towns.

No. 90.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Doctors' Commons, March 15, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 14th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Hamburgh (No. 37), forwarding a copy and translation of a notification issued by the Prussian authorities, relative to the course to be observed by ships passing the batteries of the Prussian naval station at Jade; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I am of opinion that there is any objection to the publication of the notification in the Gazette.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it would be proper to publish this notification in the Gazette, but that I presume the notification as to ships passing batteries of the Jade Bay is only meant to apply to vessels passing within a marine league of the shore, and that the King of Prussia has recently acquired a lawful establishment at that part of the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg. I have accordingly prepared, and herewith transmit a form of notice for insertion in the Gazette.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 90.

Notification.

Foreign Office, March , 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Hamburgh, a copy and translation of a Notification issued by the Prussian authorities relative to the course to be observed by ships passing the batteries of the Prussian naval station at Jade.

The following is the official Notification referred to:—

(Here insert verbatim a copy and translation of the official Notification issued by the Prussian authorities.)

Italy.

No. 91.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Leghorn (No. 8, May 28), requesting instructions with reference to a question of domicile which has arisen in connection with the marriage of Miss J. E. Hall, a British subject, to a native of Tuscany serving as an officer in the Italian army; and to request that we would take the papers inclosed into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the nature of the instruction which should be addressed to Mr. Consul Mac Bean on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as a general rule, the soldier does not change his domicil by serving his country in foreign parts. The only question in this case is, whether the language of the particular statute under which the Consul exercises his functions prevents the application of this rule to the marriage of these persons.

We cannot safely advise your Lordship that this statute does not affect the general rule to which we have adverted. We think that there should be the actual residence of both parties in Tuscany for a calendar month previous to the celebration of the marriage.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 92.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 5.)

Doctors' Commons, October 4, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a letter dated the 30th ultimo, from the Colonial Office, together with its inclosures, requesting your Lordship's opinion as to a demand which has been made by the Italian Government on the Governor of Malta for the extradition of two Sicilians charged with murder. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of the Extradition Ordinance referred to in the accompanying papers, and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with the opinion of the Crown Advocate in this case, and I advise your Lordship to return an answer to the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the effect that the Governor of Malta may lawfully render up these alleged criminals to the Italian Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 93.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

Doctors' Commons, November 14, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Turin (October 22), relative to the question of the validity of a marriage celebrated at Her Majesty's Legation between a foreigner and a British subject.

A draft of the answer which your Lordship proposes to return to Her Majesty's Minister on this subject was also inclosed, and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have ventured to suggest one slight omission, and one addition to the despatch, which appears to me right and proper to be sent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Japan.

No. 94.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (No. 138), inclosing with further copies of the Regulation respecting Vagrants, which formed the subject of our Report of the 30th of November last, copies of a regulation which he had caused to be issued,

No. 91*.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 6.)

Doctors' Commons, July 6, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Colt, inclosing a statement by Mr. Conder relative to his claim on the Italian Government in connection with the Apulian Railway. That this case had already been referred to the late Queen's Advocate, whose Reports, as well as all the previous correspondence relating thereto were, with Mr. Hammond's letter, inclosed; and he was to request that I would take Mr. Colt's letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether, in my opinion, Her Majesty's Government will be justified in interfering on behalf of Mr. Conder.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I entirely agree with the general principles laid down as applicable to cases of this description in the Report of my predecessor dated 2nd May, 1859. I am also inclined to adopt Mr. Consul Bonham's interpretation of Article XXII of the Concession. Mr. Conder does not deal satisfactorily in his answer with the difficulty arising out of M. Melisurgo's refusal to assent to any arrangement made by the Italian Government with Mr. Conder.

M. Melisurgo is the original concessionary, and Conder (the engineer, as I understand, of the projected railway) is the subordinate grantee. It does not appear to me unreasonable that the Italian Government should require Mr. Conder to guarantee them against any counter claim which M. Melisurgo may hereafter advance against them upon the same subject. It would be proper to apprise Mr. Conder that such is the opinion of Her Majesty's Government.

With respect to the graver question whether Her Majesty's Government should continue to refuse to interfere officially on behalf of Mr. Conder, I think that by the terms of the concession the original grantee or cessionary placed himself knowingly on the footing of a domiciled Neapolitan subject with respect to all relations between himself and the then Government of the Two Sicilies accruing from this undertaking as to the railway; and that Her Majesty's Government cannot claim for him, as a matter of right, privileges in this affair which an Italian subject would not possess. At the same time I think Her Majesty's Government would be justified in so far officially interfering on behalf of Mr. Conder as to direct Mr. Elliot to urge upon the Italian Government the sense which Her Majesty's Government entertain of the injustice of refusing to Mr. Conder that recourse to arbitration which is provided for by the plain terms of the concession itself, and which has been decided to be his right by the Italian tribunals.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 93*.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

Doctors' Commons. December 13, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 6th July last, relative to Mr. Conder's claim on the Italian Government in connection with the Apulian Railway, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a further letter on the subject which has been received from that gentleman, inclosing a copy of an official document which he considers to be the virtual reply of the Italian Government to the representations which have been made on his behalf by Her Majesty's Minister at Turin.

Mr. Hammond was also to forward to me the correspondence in regard to the concession of the Apulian Railway which has taken place since the date of my above-mentioned Report, and to call my attention to Mr. Elliot's despatch No. 308 of the 17th ultimo, as showing the present state of the case in the hands of the Italian Government. The former papers were also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to any further steps that Her Majesty's Government should take with regard to these claims.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That after an attentive perusal of the documents referred to in the letter of Mr. Hammond, I can only advise Her Majesty's Government, with respect to the claim of Mr. Pickersgill, that Mr. Elliot be instructed to persevere in his endeavours, which appear to have been already partially successful, to obtain a decision from the Italian Government consonant with the manifest justice of the case, on their being guaranteed against any claim by M. Melisurgo.

With respect to the case of Mr. Conder, I must beg leave to refer to the former Reports of myself and my predecessor in office for the limitations under which the claim of this gentleman may be fairly pressed upon the Italian Government. Subject to those limitations, namely, that the contract must be considered as the contract of an Englishman domiciled in Italy, I think it should be strongly pressed upon that Government that upon every principle of public law and natural justice it has acquired the obligations as well as the dominions of the late Crown of Naples, and that Her Majesty's Government cannot believe that the present Italian Government means to set aside the decision of its own Tribunals, and to substitute for it an absolute unexaminable order of the Executive, which does not profess to be guided by the merits or justice of the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

forbidding the firing of blue lights and rockets by British merchant-vessels; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this regulation into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon; and was to add that, in conformity with our above-mentioned Report, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires was informed on the 8th ultimo, that the Regulation respecting Vagrants was disallowed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we think it was competent to the Consul to make the order or regulation in question, respecting the burning of blue lights and rockets in the harbour of Japan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 95.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir Rutherford Alcock (No. 49), inclosing copies of a Regulation issued by Her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa, and approved by Sir R. Alcock, having reference to the killing or slaughtering animals for human food; and also a copy of the Order in Council under which this Regulation has been issued: and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the Regulations should be approved by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report.

That we are not prepared to advise that this so-called "Regulation" (which is, in fact, nothing more than a notification of something to be afterwards done), should be disallowed by Her Majesty; because it is possible that Regulations of a more positive and definite character, referring thereto, may have been made, which, when read with it, would come under the category of Regulations "for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Tycoon of Japan." The object aimed at seems to be a proper one, and such as (we think) may be accomplished under the power to make Regulations conferred upon Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan by the Order in Council. But the peculiarity of this document is, that it does not itself make or promulgate any practical Regulations at all, but says that when some such Regulations shall be made, they shall be binding upon British subjects opening or keeping any establishment for killing or slaughtering, &c. If Her Majesty's Order in Council did not, per se, enable the Consul to make binding Regulations for that purpose, he could not acquire the power to do so by first issuing a "Regulation" purporting to confer it upon himself. We cannot, therefore, say that such a "Regulation" as this merits the approval of Her Majesty's Government. On the contrary, we think it (in form, at all events) objectionable, because it is wholly dependent, for its operation and effect, upon other Regulations to be hereafter promulgated; which must be seen before any judgment can be formed as to their propriety or expediency. Still, as it is more than probable that, when the intended "Regulations and provisions" are actually made, they may be of an unobjectionable character, we think it will be best that the present Regulation should not be finally approved or disapproved, until it is seen by what working Regulations it is meant to be supplemented.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

Mexico.

No. 96.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed despatch from Mr. Walsham (No. 21), in charge of Her Majesty's Legation in Mexico, calling attention to the protests of the masters of certain British vessels, setting forth the loss and damage which has been caused to them by the French blockade in the Gulf of Mexico; and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Walsham in this matter.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased (in a postscript to his letter) to state that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 29th ultimo, from the Admiralty, which has been received since the above was written, together with a despatch from Mr. Walsham (No. 3, January 9), containing a copy of the Decree referred to in his despatch No. 21 of the 27th of May.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the French Admiral has not exceeded his rights as a belligerent in preventing British vessels from entering Tabasco; and that Mr. Walsham has arrived at a right conclusion upon this point, though we do not attach the same value which he does to the Treaty of 1796 between the United States and Great Britain as bearing upon the present question of the French blockade of the Mexican coast.

We think that Mr. Walsham should be instructed to the effect that he may properly use his good offices to procure, if possible, permission for the ships in question to proceed to Tabasco for the purpose of loading their homeward cargoes; but that his opinion as to the strict right of the belligerent in this matter is correct.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 97.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th of July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 25th ultimo, from the Admiralty, with its inclosures, respecting the arbitrary imprisonment and treatment of two British subjects by the Government of President Juarez, and respecting the proceedings of the United States' troops on the Rio Grande; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the arbitrary imprisonment of British subjects by President Juarez, we think directions should be sent to the proper naval officer of Her Majesty in the Gulf of Mexico to support the remonstrance of Her Majesty's Acting Vice-Consul by a further application for the release or speedy trial of these persons, and for their proper treatment while the investigation is pending.

With respect to the proceedings of the United States' troops at Rio Grande, and especially the letter of General Herron, and the wholly illegal seizure of Captain Paulson, we think directions should be sent to Lord Lyons to lay the whole matter before the United States' Government, and to represent that Her Majesty's Government hope that no further attempt will be made to enforce, by such illegal measures, any blockade which

---

MADAGASCAR.

No. 95 A.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 27, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a Treaty which has been prepared with the view of being proposed to the Envoys from the Queen of Madagascar who are now in this country, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, more especially with reference to the Article respecting Consular jurisdiction (No. X), and report to your Lordship at our earliest convenience our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that he inclosed, for our information on this subject, a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, transmitting a Memorandum of the French Government, and a French draft Treaty, and also the draft of a despatch to Lord Cowley in reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, with respect to the Treaty generally, we see no objection to any of the provisions contained in it. With respect to Clause X, to which our attention is more especially drawn, it appears to us, so far as it extends, to be properly framed. No provision, however, is made for the possible case of a difference of opinion between a British and foreign Consul in causes submitted to their adjudication. Such a provision might form part of a separate Treaty with France, but, if the subject is to be dealt with at all in the Treaty with Madagascar, it would be expedient to provide for this case by giving power to call in an Umpire, or by some other means to which the French Government might not object.

We desire to call attention to our marginal queries and remarks on parts of two Articles (Articles II and V) of the draft Treaty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

may be in force at Rio Grande; and that Captain Paulson be immediately set at liberty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 98.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 23.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 22, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Tampico (No. 24, June 7), with its inclosure, reporting the imprisonment by the Mexican authorities of Mr. Patrick Milmo, as well as the attachment of his property, on an accusation of having defrauded the Mexican Government; and Mr. Murray was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letters of the 28th ultimo and 9th instant, with reference to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with our present very limited knowledge of the facts of this case, it only occurs to us to advise your Lordship that as the exequatur of the Vice-Consul on the spot appears to have been withdrawn, instructions should be sent to the proper naval officer of Her Majesty in command, to aid Mr. Zürn, by making all such proper representations to the Mexican authorities as may be calculated to obtain for any of Her Majesty's subjects who may have been arrested at the instance of the Government or the Tribunals of President Juarez, proper treatment in every respect while any accusation is pending against them. Under the head of proper treatment would be included (in every case in which it is not found practicable to obtain the release of the person charged from prison upon proper bail or security) a place of temporary confinement not injurious to health, and full access to legal advice and assistance.

If, as we infer from the papers, Messrs. Milmo and Gilgen are not now confined in prison, and are allowed access to their advisers and friends, there does not seem to be, at present, any necessity to take further measures in their behalf.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 99.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 12, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th August ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed despatch from Mr. Walsham, in charge of Her Majesty's Legation in Mexico (No. 28), respecting the circumstances under which a caveat has been issued against the solemnization of a certain marriage by Her Majesty's Consul in Mexico, and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Walsham for his guidance in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the general question we are clearly of opinion that the "caveat" specified in 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68, must be founded solely upon legal grounds, such as, if properly substantiated by evidence, ought to prevent the marriage, against which it is entered, from taking place. In the present case it is not alleged that the seduction of Mr. Fuller's ward by F. Rule, coupled with a promise of marriage, would (if the charge be true) by the law of Mexico constitute any bar to his marriage with Mary Hosking; nor that any suit has been instituted having for its object to obtain a sentence declaratory of a marriage between Rule and Mr. Fuller's ward. Assuming this state of law and of fact, the "caveat" was, in truth, bad on the face of it; but at all events the grounds of it ought to have been immediately examined, and pronounced by the Consul (if the law and the fact proved to be as above assumed) to be inadequate to prevent the celebration of the marriage. If, however, it should turn out that the law of Mexico holds that the seduction of, or carnal connection with, a woman, coupled with a promise of marriage (or a promise subsequente copula, as it is sometimes termed) constitutes, according to the canon law, a legal marriage (whether the contracting parties may or may not be compellable to celebrate the contract in facie ecclesiæ), then the Consul acted rightly in refusing to marry Francis Rule and Mary Hosking, until the question whether Rule was or was not legally married to Mr. Fuller's ward had been finally determined by the Appellate Court, in which it appears that proceedings of some kind (but as we conceive relating only to damages for a breach of promise of marriage) are now being carried on.

We think that instructions to this effect should be sent to Mr. Walsham.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 100.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

Doctors' Commons, September 15, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Mr. Walsham (No. 29), in charge of Her Majesty's Legation in Mexico, inclosing copy of a Decree by which the blockade established in the Gulf of Mexico and on the Pacific coast of Mexico has been raised; and to request that I would prepare and forward to your Lordship a form of notification of the raising of this blockade for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have drawn the form of notification for raising the blockade in the Gulf of Mexico and on the Pacific coast of Mexico, which I have the honour to append to this Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 100.

Notification.

Foreign Office, September , 1864.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Mr. Walsham, in charge of Her Majesty's Legation in Mexico, a despatch inclosing a copy of a Decree by which the blockade established in the Gulf of Mexico and on the Pacific Coast of Mexico has been raised.

The following is a copy of the Decree above referred to:—

(Here insert the original Decree and a translation of the same.)

R. P.

No. 101.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 17.)

Doctors' Commons, September 16, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a Memorial from Dr. Murray, setting forth the circumstances under which he prays the intervention of Her Majesty's Government with the Government of Mexico to obtain compensation for loss of property and personal injury which he states he has suffered in Mexico. That Dr. Murray states that he is ready to supply the documentary evidence referred to in the Memorial should we require it; but as it is possible that I may not consider it necessary to refer to those documents, which are in the Spanish language, and as Dr. Murray is anxious to return to Mexico by the earliest possible opportunity, Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this Memorial into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government can take any, or what, steps in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I must at present assume all the statements of Dr. Murray to be true. I am not certain whether Dr. Murray means to state that he has been compelled entirely to abandon all possession of his Mexican property: I assume that such is his meaning. That on these assumptions I am of opinion that his case is one in which it is proper for Her Majesty's Government to interfere to the extent of forwarding the Memorial of Dr. Murray to Her Majesty's Representative at Mexico with instructions to make the best inquiry in his power into the alleged facts of the case, and if they should appear to him to be generally in accordance with those put forward by Dr. Murray, then to submit the Memorial of that gentleman to the Imperial Government, and to state that Her Majesty's Government have no doubt that the Imperial Government will cause an inquiry to be into these avernments of severe injuries to person and property which, in consequence of the maladministration of the law, Dr. Murray has sustained; and that if the avernments turn out to be substantially correct, this unfortunate person will be so far aided by the Government as to receive a fair pecuniary compensation for the property of which he has been unlawfully deprived, and that into the amount of this compensation some consideration of the bodily injuries which he has received might, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, not unreasonably enter.

If the Imperial Government reply that whatever the administration of the law may have been, it is now just and fair, and that Dr. Murray ought to have recourse to it in the first instance, the answer will require further consideration.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Monte Video.

No. 102.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video respecting a legal case in which his intervention has been requested by Mr. Hall, a British subject; and to request that we would take Mr. Lettsom's despatch into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to him in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Lettsom has taken a correct view of this matter, and that instructions to that effect should be sent to him from your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 103.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 12.)

Doctors' Commons, July 11, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video (No. 43) upon the subject of a claim made by Señor José Villanueva, a native of Gibraltar, against the Government of Monte Video for damages alleged to have been done to his house during its occupation by Government troops on the approach of General Flores to the capital; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether or not this claim deserves the support of Her Majesty's Government, and, if so, to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the papers now before me do not disclose any circumstances which ought to induce Her Majesty's Government officially to interfere on behalf of Señor José Villanueva with the Government of Monte Video. A rent of a single room at 10 or 12 dollars a month appears to me at present to be all that this gentleman can properly claim, and this rent it appears the proper authorities are willing to pay. I see no evidence whatever that the house was deteriorated in any respect during its occupation by the troops on the approach of General Flores to the capital.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 104.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 13.)

Doctors' Commons, December 13, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video (No. 102, October 29), inclosing a note from the Commander-in-chief of the Brazilian naval forces in the River Plate, notifying the blockade of the ports of Paysandú and Saltó belonging to the Republic of Uruguay, and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and that I would prepare a notification of this blockade for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have considered the circular from the Commander-in-chief of the Brazilian naval forces above referred to me, and have prepared, and herewith transmit a proper notice of the blockade of the ports of Paysandú and Saltó for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 104.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, December , 1864.

IT is hereby notified that the Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video a despatch inclosing a note or circular, dated 26th October, 1864, from the Commander-in-chief of the Brazilian naval forces in the River Plate, notifying the blockade by the said Brazilian naval forces of the ports of Paysandú and Saltó, belonging to the Republic of the Uruguay.

The following is an extract from the said note or circular of the said Commander-in-chief of the Brazilian naval forces above referred to:—

(Here insert extract from said circular as marked in pencil, and translation as also marked.)

R. P.

No. 105.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russeil.—(Received December 13.)

Doctors' Commons, December 13, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the inclosed despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres and Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video,* respecting a circular addressed to the foreign Representatives at Monte Video by the Brazilian Admiral on the station, regarding certain measures proposed to be taken in connection with the hostilities between Brazil and Uruguay; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which has been pursued by Mr. Lettsom in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it was competent to the Brazilian Government, in order to obtain justice, after other means had failed, for wrongs inflicted upon its subjects (a right the exercise of which it nevertheless recently denied to Great Britain), to have recourse to reprisals against the Oriental Republic of Uruguay. but that it was not competent to the Brazilian Government to stop, visit, or take any cargo whatever out of neutral vessels, as a subsidiary means of accomplishing that end. This right of interfering with the commerce of the neutral is incident, and incident only, to a state of war. Mr. Lettsom was so far right in the position which he assumed in his reply to Baron de Tamandaré. On the other hand, if the Brazilian Government had declared war with the Oriental Republic of Uruguay, and at the same time notified their intention of not declaring a blockade, but of simply preventing neutrals from carrying contraband of war to the enemy, it would have been competent to that Government to have so limited the exercise of its own belligerent right, and this was the course which Mr. Thornton appears to have supposed that they had actually taken. But reprisals, in the usual limited sense, and war, are not the same; the former affects the party only against whom the reprisals are made, the latter affects a third party, the neutral also.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Morocco.

No. 106.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

Doctors' Commons, June 17, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Tangier (No. 16), requesting instructions on certain points relating to the protection of British subjects and British interests in Morocco, together with the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir John Drummond Hay in reply; and Mr. Murray was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether the proposed draft of answer is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that your Lordship's draft letter, with the alterations which I have suggested in the margin, is right and proper to be sent.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Thornton, Nos. 80, 85, and 90; Mr. Lettsom, Nos. 91 and 96.

1864

New Granada.

No. 107.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, Ssptember 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 5th of November, 1863, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Consul-General at Bogotá,* respecting his correspondence with the Columbian Government in connection with Mr. Hunter's murder;† and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether the facts of the case are such as to call for any, or what, further intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in consequence of the death of the criminal Mario, the ground of discussion in this case has been removed, even if under other circumstances any further discussion could have been carried on with advantage. It may, however, not be superfluous to instruct Mr. O'Leary to state to the Government of New Granada that Her Majesty's Government, while appreciating the reasons which may have made it desirable to grant a general amnesty in that country to political offenders, is still quite unable to understand why that amnesty should also have been extended to all other criminals; and that however excellent may be the laws of New Granada or any other country, they cannot be relied upon as affording security to the lives and property of foreigners, if the persons entrusted with their administration are unable or unwilling to put them in force, or if they are liable to be set aside by such indiscriminate acts of amnesty as that in question.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 108.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 28.)

Doctors' Commons, September 27, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Grey Town (No. 6), calling attention to certain complaints advanced on the part of Mosquito Indians against the Government of Nicaragua; and also inclosing a copy of a Report, dated the 6th instant, from Mr. Mathew, Her Majesty's Minister in Central America.

Mr. Hammond further stated that the question of the territorial rights of the Mosquito Indians was referred in the year 1862, for the consideration of Sir John Harding; and, for my convenience, he was pleased to inclose his (Sir John Harding's) Report, dated the 3rd January, 1862, together with a volume in which I should find marked the correspondence then laid before him; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Consul Green in reply to his despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a careful perusal of the Treaty of Managua (January 28, 1860), and of the Report of my predecessor in office, leads me to the same conclusions as those which Mr. Mathew has expressed to your Lordship in his despatch of the 6th of September, 1864.

---

* Mr. O'Leary, No. 33.

† Mr. Griffith, Nos. 15 and 16; to Mr. Griffith, No. 34; Mariquita Mining Company, October 21, 1863.

Upon the general subject, I cannot doubt that the Treaty must be considered as existing in full force between Nicaragua and Great Britain; and that as the principal object of that Treaty was to secure certain rights of the Mosquito Indians, it is incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to protect these persons in the enjoyment of those rights.

The true meaning of the Treaty is, that the Mosquitos are to exercise within the assigned district the entire de facto government, but are to be subject to the sovereignty of Nicaragua, and to be incapable of placing themselves or the district under any other de jure sovereignty.

I therefore concur with Mr. Mathew in the opinion that, under the IIIrd Article of the Treaty, it is competent to the Mosquito Indians to subject to "their own customs" and "regulations" all residents within the reserved district; and I also agree that they are entitled to establish saw-mills, cotton plantations, &c., by the aid of foreign enterprise, and to enjoy whatever benefit may arise from the employment of such enterprise. I think, also, that the title of the Mosquitos to the Com Islands and Cays resolves itself into a question of distance and measurement. If these places be within the distances mentioned in the IInd Article of the Treaty, they are within the grant to the Mosquitos, and subject to their laws and regulations.

It appears that your Lordship has arrived, on proper grounds, at the conclusion that they are within this distance. I think, therefore, that Governor Saenz was not warranted in his prohibition to erect the saw-mills, or in his demand upon the islands and cays.

With respect to the grant made by the Nicaraguan Government to Commander Pim, I agree with the construction put upon it by Mr. Mathew; but if Commander Pim has, as Mr. Mathew states, obtained a collateral grant from the Mosquitos (a fact of which Mr. Consul Green does not seem to have been aware), there would not appear to be much reason for complaint upon this subject; but I think the official intimation suggested by Mr. Mathew would be expedient and proper.

It would not appear to me desirable to answer categorically the different positions of Mr. Consul Green, but to reply to his despatch generally in the sense of Mr. Mathew's suggestions, and of this Report.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 109.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 7.)

Doctors' Commons, October 6, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the correspondence noted in the margin,* respecting a claim advanced by Messrs. Longton and Co. against the Columbian Government on account of some port charges levied on the British ship "Mercury;" and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. O'Leary on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as it appears from Mr. O'Leary's despatch that the authorities at Rio Hacha acted illegally in imposing these charges, and as I gather from the same despatch that they are subject in this to the control of the General Government of the United States of Columbia, I am of opinion that application should be made to them to cause a repayment of the illegal fine. It would, of course, be properly, but clearly, intimated that some public authority in this country must be responsible to a foreign State for this injustice inflicted upon one of its subjects, and must make due reparation for it.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Messrs. Longton, April 29; to Mr. O'Leary, No. 2; Mr. O'Leary, No. 38.

1864

No. 110.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 10.)

Doctors' Commons, November 10, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires at Bogotá (No. 42), together with one from Her Majesty's Consul at Carthagena (No. 1), upon the subject of Mr. William Yates' claim against the Columbian Government; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether or not the circumstances of the case are such as to justify your Lordship in supporting it; and if so, to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That when Mr. William Yates established himself at Carthagena, he became subject to all the municipal laws of that city, and that he cannot invoke his ignorance of those laws, as he appears to be of opinion (see his letter in Mr. O'Leary's No. 42), as a defence for having violated them.

By one of these laws he appears to have been called upon to contribute a certain sum of money for the purpose of public and general utility. He thought the assessment excessive,—perhaps it was so; but there was a proper and legal channel of redress open to him, to which, either intentionally or by error, he did not have recourse, and he did set at defiance the municipal authority.

This conduct provoked arbitrary measures on the part of the Governor, the result of which was that he was imprisoned for forty-one days, bail for his appearance, though tendered by Her Majesty's Consul on the spot, having been refused. The Tribunals of the country, both the First and the Appellate Court, have decided that this imprisonment was illegal, and that Mr. Yates ought not to have been subjected to any criminal charge; in other words, that the course prescribed by the 7th Article of the Decree (under which he had been assessed) had not been followed, that he had not been "proceeded against according to law."

For this illegal imprisonment he brings his action against the Local State Government, which refuses to entertain the claim, and he is left to his remedy before the Supreme Federal Court at Bogotá, which remedy, it is stated, he is too poor to pursue.

I think it cannot be doubted that the imprisonment was an injury done to Mr. Yates, for which he ought to be entitled to some pecuniary damages; but until the damages have been refused by the Court at Bogotá, I do not think that Her Majesty's Government ought to interfere on his behalf. Mr. Yates was clearly in the wrong in the first instance, and his own ignorance of, or his neglect to apply to, the law of the country in which he is domiciled, led to all the inconvenience which he afterwards suffered.

The cases are, I think, very rare in which, while legal redress is open to one of Her Majesty's subjects domiciled in a foreign State, Her Majesty's Government should make a direct application on behalf of such subject to the Executive Government of that foreign State; and I think it would be very dangerous to admit the plea of poverty on behalf of the subject who alleges himself to have been injured, the truth of which plea it would always be very difficult to ascertain, as a reason for departing from what ought to be the general rule.

Upon the whole, therefore, I advise your Lordship that, until the Federal Court at Bogotá has refused to grant any compensation to Mr. Yates for his imprisonment, Her Majesty's Government ought not directly to interfere on his behalf, but the Consul might be instructed to use any good offices which may be in his power in aid of this person.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Pacific Islands.

No. 111.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul for the Navigators' Islands, reporting the establishment by the foreign residents, with the approval of the native Chiefs, of a Court for the trial by jury, of offences committed by foreigners against life and property, and of which Court Mr. Consul Williams states that he has been appointed President.

That we should see from the accompanying draft of a despatch addressed by your Lordship in September last to Her Majesty's Consul at Fiji, the view taken by Her Majesty's Government of Magisterial Courts in the Pacific Islands, and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon Mr. Williams' Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the despatch addressed by your Lordship to Her Majesty's Consul at Fiji was perfectly right and proper, and we think that an answer in the sense and founded on the reasons of that despatch should be also sent to Her Majesty's Consul for the Navigators' Islands.

We observe that the arrangements made by the foreign residents in Apia is said to have "met with the approval of the Chiefs." If, therefore, it rests on any sanction, it is upon that of the local authority; and perhaps, if it should prove to have been established by the authority of Chiefs who are recognized as exercising the powers of government at Apia, it may not be necessary for Her Majesty's Government to object to it. But it will even in that case be necessary that it should be clearly understood that this arrangement is one with which Her Majesty's Government have no concern, and to which they do not profess to give any sanction or authority; and that all persons who may take part in carrying it into effect will do so upon their own responsibility.

Under these circumstances, it does not seem to us to be advisable that any Consular Agent of Her Majesty, while retaining that character, should act as Judge of a Court which (if it be entitled to that name at all) is in reality established by the native authority, though for the purposes of the foreign residents. It is more important to avoid any appearance of sanction by Her Majesty's Government to the proceedings of such a Court, inasmuch as it seems to be contemplated that it may exercise some species of jurisdiction over foreigners of every nation, and not over British subjects only.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Persia.

No. 112.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

Doctors' Commons, June 25, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul at Zanzibar, dated the 10th ultimo, requesting instructions as to the course to be pursued in the case of slaves, captured by Her Majesty's cruizers, who may prove to have been kidnapped within the territories of the Sultan of Zanzibar; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Colonel Playfair should be directed to pursue under these circumstances.

1864

The papers, as marked in the margin* relating to this subject, were also inclosed for my consideration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise your Lordship that it would be proper to instruct Colonel Playfair that slaves captured within the Sultan's territories or waters are, for the future, to be restored to the proper authorities of Zanzibar; but that slaves captured on the high seas, or without the jurisdiction of the Sultan, are not to be given up to the authorities.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 113.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

Doctors' Commons, November 29, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated the 16th instant, and its inclosures from Mr. Peter Ralli, claiming indemnity from the Persian Government, on account of losses he has sustained owing to the alleged unjust interference with his legitimate trade at Tabreez by the Persian authorities and native merchants at that place. The previous papers connected with this case were also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the right of Her Majesty's Government to support Mr. Ralli's claim for iudemnity.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have read with great care and attention the papers submitted to me in this case, and that it appears to me clear that the Persian merchants, abetted by the Persian authorities, have inflicted, without any just cause, a severe injury upon the commercial interests and property of Mr. Ralli; that in so doing they have violated both the specific Treaties of Commerce subsisting between this country and Persia, as well as the general international rights of British merchants trading in Persia, and I think that Her Majesty's Government have a right, in the circumstances, to support Mr. Peter Ralli's claim for an indemnity, as to the amount of which I can, of course, express no opinon.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Portugal.

No. 114.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the Portuguese Minister in this country, who is engaged on behalf of his Sovereign

---

[*] Colonel Playfair, August 26, 1863; to Colonel Playfair, No. 2, March 16, 1864.

No. 114*.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Granville.—(Received July 19.)

Doctors' Commons, July 18, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 14th May, 1863, respecting an excessive "industrial tax" which had been levied upon British merchants in Portugal, and a further tax which had been levied upon them as agents for Insurance Companies, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon,* containing the answer of the Portuguese Government to the representations which he addressed to them upon this subject in accordance with my opinion; and Mr. Murray was to request that I would take these papers into consideration with reference to the Treaty with Portugal of the 3rd July, 1842, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the further instructions which should be sent to Sir Arthur Magenis upon these questions.

The former papers bearing upon the case were returned to me.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that at last the Portuguese Government has redressed the grievance complained of as to the excessive assessment in the cases of Warburg and Dotti.

I have the honour to agree with his Excellency Sir A. Magenis that as to the cases of Hickie, Haworth, and Dagge, the reason assigned for their extra assessment are satisfactory. The imposition of the 20 per cent. for the "viação" seems to be justified by the reasons alleged in the opinion of the Portuguese legal adviser of the British Embassy.

With respect to the remaining question, namely, the right of taxing British subjects as agents of foreign insurance offices, the reasoning of the Portuguese Department of Finance (Inclosure No. 6 in Sir A. C. Magenis' No. 57 of the 1st June, 1864) as to the construction of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1842, with reference to the 2nd Article of the Law of the 30th July, 1860, is not to me convincing or satisfactory.

The true state of the case is as follows:—

Up to the period of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1842, British subjects had enjoyed, as that Treaty declares, "a special exemption" from the particular tax called "mancio," or "decima industrial;" by that Treaty (Article I, Hertslet, vi, p. 599) the exemption was removed, and by a statement of the Portuguese Government, explanatory of this Ist Article (and which must be considered as part of the Treaty), it was declared "that the maximum of the 'mancio,' or industrial tax, to be imposed upon all British subjects, shall be 20 per cent. on the rent of their houses, shops, or warehouses, which shall serve as an invariable rule to the Tribunal of the Treasury whenever it shall have to decide on any appeal made by British subjects in the form disposed by the said Ist Article of the aforesaid Treaty."

It is of course clear that no subsequent municipal law of Portugal can effect, as far as British subjects are concerned, the conditions of the international covenant as to this particular tax expressed in this Treaty with England. Now, the law complained of does increase the amount of this particular tax upon these British firms. It is said, however, that the additional tax is imposed upon them in their character as agents of foreign insurance offices, but if Sir A. Magenis be correct in stating (23rd January, 1863, No. 7) that "these agencies form a part of their general business, for which they pay the industrial tax, and are carried on in their ordinary counting-houses," I cannot discover what right the Portuguese Government derive from the Treaty (and if they have it at all, it must be derived from that instrument, and not from any subsequent municipal law) to make any distinction as to the nature of the business so carried on, whereby they are authorized, as a consequence of that distinction, to increase the amount of a tax already fixed at a certain amount by what they have themselves designated as "an invariable rule."

---

[*] Sir A. Magenis, No. 57, June 13, 1864.

[†] Sir A. Magenis, No. 7, 1863; to Sir A. Magenis, No. 33, 1863; Queen's Advocate, May 14, 1863.

1864

The Treaty, it must be remembered, is the sole authority on this subject, and no mention of any such right is to be found in it.

It is very easy to understand that the carrying on of these foreign agencies by British firms was not considered at the time of making the Treaty, or that it was then too unimportant to be noticed, and that subsequently this particular result of the Treaty has become obnoxious to the Portuguese Government as practically favouring foreign Companies to the injury of national Companies, conferring, as the Department of Finance state to the Duke of Loulé (Inclosure No. 6 of Sir A. C. Magenis' No. 57 of the 13th June, 1864), a most unjustifiable act of "favour towards those Insurance Companies whose agents they are," and no doubt similar language might have been applied to the "special exemption" which, nevertheless, British firms previously to the Treaty enjoyed, and in recompense for the abandonment of which exemption the fixed tax of 20 per cent. was imposed by the Treaty. There may be a good reason for seeking, and perhaps for obtaining, a modification of the Treaty, but this state of things does not justify, while the Treaty exists, the disregard by the Portuguese Government of an international obligation.

Having regard, however, to the consideration, that probably if the Treaty were now to be made Her Majesty's Government would consider a clause, the effect of which would be practically to impose a tax upon foreign Companies similar to that imposed on national Companies, to be not inequitable, it is perhaps a question for the discretion of Her Majesty's Government whether Sir A. Magenis should not be instructed to content himself with a protest, for the reasons assigned in this Report, against the imposition of this additional tax.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

in mediating between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Brazil, inclosing a memorandum setting forth the terms on which the mediating Court would propose that the differences between the two countries should be adjusted.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit the draft of a memorandum which your Lordship proposes to place in Count Lavradio's hands, explaining the course which Her Majesty's Government are prepared to take in the matter. That Count Lavradio, having expressed a wish to receive the reply of Her Majesty's Government before the 9th instant. Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration at our earliest convenience, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether we concur in the terms of the proposed memorandum.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we do concur in the terms of the proposed memorandum embodying the views of Her Majesty's Government on this subject, and which, as we understand them, differ materially from those of the memorandum of the Portuguese Government. By the latter memorandum (if assented to), Her Majesty's Government would, in substance, admit that the late reprisals were unjustifiable; that damages for the seizure of the ships detained are now due from Great Britain; and that the money paid by the Brazilian Government under the pressure of those reprisals, ought in justice to be returned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 115.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that, with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 23rd of May, 1863, regarding Mr. Lindsay's case, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 16th untimo from Mr. Lindsay, setting forth the circumstances under which he requests the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government with the Government of Portugal in his behalf.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit the previous correspondence in this case, and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which should be taken with reference to Mr. Lindsay's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that there are no circumstances in this case which can justify the official interference of Her Majesty's Government. So far as Mr. Lindsay's claim to such interference is founded merely on his position as a shareholder in the Company in question, on the alleged illegalities of the administration of that Company by its directors, and on the alleged sanction of, or acquiescence in, those illegalities, by the Portuguese Government, we think that the answers given to it by the Duke de Loulé (20th January, 1863), and by the Law Officers of the Crown of Portugal (13th and 20th February, and 6th March, 1863), are complete. "Mr. Lindsay," said the Duke, "is a British subject, it is true; but as a shareholder of an anonymous Society, having its seat in Portugal, and organized in conformity with Portuguese laws, he cannot make any claim on account of affairs regarding this Society, except, like any other shareholder, before the Courts of Justice of that country, whose competency he acknowledged in the act of his joining in this undertaking." We agree with the Duke that it is hardly possible, in the nature of things, for such a question to become international, or to be treated as one between Government and Government. Both the claims of the Society itself against the Government, by whose acts and under whose law it was constituted, and the claims of Mr. Lindsay, as one of its members, against the Society or its Directors, are equally subject to the sole and exclusive determination of the law of Portugal. Even if the law be in any respect defective (e. g., in not giving, to a Company like this, adequate remedies for any breach of contract on the part of the Government), or if it is, in any particular case, erroneously administered by the Portuguese Courts, this cannot constitute a ground for the interference of any foreign Government; nor can any justification for such interference arise out of the mere neglect of the Portuguese Government to exercise any powers of superintendence and control over the affairs of the Company which it may possess, either by the general law or by the particular constitution of this Company; nor out of any ratification by the Portuguese Crown or Legislature of changes in the Constitution or Statutes of the Company, or of acts of its Directors which, without such ratification, might not have been legal and valid. As well might it be said that a foreign shareholder in an English Company would have a just cause of international complaint against the British Government because the constitution of the Company might be varied, or questionable acts of its Directors might be confirmed, in a manner which he might think prejudicial to his interests, by some subsequent Act of Parliament; nor is it shown, to our satisfaction (even apart from any legal consideration), that any interference with this Company has taken place by the Portuguese Government, of which Mr. Lindsay, or any other shareholder, could reasonably complain. The only changes which have been introduced into its administration by Royal or Legislative authority appear to be those made by the five Royal Decrees or Acts of Cortes of the 23rd March, 1859; 28th September, 1859; 23rd May, 1860; 30th March, 1861, and 10th September, 1861 (see the Assistant Attorney-General's opinion of the 13th February, 1863). The first of these authorized an increase of the capital of the Company, pursuant to a Resolution to which Mr. Lindsay was himself a party. Of the second he took the benefit, when he became the holder of 16,100*l*. in debentures of the Company. The third, which altered the quorum clauses of the original statutes, seems to have been justified by necessity, the original quorum for certain meetings having been thirty, and for others twenty shareholders, whereas (if we rightly collect the facts), there were never, before 1861, more than sixteen shareholders in the whole Company. Of the fourth and the fifth, so far as they guaranteed the payment, first, of 6 per cent., and afterwards of 7 per cent., on the capital stock of the Company, Mr. Lindsay has repeatedly claimed the benefit, and the delay on the part of the Portuguese Government in the payment of this guaranteed interest (which they have since, in part, at least, paid), has been frequently made by him matter of imputation against them. This part, therefore, of Mr. Lindsay's complaint (unless resting on some other foundation than his mere interest in the Company as an English shareholder) seems to us, both on general principles and on the particular circumstances of the case, to fall entirely to the ground.

1864

It remains to consider whether, independently of his mere rights as an English shareholder in this Company, Mr. Lindsay has any other just ground of claim against the Portuguese Government in respect of which he can invoke the intervention of his own Government. What he alleges, in the first place, is, that he was originally induced to invest his property and money in this Company, by the solicitation, or at least encouragement, of Senhor Bento, the Minister of Public Works and Finance, at Lisbon, in 1858; that the part taken by the Portuguese Government in the establishment of the Company, and the powers of superintendence over its affairs which they reserved to themselves (and for which, he says, he stipulated, with a view to his own security), made it, practically, a Government undertaking; and that he (Mr. Lindsay) was entitled to rely upon the communications which then took place between himself and Senhor Bento, as amounting to a guarantee on the part of the Portuguese Government that he should not lose his capital embarked in that undertaking, either by any direct interference of the Government with its affairs, or by any mal-administration on the part of the Directors, which the Government, or its Commissioners, could, by due vigilance, prevent. Upon this part of the case, we have to observe, first, that it is not made out to our satisfaction, as a matter of fact, that Mr. Lindsay's share in the capital stock of this Company has been lost or endangered either by any direct interference of the Portuguese Government, or by any mal-administration of the Company, which that Government or its Commissioners could, by due vigilance, have prevented. The main cause of the failure of the Company (as far as we can collect), seems to have been that the intended and necessary amount of capital was never subscribed.

But, further, the correspondence between Mr. Lindsay and Senhor Bento appears to us to be by no means such as to warrant the construction which Mr. Lindsay now places upon it. That the Portuguese Government had an interest in promoting the formation of a Company, consisting of responsible capitalists, with whom they might enter into contracts for the maintenance of their own communications with the west coast of Africa and the Azores, and that the particular terms on which this Company was to be constituted were carefully discussed and settled between them and Mr. Lindsay, appears to be clear. But it is no less clear to us (as much from Mr. Lindsay's own letters, set forth in the "further statement," with documents laid by him before Dr. Twiss, as from the letters which he received from Senhor Bento) that the Company was, on both sides, meant and understood to be constituted as an ordinary anonymous Company, under and according to the law of Portugal; and that the Portuguese Government neither came, nor ever intended to come, under any special obligations towards Mr. Lindsay, or any shareholder in the Company, other than such as might result from those express contracts which they contemplated entering into for the services to be rendered by the Company to that Government, and the subsidies to be paid in return for those services. The Company was in fact constituted like any other Portuguese "anonymous" Company.

Mr. Lindsay, as a man of business, must have known that he had entered into no contract, except with his co-proprietors, and must have acted in reliance upon his own judgment as to the probabilities of the success of the undertaking. We agree with the remarks of the Assistant Attorney-General of Portugal upon the letters of Senhor Bento: "This correspondence, altogether officious and private, does not appear from any public acts. There is no authentic public instrument, there is no contract by which the Government engaged to interfere directly in the undertaking, or to guarantee the capital of the English shareholders by means of the money, the revenues, and the property of the State."

In these circumstances, although we think Mr. Lindsay has a fair claim upon the liberality of the Portuguese Government for their favourable consideration of any arrangements which he may be able to propose, and which might tend, by the assistance of that Government given in a legal and constitutional way, to improve his position, we are bound to say that he has not, in our judgment, substantiated any pecuniary claim, either moral or legal, against that Government, and we should be much more disposed to doubt, whether the representations already made in his behalf have not been too strong in their tone, than to advise Her Majesty's Government to give his claim, for the future, a more energetic support.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 116.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 20th ultimo, respecting Mr. Lindsay's claims against the Portuguese Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 23rd instant, from Mr. Lindsay, inclosing an opinion in his favour which had been given by Dr. Travers Twiss.

Mr. Murray was also to inclose a despatch which has been recently received from Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon, containing a Decree of the Portuguese Government dissolving the "União Mercantile Company," and Mr. Murray was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship at our early convenience with our opinion whether the view taken of the case by Dr. Twiss alters the advice which we had previously given to Her Majesty's Government in the matter of these claims.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have thought it expedient to make a separate Report on the points raised by these further papers, and by the opinion of Dr. Twiss, with whom we have had the benefit of a conference, without, however, altering the conclusions at which we had previously arrived.

It is necessary to observe, that the advice of Dr. Twiss to Mr. Lindsay, that the Portuguese Government "is responsible for the default of its Commissioners, whose duty it was to enforce the observance of the statutes" of the Company, proceeds upon a statement of facts, as to some of which Mr. Lindsay is directly at issue with the Portuguese Government, and the burden of proving which rests entirely upon him.

The most material of these allegations are, that before he agreed to supply steamships for the undertaking, or to accept payment in shares of the Company, and as the condition on which he consented to do so, Mr. Lindsay required "that the Government of Portugal should take upon itself the responsibility of seeing that the statutes were duly enforced, and in all cases adhered to," and that the Commissioners appointed by the Government to exercise certain powers of supervision over the affairs of the Company were so appointed for his security, and in consequence of this requirement.

1864

A very different, and we think a more natural and probable, account of the causes and objects of the appointment of these Commissioners is given by the Portuguese Assistant Attorney-General. According to that statement the Commissioners were nominated and authorized to act entirely in the interest and for the sole security of the Portuguese Government, with whom the Company were to become contractors for an important branch of the public service, and from whom they were about to receive a considerable subsidy. We think that if these Commissioners had really been appointed by the Government at the instance of Mr. Lindsay, and to protect his interests, some written evidence of an understanding to that effect between him and the Portuguese Government ought to have been forthcoming. There is, however, no such evidence; not only is there no formal document, but not even a trace of any such requirement on Mr. Lindsay's part, or of any such engagement on the part of the Portuguese Government, can be found in any of the letters which passed at the time between him and Senhor Bento. No such engagement or obligation on the part of the Portuguese Government towards Mr. Lindsay could possibly result from the mere fact that the statutes settled and agreed upon in the course of the treaty between himself and the other promoters of the Company and the Government gave to two Commissioners nominated by the Government powers of supervision over the affairs of the Company, and it is immaterial for this purpose whether those powers were or were not afterwards vigilantly exercised.

Another ground of claim by Mr. Lindsay against the Portuguese Government seems also to have received the sanction of Dr. Twiss' opinion, namely, that in his proceedings against the Company before the Portuguese Courts of Law, Mr. Lindsay experienced "a clear denial of justice." The cases are, we think, extremely rare in which a miscarriage in the ordinary administration of justice by the Courts of a civilized European country, in a private law-suit, over which those Courts had proper jurisdiction, can properly become the subject of international complaint. Admitting, however, that such cases may sometimes arise, we are unable to concur in Dr. Twiss' conclusion that the present is one of them.

The facts appear to be that Mr. Lindsay brought an action against the Company, under the fifth Article of a private agreement between him and them, dated the 28th of December, 1859, claiming the sum of 14,000*l.* (the whole principal amount secured by certain debentures of the Company then held by him), as having become immediately recoverable, in consequence of the non-payment by the Company of certain bills, and of other alleged breaches of that agreement. The cause was tried by a jury: that jury returned a special verdict, finding for Mr. Lindsay on the factum of the contract, on the non-payment of the bills, and upon another alleged breach of the Company's covenants; but finding against him on the question whether he had sustained any loss or damage by the acts complained of.

The Court, upon the consideration of this verdict, and of the documentary and other evidence in the cause, gave judgment against the plaintiff, which judgment was afterwards confirmed, upon appeal, by two successive Courts of Appellate jurisdiction.

There is nothing to show that, in the conduct of these proceedings, there was any substantial departure from the proper course of Portuguese law; by which both the forms of procedure, and the construction and effect of the contracts and acts of the parties fell exclusively to be regulated. There seems, as far as we can judge, to have been only two real questions between the parties; the one whether, upon the true and legal construction of the fifth Article of the contract, the effect of any breach of contract by the Company was to make the whole sum of 14,000*l.* secured by the debentures presently payable to Mr. Lindsay, or only to entitle him then to recover, by action, any arrears of interest and instalments of principal which, according to the tenor of those debentures, might have already become due and payable at the time of the action brought: the other, whether the Company were or were not entitled to the benefit of a set-off, which they claimed against Mr. Lindsay.

We do not find that this question of set-off was distinctly raised by the pleadings in the way in which it might have been necessary to raise it in an action at law in this country; but it appears, by Mr. Herries' Report, that the Chairman and one of the Directors of the Company (the only witnesses examined at the trial) gave evidence of some counter-claim of the Company on Mr. Lindsay; to which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the jury may have been entitled to give effect.

The other question turned entirely upon the construction of the following words in the contract:—"In case of non-payment, &c., you may at once sue the Company for the amount of the whole of your credit, and make use of every right such debentures grant to you."

The Portuguese Courts (see the extract from proceedings, &c., laid by Mr. Lindsay before Dr. Twiss, pages 14–16) decided that Mr. Lindsay was, after the 28th December, 1859, a creditor of the Company on the debentures only; and that as the only right which the debentures, upon the face of them, gave, was to payment of the principal by annual instalments of 12 per cent., with interest in the meantime, the "whole amount of the credit," and "the right granted by the debentures," which Mr. Lindsay was entitled to "sue for," and "to make use of," on any default by the Company, was limited to any arrears of interest, and any overdue instalments of principal, which might be then payable, according to the tenor of the debentures; and which (as we presume) if held to be recoverable under the form of action adopted, were also held to be covered by the evidence of set-off given at the trial.

This construction of the contract may have been a doubtful and narrow one, and may have been different from what the parties really intended; but the records of Courts of justice, in all countries, furnish many examples of construction of written instruments, equally narrow and doubtful; and we cannot possibly say that this can be regarded, upon sound principles of international law, as a denial of justice, for which the Portuguese Government ought to be held responsible.

The Company has now had its privileges withdrawn by the Portuguese Government, on a ground which seems to be sufficient to justify that act, namely, its failure, after a duration of several years, to raise the amount of capital which ought to have been subscribed, and to fulfil its engagements with the Government.

We can only repeat our suggestion that Mr. Lindsay has, in this state of circumstances, a fair claim upon the liberality of the Portuguese Government for their favourable consideration of any new arrangements which he may be desirous of proposing, and by which his position can be improved; and any such proposal might properly be supported by the good offices of Her Majesty's Representative at Lisbon, though not by any official interference, founded upon the supposition of his having rights which we think he does not possess.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 117.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 4th June last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note dated the 14th September ultimo, from the Portuguese Minister at this Court, communicating the views of the Government of Brazil regarding the proposals of Her Majesty's Government as to the basis on which the difference between Brazil and Great Britain could be settled.

Mr. Hammond also inclosed the draft of the reply which your Lordship proposes to address to Count Lavradio; and was pleased to request that we would take this subject into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we concur in the terms of the proposed reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the terms of the reply which your Lordship proposes to send to the Portuguese Minister are altogether proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 118.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received December 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 28th and 29th of July last regarding Mr. Lindsay's claims against the Government of Portugal, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter dated the 23rd ultimo from that gentleman, stating that, from information he had received from Lisbon, he feared that the British shareholders in the "Union Mercantile Company" would be deprived of the interest on their stock and of the value of their debentures, unless Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon be instructed to demand officially the payment of the money due on account of these securities.

Mr. Layard was therefore to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether or not Her Majesty's Government would be justified in directing Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon to comply with Mr. Lindsay's request, and as to the course which they should pursue in the matter. And to add that the papers respecting Mr. Lindsay's claim would shortly be laid before Parliament; and that they were returned to us with his letter, in order that we might refer to them if necessary.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think that Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon should at present be instructed to demand officially the payment of the interest on the stock, or the debentures, with the interest due upon them, on behalf of the shareholders in the "Union Mercantile Company;" but we think that Her Majesty's Government might properly instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon to use his good offices in assisting these persons to obtain the moneys in question, and to report to Her Majesty's Government his opinion as whether the apprehensions entertained by Mr. Lindsay are well founded or not.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

Prussia.

No. 119.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Doctors' Commons, March 18, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me translation of a note dated the 16th instant from the Prussian Ambassador at this Court, stating that the blockade of the harbour of Swinemünde, which was announced by the Danish Government for the 15th instant, did not take place on that day, and requesting that this circumstance may be made public; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this communication into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this note into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it is not incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to take any step on account of the Prussian Ambassador's denial of the Danish blockade of Swinemünde. In the first place it is an ex parte statement of one belligerent only, and of course could not be acted upon without giving the other belligerent an opportunity of making a counter-statement. In the second place, the question whether or not a de facto blockade of Swinemünde existed at the time of the notification is one which will properly arise before the Prize Court whenever any neutral vessel be brought before it, on the ground of having broken this blockade: the existence or non-existence of the blockade will then be a matter of fact to be determined by proper evidence before the proper Court, which it must be presumed will do justice according to the principles of international law.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 120.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 22.)

Doctors' Commons, March 22, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin (No. 288) forwarding a copy and translation of the regulations for the capture of enemies' and suspected vessels which have been issued by the Prussian Government in consequence of the hostilities between Denmark and the German Powers; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I am opinion that there is any objection to their being published in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think it would be proper to publish these instructions of the Prussian Government to the cruizers in the "London Gazette." At the same time I would remark that the 14th and 15th Articles, especially the former, relate to matters over which the neutral State has exclusive jurisdiction.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 121.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 31.)

Doctors' Commons, March 31, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th March instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 18th instant he was directed to transmit to me a note dated the 26th instant from the Prussian Ambassador at this Court, stating that the blockade of the Pomeranian harbours, particularly of Swinemünde, has not yet been carried out; and also to inclose a despatch dated the 23rd instant from Her Majesty's Consul at Stettin which confirms Count de Bernstorff's statement with respect to Swinemünde, and a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin (No. 309); and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming that at the time when Count Bernstorff and Consul Blackwell wrote to your Lordship, there was no effective blockade of Swinemünde, it does not seem to me proper that any announcement to that effect should be sent to the "Gazette." The blockade may be by this time effectively instituted, and, on the other hand, if a neutral vessel be captured for breach of blockade, and it be proved in the Prize Court that there was no effective blockade, the vessel must be released; for it must be remembered that neither the notification itself nor its insertion in any Gazette can render legal a de facto illegal blockade. Nevertheless, the Danish Government ought not to have formally notified to Her Majesty's Government that there was a blockade of Swinemünde before it had actually taken place, or was in the act of taking place; and I think it would be proper that a communication to this effect should be made to the Danish Minister in London, or to the Danish Government, and intimation given that the inaccuracy of the information (if it should prove to be so) with respect to this blockade must induce Her Majesty's Government to make special inquiries before the notification of any other blockade by the Danish forces is allowed to be inserted in the "Gazette;" and at the same time it would be right to inquire what is, according to the Danish account, the actual state of the blockade at Swinemünde, and of the other ports mentioned in Sir A. Buchanan's despatch. I think that Sir A. Buchanan ought to forward the letters in question to the Consuls, if they are sent to him.

1864

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 122.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin,* relating to the non-recognition by Prussia of the blockade of Swinemünde and other ports on the coast of Pomerania by Denmark, which was notified in the "London Gazette" of the 15th ultimo; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th instant, transmitting to us by your Lordship's direction, for our further information, a note from the Danish Minister at this Court, stating that he has been informed by telegraph from Copenhagen that the blockade of Swinemünde is effective.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador on the same subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the notification of blockades in the "Gazette," the usual course is to make such notification, in the absence of any special circumstances, when Her Majesty's Government is apprized by the proper authority of the blockading Power that the blockade is instituted.

Such a notification does not prevent the fact of the due institution of the blockade being afterwards challenged by the neutral in the Prize Court, and being determined upon the principles of law applicable to that subject.

In the present case the announcement of the blockade of Swinemünde was duly made to Her Majesty's Government, and properly published in the "Gazette."

The blockade was announced as existing on the 15th March, and it is clear that the Danish Government gave incorrect information as to its existence at that date. It appears to be equally clear, from Mr. Consul Blackwell's statement, that on the 27th of March, at the latest, the blockade of Swinemünde was de facto as well as de jure established, and that it is at this moment in full force.

It does not appear that any neutral vessel has been captured on account of egress or ingress during this interval.

Her Majesty's Government have already represented to the Danish Government that the erroneous information ought not to have been given. M. Bille has replied, that the blockade is now effective, and the testimony of Her Majesty's Consul at Stettin confirms this statement.

It is not incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in this matter. But it might be desirable that it should be represented to M. Bille that future difficulties might be avoided if the Danish Government were to send to Her Majesty's Government a formal statement that the blockade, erroneously announced as instituted on the 15th, was not effectively instituted before the 27th, but that since that time it has been and now is in full force.

This statement might be inserted in the "Gazette,"—of course without comment.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Count Bernstorff, March 16; Queen's Advocate, March 18; Count Bernstorff, March 18 and 26; Sir A. Buchanan, No. 309; Consul Blackwell, No. 7; Queen's Advocate, March 31; Sir A. Buchanan, No. 327; Messrs. Currie, March 31; Consul Blackwell, No. 10; Sir A. Buchanan, No. 335; to M. Bille, April 1, 1864.

No. 123.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell —(Received May 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 30, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter and its inclosure from Messrs. Delcomyn, requesting the interference of Her Majesty's Government with the Prussian Government to claim compensation on account of the alleged destruction by Prussian troops, at a place called Dangaard, of property belonging to those gentlemen, and to endeavour to prevent the destruction in future of the property of British subjects by Prussian troops; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the mode in which your Lordship should deal with Messrs. Delcomyn's claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we advise your Lordship to cause a reply to be sent to Messrs. Delcomyn, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere to protect, except in very special circumstances, British property destroyed in the country of an enemy by a belligerent. That such property must, as a general rule, share the fate of the property of the native subject, and seek the same redress as that which is accorded to its own subjects from the Government of the State which is invaded.

That Her Majesty's Government do not at present see any valid ground for constituting the grain destroyed by the Prussian troops at Dangaard an exception to the operation of this rule.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 124.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

Doctors' Commons, July 25, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 20th instant from Mr. Lamond, forwarding a memorandum of the circumstances under which the Norwegian steamer "Viken" was fired at by Prussian troops; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this communication into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether, in my opinion, this is a matter in which Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere, with reference to the British subjects on board the "Viken."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the "Viken" belonged to the Norwegian Royal Navy and carried the Norwegian flag, the outrage concerns primarily that Government, which ought, and doubtless will, require and obtain the necessary explanation or apology from the Prussian Government.

I venture to suggest, however, that it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Representative at the Court of Sweden should be instructed to apprize the Government of the King of the confidence which Her Majesty's Government feel that the insult to the Norwegian flag will be properly vindicated, and that therefore Her Majesty's Government abstains for the present from addressing the Prussian Government on behalf of Her Majesty's subjects who happened to be on board the "Viken."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 125.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 25, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Berlin (No. 21), inclosing copy and translation of the Prussian Prize Court Regulations, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with any observations which we may have to make upon these Regulations.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That there are several points of difference between these Regulations and those which prevail in the Prize Courts of this country and of the United States.

1. (§ 12.) The Prussian, like the Danish, Prize Regulations propose to allow the presence of a convoy to exempt the vessel convoyed from search, contrary to the English doctrine on this important subject. This, however, is a provision which will, of course, operate in favour of neutral Powers.

2. (§ 14.) The Prize Regulations permitting or ordering (in case of need) a prize to be taken into the port of an ally, means, we presume, an ally in this particular war. If so, this provision is not objectionable.

3. (§ 20.) The interpretation placed by Prussia, in these rules, upon the Declaration of Paris (so far as relates to the subject of blockade) agrees with that which has been adopted by Her Majesty's Government in their communications with the Agents of the Confederate States during the present war in America: that is to say, a force "sufficient really to prevent ('interdire') access," in the terms of that Declaration, is understood to be "one or several vessels of war," so blocking up a harbour "that no merchantman can touch at that port, nor clear it, without evidently running risk of capture." This, we need not add, was already, before the Treaty of Paris, the recognized test of a lawful blockade.

4. (§§ 22, 25.) It would seem that the Prussian Prize Courts will not treat the clearing or sailing of a vessel for a blockaded port as an attempt to break the blockade, unless the vessel actually "tries to force its way through the blockade." This is different from the English and American law and practice, but it is, of course, a difference which will operate favourably to neutral commerce.

5. (§§ 9, 10, 14, 17.) There are very important differences between the Prussian "Rules for acting in Prize affairs," and the English and American forms of procedure.

The principal points are that the Prussian examination in preparatorio (which is to be conducted ex parte by a Court of ordinary jurisdiction, at the instance of the captor, before the commencement of proceedings in the Prize Court, and of course before any claimant has had the opportunity to come in) is not to be restricted (as in England) to the ship's documents, and the evidence of the master and some of the crew or passengers of the captured vessel, but may be extended to the depositions of the men who took part in the search and seizure, and also (in case of any contradiction) of the commander of the capturing vessel. When the case is before the Prize Court, after a claim has been put in, further proofs may be offered, both by the Attorney-General and the claimants, if (and, as we collect, not unless) the Prize Court deems it necessary. This, we think, is a mode of procedure less advantageous to vessels captured without just cause than that secured to them by the system in use in this country and the United States, and which, therefore, will require to be narrowly watched in practice by neutral Governments.

6. (§ 19.) The absence of publicity (§ 19) from the prize proceedings, under these Prussian Regulations, will remove a very wholesome and important check against abuse, and will so increase the necessity for vigilance on the part of the neutral Powers against unjust condemnatious.

7. (§ 32.) The power to award costs or damages being denied to the Prize Court, it follows that whenever these are justly due a question will arise to be discussed between Government and Government.

8. Upon the form and mode of procedure generally, we would observe that it appears to be of a more complicated and cumbrous character than that of the English and American and (we believe) the French Prize Courts; nor does it clearly appear what weight is intended to be given to the testimony of the captured crew, to which in our prize proceedings much value has been immemorially ascribed.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 126.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to the debate in the House of Commons on the Bill for giving effect to the Convention concluded with Prussia on the 5th of March last for the mutual surrender of criminals, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that, in deference to the feeling expressed in the House, it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to propose to the Prussian Government some modification of that part of the Convention which relates to the surrender of persons convicted of any of the offences specified therein, and that your Lordship would be glad if we would take this subject into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the manner in which this object may be best accomplished, whether by requiring in a case of conviction the same amount of proof as in a case of accusation, or by any other conditions which may occur to us as suitable to prevent abuse, or whether by wholly omitting all that relates to the surrender of persons convicted—a point which, after all, is perhaps of little practical importance, and that it has occurred to your Lordship that it would be also advisable to omit that provision of the Convention which allows the surrender to be made on the production of duly authenticated depositions or statements on oath, and to insist in all cases upon depositions of witnesses on oath, coram judice, because witnesses can be cross-examined while affidavits cannot; that on this point also your Lordship requests that we will furnish your Lordship with our opinion; and Mr. Murray's letter concluded by saying that, although in the Treaties of Extradition with France and the United States there is no stipulation that sworn depositions may be received, yet the Acts of Parliament for carrying these Treaties into effect* contain a provision to that effect.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we recommend the omission of all the provisions relating to the surrender of persons convicted.

The word "accused" would, for all practical purposes, be sufficient; and the difficulties incident to the recognition in this country of the administration of the Prussian Criminal Law would be avoided.

Having regard to the facility of communication between this country and Prussia, we have the honour to express our agreement with your Lordship's suggestion that the witnesses should make their depositions orally upon oath before the magistrate in this country, and that the surrender should not be made upon depositions or affidavits made in Prussia.

